Mr. William Wheatley, one of the most widely-known theatrical managers in the United States, died yesterday morning, at his residence, No. 120 East Twenty-third street, in this City. Mr. Wheatley's connection with the drama was established more than half a century ago, yet, at the time of his death, he was not a very old man. He was born in this City on Dec. 5, 1816. His mother, Mrs. Sarah Wheatley, was an excellent actress, and her love for her profession induced her to dedicate her son to its pursuit. At the early age of four years the child was led upon the stage, and, in several "baby parts," his precocity awoke the astonishment of New-York audiences. He differed from most infant prodigies in that his talents for dramatic action and utterance grew with his years. In 1826, when he was ten years old, the English tragedian Macready came to this city, and meeting him, became interested in his career. Macready taught him the rôle of Albert in the tragedy of "William Tell," and brought the piece out at the old Park Theatre. The performance of the child pleased the tragedian so much that he prevailed upon Mrs. Wheatley to allow her son to accompany him during his engagement. This occurrence determined the future of the lad. After Macready's departure from the United States, young Wheatley appeared in this City in a play called "Tom Thumb," which had been written expressly for him. Subsequently he performed from time to time at the various theatres of the Metropolis in parts to which his age and stature suited him. He thus acquired increased skill in his art, and when he reached his majority, he was looked upon as a good light comedian. In melodramatic rôles he was also excellent. At that time he was a member of the Park Theatre company, in which his associates were those actors of whom the garrulous, but interesting old theatre-goers of New-York hold to this day such fond memories. The young actor then aspired to become a tragedian, and he studied assiduously all the methods resorted to by heroic actors of the school of Forrest. But he never had the opportunity of assuming tragic rôles in New-York, and he is remembered here only for his fine portrayals of semi-romantic personages in the Shakespearean and in the modern drama. In 1842 Mr Wheatley left this City and went to the Arch Street Theatre, in Philadelphia, where, for a while he played Doricourt in "The Belle's Stratagem." Overcome by a spirit of adventure and a temporary dislike for the stage, he departed in 1847, for Nicaragua, and engaged in business with the California Transportation Company. He did not remain there long, however, and returned at once to the stage. Upon Macready's reappearance here in 1848, Mr. Wheatley supported him, playing particularly well, it is said, Ulric, to the English tragedian's Werner. Afterward he again visited Philadelphia, and became associated in the management of the Arch Street Theatre. There he made the better part of his reputation as an actor. He represented all his old comedy rôles, and next undertook to act in tragedy. Beginning with Romeo, he assumed a number of Shakespearean characters, and, among them, Othello and Hamlet. He could never, it is said, be induced to play Iago. He shrank from the personage and would not attempt to illustrate its simulation. Of his Hamlet, competent critics say that it had many praiseworthy features. About 1856 Mr. Wheatley took the management of the Continental Theatre, in Philadelphia. Two years later he assumed the conduct of the Chestnut Street Theatre, in the same city. In 1860 he came to New-York and engaged with Messrs. Jarrott and E. L. Davenport in the management of Niblo's Garden. After two years his partners retired, and he became sole lessee. In the season of 1862 the famous Ravels returned to New-York, after an absence of years, and their appearance at Niblo's brought a season of great prosperity to that theatre. Edwin Forrest and Lucille Western also played remarkably successful engagements at Niblo's under his direction, and at the end of the term Mr. Wheatley found that he had cleared $50,000. He then retired temporarily. In 1866 he rejoined Mr. Jarrett, and assisted in the production of "The Black Crook." He also remained in the theatre during the run of "The White Fawn," and finally withdrew from business in 1868. Mr. Wheatley, from that period, dwelt on Coney Island. He was thrice married, his surviving wife having only been united to him six or seven months ago. A son, by Mr. Wheatley's second wife, also survives him. The direct cause of death was, we believe, pneumonia and Bright's disease.

OSSIAN E. DODGE.

The death of Ossian E. Dodge is announced from London. Mr. Dodge was born in Cayuga, N. Y., in October, 1820. In early life he taught a music school in Massachusetts, and was for some time engaged in the show business with a man named Covert. On the first appearance of Jenny Lind in Boston he made himself somewhat notorious by paying $500 for a single-seat ticket. In 1851 he went to London as a delegate to the World's Peace Convention. In literary and journalistic circles he made many friends, his sketches on Palestine, Egypt, and Assyria, over the nom de plume of "Ivan Ort" having attracted much attention in Europe. He was noted as an excellent writer of comic songs.

OBITUARY NOTES.

Mr. Isaac Ray, better known by the stage name of "Sam Johnson," died on Wednesday last at River View, Ky., aged seventy-two years. He was one of the fathers of negro minstrelsy, having introduced Jim Crow Rice and other famous minstrels to the public. He was a manager of variety theatres in New-York and other cities, and he traveled extensively with a number of minstrel troupes. He was a warm-hearted man, a true friend, a kind neighbor, and an energetic business man.

Mr. Edward S. Pinney, of the firm of Pinney & Johnson, No. 175 Fulton street, died at his residence, Montclair, N. J., on Wednesday, in the fifty-sixth year of his age. Mr. Pinney was born in Otsego County, N. Y., and coming to this city twenty-five years ago, he entered the large grocery establishment of Southworth, Slosson & Co. as salesman. Eighteen years ago he entered into partnership with Mr. S. P. Johnson, in the produce commission business, and remained in that establishment till his death. He had been a member of the Butter and Cheese Exchange since its foundation, and was universally respected by all of his associates. The funeral will take place at 3 o'clock to-day, from the First Congregational Church of Montclair.

THE JEROME PARK RACES.

With fine weather the sport to-day at Jerome Park should be of a very brilliant character, as there are five events to be decided, and one of them a race of heats. In each of the races the entries are numerous. The pool-rooms were all crowded last night, but the betting was confined to three races, no pools being sold on the Hack race or Steeple chase up to 10 o'clock. On the other races the average of the pools was as follows:

SELLING RACE MILE AND A QUARTER.

The first race will be called punctually at 1 o'clock. Special trains will leave the Grand Central Depot at 11:30 A. M., and 12 M., taking passengers to within five minutes' walk of the track for twenty cents. All the drags of the Coaching Club will turn out. A match game of Polo will follow the races at 3:30 P. M. for six English saddles and bridles; presented by Mr. James Gordon Bennett.

THE NOVA SCOTIA COAL MINES.

HALIFAX, Nov. 3.—There have been 450,000 tons of coal raised from the mines in this Province during the nine months ending Oct. 31, being a decrease, as compared with the corresponding period of last year, of 70,000 tons.

OCTOBER CROP RETURNS.

A DIGEST OF THE AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

A ONE-SIXTH REDUCTION IN THE YIELD OF WHEAT—THE RYE CROP LESS THAN IN 1875—A FALLING OFF IN THE OAT CROP—EVERY SECTION OF THE UNION DEFICIENT—THE COTTON CROP—OTHER CROP REPORTS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 3.—The digest of crop returns for October, as prepared at the Department of Agriculture, indicates a reduction in the yield of wheat of nearly one-sixth, while the quality is somewhat superior. More accurate statistics may possibly be given after the results of threshing are more fully known. Every section of the Union indicates a reduced production, except the Middle States, in which there is an increase of about two per cent. The New-England States fell off four per cent., the South Atlantic States two per cent., the Gulf States twenty-seven per cent., the Southern Inland States eight per cent., States north of the Ohio River fourteen per cent., States west of the Mississippi River twenty-seven per cent., and the Pacific States nearly two per cent. These figures point to a yield of about 245,000,000 bushels. This, however, will be the subject of further examination and inquiry in the November returns. The October returns, as a general thing, indicate an advance in the wheat yield of those States in which the yield of 1875 had fallen below that of 1874, and vice versa; but in some States, especially in the North-west, there is a falling off from even the reduced yield of 1875.

The rye crop of 1876 is reported four per cent. less than that of 1875, but in quality it averages somewhat above its predecessor. The barley crop of the country yields about six per cent. less than last year. In all the States east of the Mississippi River the yield is deficient, except in Connecticut, Georgia, and Kentucky. A great falling off is reported in the Middle States, in the States north of the Ohio River, in the States between the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, and in Oregon; but in Kansas, Nebraska, and especially California—the largest barley-raising States in the Union—have realized a large increase of yield, which, to a great extent, counterbalances the short crops of the other States. The buckwheat crop is reported as a full average or above in Rhode Island, Virginia, Arkansas, Kentucky, Ohio, Wisconsin, and California; in the other States it is below the average, the minimum yield being in Delaware.

On the basis of the October returns the oat crop of 1876 shows a falling off of twenty-three per cent. Every section of the Union is deficient. New-England, seven per cent., the Middle States seven and one-half per cent., the South Atlantic States one per cent., the Gulf States five per cent., the Southern Inland States two per cent., States north of the Ohio River twenty-five per cent., States west of the Mississippi River forty-nine per cent., and the Pacific States four per cent. The States reporting a yield equal to that of last year are: Pennsylvania, 102; Delaware, 109; South Carolina, 126; Georgia, 115; Florida, 107; Alabama, 100; Louisiana, 104; West Virginia, 113; Kentucky 103; Ohio 102; California 100. The condition of the corn crop in the New-England States is a little above the average. The Middle States, except Delaware, report a depressed condition from drought in the growing season and from heavy rains in the harvest when the crop was not well ripened. In New-Jersey and eastern Pennsylvania heavy storms prevailing about the middle of September prostrated many fields. The South Atlantic States, especially in counties near the coast, suffered serious injury to this crop from the September storms, which prostrated fields left uncut, while the heavy rains that followed spoiled a large amount of both grain and fodder. Maryland and South Carolina are full average. Georgia largely above, but the deficiencies of Virginia and North Carolina cut down the general condition of this section to two per cent. below average. The crop in the Gulf States on the whole is about average, Texas reporting an especially fine condition. North of the Ohio River there is a deficiency. On the whole the low condition in Illinois and Michigan overbalances the extra promise in other States. Ohio reports a superior crop generally of good quality. In Michigan crops on low wet lands are reported very poor. Illinois is below average, though several counties report the finest crop for years. West of the Mississippi the small deficiency in Missouri is more than repaired by the fine condition reported in all the other States. In Iowa crops were poor in low, wet lands, and the condition in several counties reduced greatly by grasshoppers. In Missouri, local damage by storms is reported, but low prices indicate an abundant yield in the larger portion of the State. Kansas is full average, in spite of the grasshoppers and chinches, and Nebraska is considerably above.

The published report, in summing up the data upon cotton, says that the general harvest is more advanced than usual. The season is generally favorable for picking. The later pickings will be comparatively light. The causes of injury are not unusually excessive, drought being somewhat prominent in the Gulf States, the September storms on the Atlantic coast, the caterpillar in Alabama especially, and the bollworm in Arkansas. The season promises to be much shorter than last year. There is less vigor and thrift for future developments of fruitage in case of a prolonged season like the extraordinary one of 1875. Though the indications of condition reports of this department up to October pointed to four and two-thirds millions of bales last season, there was proved to be a deficiency of lint to seed, in the ginning and other unfavorable indications, which would have limited the crop inevitably to four and one-third millions, but for a full month's delay of killing frost in the Gulf States, fields being green in a large belt up to Dec. 8. The future of the present season cannot make the crop a deficient one, but will determine how near the large one of 1875 the result shall come.

Tobacco—Cheshire and Sullivan, in New-Hampshire; Berkshire and Hampshire, in Massachusetts, and Hartford and Litchfield, in Connecticut, all being principal tobacco counties, return each a condition of 100. In New-York the largest tobacco county, Onondaga, returns seventy. Other counties range from seventy-five to one hundred. In Pennsylvania, Lancaster County reports that a larger crop than ever before has all been housed in good condition. In York County, the next in importance, the condition is one hundred and ten; Cumberland ninety, (producing but little) is the only county under one hundred. In Maryland, the condition averages about 62. In Virginia the average condition, returned Sept. 1, was 65. During the month the progress in some localities was counterbalanced by damages from storms and depredations by worms in others, so that the general condition Oct. 1 averaged about the same. As a rule the lighter counties are higher in condition than the heavier, many of them reaching one hundred. In North Carolina the average is seventy-three. As in Virginia, a higher condition is generally returned in counties producing small quantities. Tennessee averages ninety-one, an advance of eleven per cent. in September. In West Virginia a high condition is reported, averaging 106. Kentucky reports an advance in condition during September from seventy-seven to eighty-three. General exemption from insect depredations and the very favorable condition of the weather, combined to effect this result. In Ohio the average condition advanced in September from ninety-seven to 104.

Beans—The only States in which the condition does not fall below 100 are: New Jersey, Delaware, and Oregon, 100; California, 103; Vermont, 104; and South Carolina, 107.

AUCTION SALE OF PAINTINGS.

Messrs. Leavitt & Co. sold last night at their Art Auction Rooms, No. 817 Broadway, a very fair collection of oil-paintings. Whether the "hard times" or the great Republican demonstration had effect on the attendance of gentlemen and ladies of artistic taste it would be impossible to say, but the attendance was certainly small and the bidding anything but spirited. The sale opened with a meretricious painting by Kate, "The Faithful Protector," which went for $14. A high-colored and peculiarly French figure piece, "Wearied," by C. Cammorque, was sold for $35. A cleverly-drawn but repulsive "monkey piece"—"La Pomme de Discorde"—by Dumon, of Paris, brought $21. A very charming breezy sea-coast scene, "Off Long Branch," by W. Whittredge, after keen competition was knocked down for $145. A Winter's scene of the "pot-boiler" school, by Schfelter of Dusseldorf, brought $170, while two very fair specimens of Jay Edward's landscape paintings (scenes on the Rhine) were knocked down at $25 each. Two pretty small companion pictures, showing fine minute artistic workmanship, by Michaud, brought $40 each. "Grandmamma," a figure piece, well drawn, but hard and severe in coloring, brought as much as $42 50, not such a price as the artist, E. Meisel, of Munich, is in the habit of painting a picture for. A very artistically and charmingly-colored picture, by H. Hut, of Munich, entitled "Spare Moments," was sold for $100; a "Winter on the Thames," by G. A. Williams, of London, brought $30, which was not too much for the very elegant gold frame; one of the most charming paintings of the collection, "The Pet Dog," by V. Yortez, was very keenly bid for and brought $375; a remarkably fine specimen of Youlssiant, "The Pastor's Visit," was sold for the modest sum of $230, and "The Iconoclast," by James H. Beard, of New-York, only brought $105. Perhaps the most valuable picture in the whole collection—"Cattle," a splendid specimen from Van Marcke's brush—brought only $400; and a magnificent specimen of Hoff, "The Epicure's Breakfast," brought $359. A very fair specimen from James M. Hart's easle, "A Summer Afternoon," was knocked down for $235. On the whole, the competition was very spiritless, and many really good pictures went for prices not much above the trade price of the frames.

ILLEGAL REGISTRATION IN SAN FRANCISCO.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 3.—The United States Marshal yesterday and to-day made a number of arrests of parties charged with illegal registration, mostly on the ground of non-citizenship, non-residence, and conviction of crime. Warrants are out for many others. A question of law involved in these cases will be brought before the Judges of the United States District and Circuit Courts to-morrow.

SCHOOL SUITS.—Large stock at greatly reduced prices. BROKAW BROTHERS, Fourth avenue, opposite Cooper Institute.—Exchange.

"TRAIN UP A CHILD IN THE WAY HE SHOULD GO," &c., says the good book. But how can you train him up thus without keeping him clean? Use B. T. BABBIT'S BABY SOAP, then; and when he is old he will not depart from its use. The soap is made of the best materials, and absolutely the king of toilet soap. Its scent is delicious, but not artificial, for no foreign odor is needed to disguise impurity and poison.—Advertisement.

Stumbling Over Facts.

Your hat is getting mildewy, its shape is gone, the stiffening is all out. JOHN A. DOUGAN, No. 102 Nassau st., uses nothing but the best wine stiffening in his hats; they will retain their shape and color longer than any hats made in the City. All the latest Fall and Winter styles ready, and much below fabulous Broadway prices.—Advertisement.

BRYANT'S POETICAL WORKS.

A New Illustrated Edition.

1 vol., small 4to. With 100 Illustrations by Birket Foster, Harry Fenn, Fredericks, and others. Price, in cloth, gilt edges, $4; morocco, extra, $8.

Bryant is the most correct, the most truthful, and the most American of all our poets. He has held the highest rank in these respects for more than fifty years. Many of his poems have passed entire into the memories of the people, rivaling in this respect the popularity of Gray's Elegy with the people of England. New schools of poetry have been born and died since Bryant's "Lines to a Waterfowl," and "Thanatopsis," but no novelties have ever approached the sterling qualities which have endeared these and his other poems to the hearts of his countrymen. This edition is worthy of him. The elegance, high finish, and complete appropriateness of the artistic embellishments here presented, cannot fail to be appreciated by his numerous admirers.

THE THEORY OF SOUND IN ITS RELATION TO MUSIC.

By Prof. PIETRO BLASERNA, of the Royal University of Rome. With numerous Woodcuts. (Forming a new volume of the "International Scientific Series.") One vol., 12mo. Price, $1 50.

This work is an attempt to popularize the theory of music, and so to combine the theoretical with the practical study of this art, that instrumentalists may obtain some knowledge of those fundamental laws of sound on which music is based. An exceedingly interesting résumé is then given of the history of music from the earliest period to the present day.—London Lancet.

A VOCABULARY OF ENGLISH RHYMES.

Arranged on a New Plan. By Rev. SAMUEL W. BARNUM. One vol., thick 18mo. 767 pages. Leather cover. Price, $2 50.

Mr. Barnum has constructed a new book on what is undoubtedly the correct principle. It is so simple that the wonder is no one has ever attempted it before. "Words are arranged according to their rhyming adaptations and sounds." That is all. * * * He has made, in fact, a great labor-saving machine by which an indefinite number of rhymes can be turned out at a moment's notice.—The New-Englander.

SCRIBNER, WELFORD, & ARMSTRONG,

743 and 745 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

TO BE PUBLISHED EARLY IN NOVEMBER, A MOST SUMPTUOUS VOLUME,

ITALY!

FROM THE ALPS TO MOUNT ÆTNA.

Edited by T. ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE.

Magnificently illustrated, containing 400 illustrations of the most attractive character. 4to, morocco back, cloth gilt, with new and appropriate designs, and gilt edges. Price, $22 50; or, in full morocco, richly gilt, $35.

This noble volume, similar in character to "India," by Rousselet, and "Spain," illustrated by the facile pencil of Doré, portrays a country exceeding either in its universal and fascinating interest. The artist's work has been done with a taste in selection and a fidelity in execution, from the wealth of varied material the country presents, with results which will command the appreciation and admiration of all. The literary descriptions have been confided to the supervision of Mr. Trollope, whose long and intimate knowledge of Italy, and whose brilliancy as a writer, will confirm their accuracy and value. In general appearance, typography, binding, &c., few works have been issued of equal merit.

To the People of the United States:

Reduced June 30, 1875, to	2,099,439,344 99
A reduction during this period of eleven years since the war of	$656,992,246 44
The annual interest charge for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, was	133,067,741 69
For the past year, ending June 30, 1876	100,243,271 23
A reduction in the annual interest charge since 1866 of	$32,824,479 46
The annual expenditures of the Government in 1876, as compared with 1866, show a reduction of	262,349,619 56
And in federal taxation more than	300,000,000 00

Other great results of this financial policy have been that, despite an indebtedness of more than two thousand millions, and while diminishing taxation, the credit of the country has been raised to the unprecedented point that its four and a half per centum bonds, issued in redemption of the six per centums, have been selling rapidly, at home and abroad, above par in gold; and the Government has been enabled every year since 1866, not only to keep within its income, but to apply an average annual sum of $56,742,284 20 toward the payment of its indebtedness.

A careful consideration of these results of judicious management of the National Treasury during Republican administration of the Government, induces the undersigned to express their confident belief that a continuation of the same general policy which has so well sustained our commercial honor, and aided so powerfully in the preservation of the Union itself, would be best promoted by the election of General Rutherford B. Hayes and William A. Wheeler to the offices of President and Vice-President of the United States.

A CARD FROM MR. SMITH ELY, JR.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I notice in your columns to-day that you quote from the minutes of the Board of Supervisors of Dec. 27, 1869, some bills of Keyser, Miller, Ingersoll, Garvey, and others, aggregating $630,000, to which my name is affixed as having voted in the affirmative. I never voted for any such bill or bills, and thinking possibly that those who are strangers to me may desire something more than a simple denial, I affix hereto my affidavit. During the last four years of my service in that board I sat with Mr. Tweed without exchanging a word with him, and I have never spoken to him since. The minutes of the board were kept by the clerk on detached pieces of paper, which sometimes were not copied into a book until weeks or months after the meeting. My name was appended to the bills you quote either carelessly or by malicious design.

SMITH ELY, JR.

City and County of New-York, ss.—Smith Ely, Jr., of the City of New-York, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he did not vote for the bill or bills of Keyser, Garvey, Ingersoll, and others, as published in The New-York Times newspaper of this date, and deponent further says that he never during the said year, or during the year that preceded or followed it, voted for any bill of said contractors, but that he invariably voted against all such bills. And he further says that any record or minutes to the contrary are utterly and absolutely false, and without any foundation in truth.

THE CONQUESTS OF THE SARACENS.

THE HISTORY AND CONQUESTS OF THE SARACENS. By EDWARD A. FREEMAN, D. C. L. MACMILLAN & CO.

Mr. Freeman's reproduction of his book on the Saracens meets a general demand on the part of the reading public for information on the history of religion and politics in the East. The reader will find in the work a sketch of the various Mohammedan dynasties and peoples, with what is more necessary to an understanding of the present difficulties, an account of the Mohammedan religion. Mr. Freeman points to the recent events as evidence of the justness of the opinions expressed by him at the close of the Crimean war concerning the probable results of the reforms of Abdul Medjid. He considered that misgovernment and oppression were the necessary accompaniments of Mussulman rule. He said then of the possibilities before the new Sultan: "He may as a Mohammedan ruler be glorious after the fashion of his ancestors. He may, if he will, be glorious after the far nobler fashion of Akbar." The great Mogul of India, Akbar, really threw away his religion. This, in Mr. Freeman's opinion, was the only course open to the reforming Sultan. This opinion he now reaffirms. Mr. Freeman is a very strong Bulgarian, and he has written a very strong Bulgarian preface. He confines himself, however, to the impossibility of effecting real reform in Mohammedan rule. The other question, whether the integrity of Turkey is sufficiently necessary to England as a bulwark against Russia to cause England to shut her eyes to the "excesses" of the Turks, he does not touch upon. Under the very best Mohammedan Government, it is impossible, says Mr. Freeman, that men of other religions than the Mohammedan should have real political equality with Mohammedans. It is impossible because it is contrary to the first principles of the Mohammedan religion. Even under the best Mohammedan Government, the non-Mohammedan must accept political inferiority and under a bad Mohammedan Government, the superiority of the dominant religion is sure to take the form of actual personal oppression. How bad the present Ottoman Government is the world well knows. It is the rule of a gang of robbers without a Captain. The great Sultans of the past—Bajazet the Thunderbolt, and Solyman the Magnificent—have been succeeded by a race of creatures for whom nobody cares whether they are drunk or sober, dead or alive. Under these the general pillage and anarchy continue. Mr. Freeman comments with scorn upon the recent remark of Lord Derby to a deputation, that the fact that Christians, Mussulmans, and Hindoos lived together under the English Government of India was proof that Christians and Mussulmans could live together on terms of equality under the Turkish rule in Roumania. When the proposition is that Mohammedans and non-Mohammedans cannot live together under a Mohammedan Government, it is no answer to say that they can live together under a government which is not Mohammedan. In answer to Lord Derby's remark that in past times the Jews and the heretics have been worse treated in Western Europe than Christians are now treated in South-eastern Europe. Mr. Freeman says that, while in Europe the condition of the Jews has been getting better and better, that of the Christians under the Turkish rule has been getting worse and worse. That is to say, a Christian Government, however bad, is capable of reform. The Government of the Turk is incapable of reform; because in truth it is no government but simply an organized brigandage.

The chapters of this work treat of the state of the world at the time of the coming of Mohammed, of Mohammed and his creed, of the undivided caliphate of the great successors of Mohammed, of the subsequent divisions among the Saracens in the East, of the Moors in Spain, and of the later Mohammedan dynasties of Russia and India. The chapter on the state of the world at the time of the coming of Mohammed contains an interesting account of the manners and religion of Arabia, which was the country of Mohammed. Among the Arabs of the days of Mohammed there appeared all the vices and virtues of the half savage state, its revenge and rapacity, its hospitality and bounty. There was much gambling, drunkenness, and licentiousness; the practice of female infanticide was prevalent among the pagan tribes. Mecca, without being the political capital was the commercial and religious centre of the whole penninsula. The original religion of Arabia appears to have been a patriarchal monotheism. Down even to Mohammed's time the Arab worshipers of the heavenly bodies had not lost the knowledge of a single personal duty. But they paid reverence besides to the hosts of heaven, and to various national, local, and family idols. One feature of their worship has an amusing political significance. In offering their first fruits and similar oblations, the offering was divided into two parts, one for God and one for the idols. If any portion of the share of the idols fell into the space set apart for God, it was taken out and carefully replaced, but if any portion of God's share fell to the idols, it was permitted to remain. God, it was held, was less exacting than his subordinates. They reasoned in this from their experience of absolute despotism, the only kind of government they knew. The Supreme Ruler was always found gentler than his lieutenants.

The great temple of this religion was the Kaaba of Mecca, built according to Arabian tradition by the patriarch Abraham. Traces of the presence of Abraham and Ishmael, whom the Moslems prefer to Isaac, are still shown on the sacred spot There is the print of Abraham's foot, and there is the holy well of Zemzem, believed by the faithful to be the spring which rose to quench the thirst of Hagar and Ishmael in the wilderness. This temple had at one time very nearly fallen into the hands of the Christians. The King of Abyssinia attacked Mecca, and had only been prevented by a miracle from taking it. A flock of green birds appeared over his army, each of which let fall three stones—from its bill and its two feet—on the Abyssinian army, each stone being marked with the name of the soldier whom it slew.

The hereditary guardianship of the Temple of Kaaba was in the family of Mohammed. The son of Abdallah, he was of the noblest race in Mecca and in Arabia. Poor himself, he was raised to affluence and importance by marriage with Khadijah, a rich widow, whose business affairs he had previously conducted. In his fortieth year he began to announce himself as an Apostle of God, sent to uproot idolatry, and to recall men to the faith of the preceding prophets, Abraham, Moses, and Jesus. He made converts in his native city. His wife Khadijah and the members of his household and family were among the first to recognize his mission. He met with persecution in Mecca, but he went on his way unflinchingly. In his earlier career Mohammed asked only toleration. He was but a preacher sent to warn men that there was but one God. As yet there was no bloodshed or lust to be laid at the door of his conscience. There was nothing in his conduct which a morality even higher than that of the Koran could condemn. But later the character of the prophet changes. He has become a great warrior. The followers of the true religion are bidden to wage war with the unbelievers; angels fight at their side, ready to bear to heaven the souls of those that fall. He, who in his youth had had one wife only, absolves himself in age from the restraints of his own law. Yet Mohammed claimed only to be the prophet of God. He coveted no crown or palace; the master of Arabia, he lived in the humblest dwelling and on the plainest fare, accessible to the meanest of his disciples. Cruel he was, but he was merciful in comparison with his successors. When at last he made his triumphal entry into the City of Mecca, where he had so often preached and from which he had been driven forth, he did not come like other Eastern victors. Mohammed's followers, Timour at Ispahan, Nadir at Delhi, and the men who in recent times have desolated Chios and Cyprus, have signalized their victory by the massacre of innocent and guilty alike. Mohammed's wrongs were avenged by a few exceptions to a general amnesty, and most of them were forgiven ultimately. His main errand was to purify the temple of God, desecrated by idols. To the Arabs of the seventh century he was undoubtedly a great benefactor. The reply of the Saracen Envoy to the Persian King contains this summary of the good results of Mohammed's teaching in Arabia: "Whatever thou hast said respecting the former condition of the Arabs is true. Their food was green lizards; they buried their infant daughters alive; nay, some of them feasted on dead carcases and drank blood, while others slew their relations and thought themselves great and valiant, when, by such an act, they became possessed of more property; they were clothed with hair garments; knew not good from evil; and made no distinction between that which is lawful and that which is unlawful. Such was our state. But God, in his mercy, has sent us by a holy prophet, a sacred volume, which teaches us the true faith." Mohammed's mistake was in the endeavor to establish his system beyond the limits of Arabia. With the blood of the hereditary guardians of the Kaaba in his veins, it was natural that he should wish to expel the idols and to restore the true worship to the temple of Abraham and Ishmael. But why should Moors, Turks, Persians, and Indians be sent to worship at a shrine whose associations belonged entirely to another nation? The going on pilgrimages seems to be a natural impulse, but to a devout Mohammedan the object of pilgrimage should rather have been Medina than Mecca. And so, indeed, it is; the faithful, after performing the national worship at Mecca, still turn aside to pray at the tomb of Mohammed. But in graver points than this the creed of Islam was ill suited to be transplanted beyond its native soil. The Koran was not preached to barbarians alone; it was forced upon civilized countries as the only work both of jurisprudence and theology. It took the semi-barbarous institutions and superstitions of Arabia, and, casting them in permanent molds, compelled the world to accept them. Christianity placed on men the injunction of purity and justice, but was silent with regard to the particulars of conduct. Christianity presented no vicegerent of God on earth to whom was due temporal as well as spiritual allegiance. Christianity, therefore, could suit itself to various conditions of society, and was progressive. The Moslem creed laid down a very definite course of rules and observances, to which it taught that the world must conform; by vesting the temporal power in the hands of the successor of the Prophet, conformity in all countries governed by Moslems was secured. Mohammedanism was therefore necessarily stationary. "In one or two respects, indeed, says Mr. Freeman, "Mohammedanism has actually appeared as a retrograde system, even among heathen nations. One cannot doubt that the doctrine of fatalism had a wonderful effect in animating the spirits of the first Saracens; but its ultimate effect has been pernicious to the last degree. When the first heat of enthusiasm is over, the same doctrine leads to quite opposite results. It becomes a mere excuse for stupid and listless idleness; submission to the Divine will is held to render all human exertion superfluous. Nothing in the world is so energetic as a Mohammedan nation in its youth; nothing is so utterly feeble as a Mohammedan nation in its old age."

Mohammed either died without making a will or else it was concealed by his wife Ayesha. The first four Caliphs were the immediate friends and relatives of Mohammed—Abu-Bekr, Omar, Othman, and Ali. Under these only did Islam rule the world from its original seat. The Caliphate was afterward removed to Bagdad and Damascus, and the vast Moslem Empire was cut up among contending Caliphs, each claiming to be the true successor of the Prophet. The reigns of Abu-Bekr and Omar were the most glorious period of Saracen history. It was a time of harmony within and conquest without. Omar and Abu-Bekr were both fathers-in-law of the Prophet, and commanded a respect which was never accorded to his sons-in-law, Othman and Ali. The first rebellion occurred under Ali. Moawiyah, who ruled Syria, revolted against Ali, gave out that he was the avenger of Othman, and that Ali was his murderer. Ali's days were passed in war with Moawiyah, who had been the bitterest enemy of Mohammed and his most reluctant convert, and who now aspired to supplant his successor. Ali died. His eldest son, Hassan, unable to cope with Moawiyah, resigned his claims into his hands, Moawiyah having promised that should he himself die before Hassan, Hassan should be his successor. Moawiyah poisoned Hassan, and secured the succession to the odious Yezid, his son. It was in the reign of Yezid that there comes the story, told by Gibbon, of the martyrdom of Horsein, Ali's son, and which Mr. Freeman calls "the most pathetic story in the whole course of history."

"The grandson of the Prophet, beguiled by the promises of the fickle people of Cufa, comes from Arabia with his whole family to assert his hereditary claims. Deserted by his faithless partisans, surrounded by the armies of the usurper, cut off from the waters of the Euphrates, of which beasts and giaours were allowed freely to partake, he sees his friends slaughtered around him, his infant is pierced in his arms by an arrow, he sees his female relatives condemned to captivity, and he is himself threatened with instant death. For a long time no believer can be found willing actually to smite his Imam, the heir of his apostle; at last he is struck down, his body is trampled into the ground by the horses' hoofs, his head carried in triumph to his brutal conqueror. Obeidollah strikes the lifeless lips in mockery, while an aged Moslem by his side weeps as he murmurs, 'Alas, on those lips I have seen the lips of the Apostle of God.'"

A son of Horsein had remained in Medina, and through him the sacred line was continued in the descendants of the Prophet. They never enjoyed rule again. Abbas, a descendant of the uncle of Mohammed, became the antagonist of the Ommiyad dynasty of Moawiyah, and at length drove it from the throne of the Caliphate. The descendants of the Prophet lived usually in retirement, sometimes persecuted, sometimes poisoned, sometimes heading revolts, until the death or disappearance of the twelfth Imam. Shiism, or the sect of Ali, is the creed of Persia. According to the Persians, the twelfth Imam still wanders through the world till the time shall come when he is to assume universal empire. The Sonnite creed, which is that of modern Turkey, though acknowledging no special sanctity in Ali and his family, yet reveres them as good men, and assigns a garb of honor to the descendants of the Prophet. A single Prince escaped from the overthrow of the Ommiad dynasty in the East, and, after many romantic adventures, made his way to Spain, where he and his race ruled for hundreds of years.

Two of the most interesting portions of Saracenic history are barely touched upon in this book—the crusades and the career of the Ottoman Turks. But the account of the character of Mohammedan rule and of the natural course of the Oriental despotisms is plainly and strongly drawn. The mind cannot be burdened by the details of rising and falling dynasties. Mr. Freeman's work gives the reader a pretty clear notion of the essential features of Eastern kingdoms. A few strong Princes make an empire which a few weak ones dissipate. The same features of cruelty, courage, defeat, and misery are continually recurring. The work is completed by a chapter on the Mohammedan rule in India, the best of Mohammedan Governments, in which the author's aim is to show that even with the most favorable conditions, there can be no progress or liberty under a Mohammedan Government.

COMMON SCHOOL LITERATURE—English and American. With several hundred extracts for literary culture. By J. WILLIS WESTLAKE, A. M. Philadelphia: LOWE, POTTS & CO. 1876.

A little of everything, and nothing well, seems still to be the guiding principle, not only of some book-makers, but of some teachers. And then the little is soon obliterated and nothing is left. While this system prevails we need not wonder at being compelled to listen to the charge that has oftentimes been made, that while everybody has the benefit of the public schools, comparatively few are really educated.

Here, within about a hundred and eight very small pages, we have what purports to be a survey of the whole of English and American literature. The author or compiler starts with the error that English literature began with Chaucer. Because that section of English known vulgarly as Anglo-Saxon is no longer spoken by us, he will have nothing to do with anything earlier than the Fourteenth Century. And although this doctrine might be used more consistently to sweep out of recognition all the ancient classics, hardly excepting even the Greek, it is useful to Mr. Westlake, for it enables him to limit his labors and to avoid allusion to writings which—although among the most vigorous in the language—he probably does not understand.

If Mr. Westlake sees any real value in this volume his powers of perception are greater than ours. To read it would be not only tedious but useless. A pupil might with as much advantage, probably more, be set to read the same number of pages in Worcester's Dictionary. The only alternative, then, would be to commit it to memory, and, if it is to be of any use, to retain it there. Chaucer is disposed of in seven lines—then we have a couple of short extracts from his writing and the names of four of his contemporaries. The next 150 years are got rid of in about three-quarters of a page. Eight lines contain a life of Shakespeare; about two suffice for Burke; Milton has the honor of nine lines; Keats must be content with five, and George Eliot with six. Including extracts from their works, most of the authors mentioned by Mr. Westlake are disposed of in about half a page.

Nor does American literature come off much better. It is supposed to date from the year 1640, and Mr. Westlake divides the period since then into 1. The Colonial Age. 2. The Revolutionary Age. 3. The American Age. To the first of these he devotes less than two pages; to the second about six pages; and to the third, which in reality comprises all our literature, only about thirty-six pages. But he extends the second period from the year 1760 down to 1830, though upon what theory we are at a loss to understand. But we object to this work less on account of the errors it has than for the principle upon which it has been produced. Such books may be handy to teachers for display—they serve to make a show of teaching, but they are absolutely incompatible with thorough education, or with even that degree of general knowledge which alone should satisfy modern teachers. They are mischievous because they are deceptive. Any pupil who should walk about with Common School Literature under his arm for three months would doubtless be convinced and his friends with him that his knowledge of the subject would be ample, whereas it would be entirely a negative quantity. They are injurious, too, because they tend to waste the time of pupils in a vain effort to obtain what at the best must be but the veriest superficial and most unenduring kind of knowledge, when that time could be much better devoted to more solid pursuits. In a wide subject, such as that we have in the great range of English and American literature, one, too, which certainly should be recognized in every educational curriculum, text-books are essential. And text-books are by their very nature condensations. But if Mr. Westlake would know how such condensations ought to be done, let him take up Mrs. Masson's Three Centuries of English Poetry. For an example of the opposite kind his own book will suffice.

As a present or as a French reader for young children, nothing better could be desired than this beautiful and, at the same time, useful volume. It is admirably adapted both for amusement and instruction, and persons who wish to give their little ones an insight into the French language by pleasant and attractive means, cannot do better than give it their attention. It is printed, too, and embellished with illustrations in the highest style of the book-makers' art.

LITERARY NOTES.

—The Speaker's Commentary on the New Testament, including the Gospels and Acts, edited by Canon Cook, is announced in England, and will make two volumes.

—Studies in English Literature, by John Dennis, author of "English Sonnets, a Selection from 1547," is announced for this month by Edward Stanford, London. The studies include essays on Pope, Defoe, Prior, Steele, the Wartons, John Wesley, Southey, English Lyrical Poetry, English Sonnets, and English Rural Poetry.

—Mr. Graham McAdam's Alphabet in Finance is intended as a simple statement, for all classes of readers, of the permanent principles of finance and their application to present issues. The book is on the side of hard money, and shows what it will cost to resume and why we should be willing to pay the cost. It has an introduction from Mr. R. R. Bowker, of the Publishers' Weekly, and will be brought out at once by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

—Estes & Lauriat have in press for early publication Meeting the Sun, a journey all round the world, through Egypt, China, Japan, and California, including an account of the marriage ceremonies of the Emperor of China, by Mr. William Simpson, with fifty heliotype and wood illustrations from drawings by the author; Roman Legends, the fables and folk lore of Rome, collected by word of mouth from the people; Retzsch's Outline Illustrations to Goethe's Faust; also, the same to Schiller's Fight with the Dragon and Fridolin, companion volumes; and Half Hours with Insects, a new work on entomology by Prof. A. S. Packard.

—A new edition of The Thoughts of Marcus Aurelius is announced by Lee & Shepard. The same publishers promise another work which will command the attention of students in political philosophy. They desire to associate together, as upholders of free constitutional government, the names of Washington, Jefferson, and Sumner, and to do this they propose to issue at an early day a volume, bearing the title, Washington, Jefferson, and Sumner on Political Philosophy, embracing the Farewell Address of Washington, the First Inaugural of Jefferson, with the "True Grandeur of Nations" and "The War System of the Commonwealth of Nations," by Sumner.

— The first number of the American Library Journal, published by F. Leypoldt, No. 37 Park row, and edited by Melvil Dewey, No. 13 Tremont place, Boston, is just out, and very fully presents the interests of libraries and librarians throughout the country. Mr. Justin Winsor contributes "A Word to Starters of Libraries;" Mr. L. E. Jones has a paper on "The Government Library Report." There is an engraving of the Ridgway Library Building, numerous editorial notes, and a large amount of information indispensable for those who buy, read, and lend books. It is to be issued monthly at $5 a year, and is, we believe, the only bibliographical and bibliothecal journal of its kind in the United States.

—The second series of the Companions for the Devout Life contains lectures on the Theologia Germanica, by Canon Nohwell; Fénelon's Œuvres Spirituelles, by Rev. T. T. Carter; Andrewes' Devotions, by the Bishop of Ely; the Christian Year, by Canon Barry; "Paradise Lost," by Rev. E. H. Bickersteth; the Pilgrim's Progress, by the Dean of Chester, and the "Prayer Book," by the Dean of Chichester. These were delivered in St. James' Church, Piccadilly, London, early in the present year, under the direction of Rev. J. E. Kempe. The earlier series was republished in this City by Pott, Young & Co., and met with a large sale. The new series is already announced by Mr. Murray, and will be sure of a wide circulation in this country.

—The announcement some months ago that Hurd & Houghton had in preparation a translation of Dr. Emil Schürer's Manual of the History of the New Testament Period, excited unusual interest among scholars. The success of the first German edition led Dr. Schürer to carefully revise his work for a second edition, and from this the American translation, undertaken by Rev. Prof. P. H. Steenstra, of the Episcopal Divinity School at Cambridge, is to be made. Prof. Steenstra is in constant communication with Dr. Schürer, who supplies the advance sheets to the translator, and gives his special sanction and authority to this republication of his work, which will be published at the same time with the second edition in Germany. A History of Cambridge, by Mr. Lucius R. Paige, is also in preparation at the Riverside Press.

— Mr. Murray, of London, makes the important announcement of a Dictionary of Christian Biography, Literature, Sects, and Doctrines, from the time of the Apostles to the age of Charlemagne. It will be edited by Dr. William Smith and Prof. Wace, and will be completed in three volumes, uniform in size with the Dictionary of Christian Antiquities. The work is designed to give a comprehensive account of the personal, literary, dogmatic, and ecclesiastical life of the Church during the first eight centuries of Christianity, and, in connection with the dictionary already named, will afford the most complete collection of materials for the Church history of that period which has been published in England or elsewhere. Among the writers are Profs. Lightfoot, Westcott, Swainson, and Cowell, of Cambridge; Profs. Bright and Stubbs, of Oxford; Prof. Salmon, of Dublin; and both Continental and American scholars have co-operated in the work.

M. THIERS AND MARSHAL MACMAHON.

In a recent number of the Paris Figaro is an article apropos of the late Gen. Letellier Valazé, in which the writer relates a conversation he had with the deceased Senator. "The conversation turned upon M. Thiers, for whom the General had a passionate admiration. 'What an intellect!' said he, 'or rather what a universal genius! And how wrong you are to attack him! If you listened to him an instant you would be forced to give in, for no one can resist such a man! You are the more ungrateful that, of all his passions, the most lively, the most ardent, is that for military affairs. This is what you are all ignorant of in the army. 'How fortunate you are to wear these honors!' said he one day, playing with my epaulettes. 'Nonsense, M. le President,' I replied; 'surely you cannot envy me. You have everything; you are a great author, a great orator, a great statesman, and now Chief of the State.' M. Thiers answered, 'How willingly would I give up all to have the right to wear such military distinctions in the hour of battle.' And you should have heard his voice tremble as he pronounced these words. This is why he wished to force a command upon me during the Commune—he wanted to direct the manœuvres in my name. His dream was to storm Paris and enter amidst bombs and musket shots. At the outset all went on as smoothly as possible. M. Thiers, however, was incessantly interfering in military matters. 'M. le Maréchal, we must do this; M. le Maréchal, we must do that. I understand the Army well, and I know the feeling of the soldiers.' MacMahon did not answer a word. I said to M. Thiers: 'Take care, M. le President, take care; I know the Marshal; he will burst out. 'No! no! c'est un brave garçon! I am very pleased with him—very pleased. He knows that I understand these matters; and when I make an observation to him he says nothing.' 'On that very account, M. le President, he is all the more dangerous. These patient, silent natures are terrible when they do burst out.' In fact, as I anticipated, one fine day, in the heat of the battle, M. Thiers drives up in his carriage, alights hastily, and runs after the staff: 'M. le Maréchal,' cried he, in his piercing voice, 'stop; you are making a mistake. I know these fortifications well: it was I who built them! I will tell you all about it—just listen.' The Marshal remained some time without answering, looking vaguely, like a man at a loss for words. 'M. le President,' he burst out at last, 'be off from here.' 'M. le Maréchal, M. le Maréchal! How now—what's this! You forget!' replied M. Thiers. The Marshal rejoined, 'M. le President, go back to your bureau. Go and sign my dismissal. Send another General here, and I will give up my command to him.' We have known many humiliations, but we have never reached such a pitch that a Marshal of France should obey a cockney, a bourgeois!' I shall never forget M. Thiers' face on returning to his carriage. He said, 'Did you see, Valazé, did you hear that?' 'Oh, yes, M. le President, you would not believe me.' But what is the matter with him, what has seized him—what fit?' 'It was easy to foresee, I have constantly warned you.' 'But up to now he was so deferential, he said nothing.' 'Ah! in a bureau, in face of the Chief of the State, it was not the same thing. You come bothering him in the very act of command; he is angry.' 'Well, well,' said M. Thiers, getting into his carriage, 'don't make a noise about the affair; it might do him harm. He is a brave soldier, and I bear him no ill will for it.' 'I agree indeed, with you, M. le President, that it would be better to say nothing about it.' And so the affair ended."

REBEL CLAIMS IN WEST VIRGINIA.

A letter dated Oct. 26, from a native Southerner, now residing in Clarksburg, West Va., says: "Already in this State the rebels are beginning to prepare their claims against the Government for property used during the war by the Federal Army. Should Tilden be elected, the rebel authorities of our State expect to get sufficient pay from the National Government for damages done their turnpike roads to build new ones throughout the State; and every rebel in our State who owns land upon which Federal troops were encamped would bring forward extortionate bills for rent."

A TILDENITE'S PREFERENCES.

The Dansville (Livingston County) Advertiser of the 2d inst. says: "One of the Democratic speakers residing in this county, a lawyer by profession, and very active as a Tilden reformer, said the other day, in the presence of several reliable gentlemen, that he 'had much rather see Jeff Davis elected President than Hayes.' When asked if he really meant what he said, he replied, 'I mean every word of it.' He spoke the real sentiments of the Democratic Party."

FRIDAY, Nov. 3—P. M.

The volume of business on the Stock Exchange to-day was unusually small and the dealings were devoid of animation. On the whole the market was somewhat firmer than yesterday and higher prices were recorded in most instances, the improvement being chiefly, if not altogether, due to the covering of short contracts. The advance in prices ranged from ¼ to ⅜ ₩ cent., but a partial reaction took place in the late dealings. Lake Shore declined at the opening to 56, and after rising to 57⅜ reacted to 56⅞. Michigan Central declined from 45¾ to 45½, rose to 46⅞, and closed at 46½. New-York Central and Rock Island were firm, selling at 102½ for the former and at 101½@101⅝ for the latter. Delaware, Lackawanna and Western advanced from 73⅞ to 75, and reacted to 74½. New-Jersey Central sold at 37@37⅛. Delaware and Hudson was dull at 73⅝@74. Western Union rose from 71⅞ to 72⅞, and Pacific Mail from 24⅜ to 25⅛. The former afterward reacted to 72⅝ and the latter fell off to 24½, with a recovery to 24⅞ in the final sales. Wabash was weak and declined from 7⅞ to 7¼. The St. Paul shares were irregular. The common advanced to 25⅝ and later sold at 25⅛. The preferred rose from 55¾ to 56⅛, fell off to 55¼, and closed at 55½. The other changes do not call for mention. The entire business for the day reached 87,071 shares, of which 41,700 were in Lake Shore, 10,900 in Western Union, 9,200 in Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, and 6,200 in Michigan Central.

A vote was taken at the Stock and Gold Exchanges to-day on the Presidential ticket, and the result afforded convincing evidence that the financial community believe that the business interests of the country will be best subserved by the election of the Republican candidate, as in both boards the majority of the votes cast was in favor of Gen. Hayes by nearly two to one.

The money market was extremely easy toward the close of business, when borrowers on call were supplied at ½ ₩ cent., the rate in the morning being 3@4 ₩ cent. The discount market is unchanged. The national bank notes received for redemption at Washington to-day amounted to $600,000. The rates of domestic exchange on New-York to-day were: Savannah, buying, ⅜ off; selling, par to ¼ off large amounts; Charleston, easy, 5-16@⅛ to par; Cincinnati, dull, 100 discount; St. Louis, 150 discount; New-Orleans, commercial, 5-16@⅜; bank, ¼; Chicago, steady, 50 discount.

The foreign advices report a strong and higher market for Consols and American securities, the former closing at 96¼ for both money and the account, and the latter at 103½ for 1865s, (old,) 109@109⅛ for 1867s, 108½ for 10-40s, and 106⅜@106¾ for new 5s, and 10½ for Erie. At Paris Rentes were buoyant and rose to 105.50, closing at the highest point. The rate of discount in the open market at London for three months' bills is 1¼ ₩ cent. The sum of £151,000 bullion was withdrawn from the Bank of England on balance to-day, and the specie in the Imperial Bank of Germany has decreased 4,037,000 marks during the week.

The sterling exchange market was dull and steady, with actual business at $4 81¾@$4 82, and $4 83½@$4 84 for bankers' 60-day and demand bills respectively.

The gold speculation was almost wholly inactive, and there was only one price throughout the day, namely, 109¾. On gold loans 1@1½ ₩ cent. was paid for carrying and flat to 1 ₩ cent. for borrowing.

Government bonds were very quiet and the market was steady in tone. In railroad bonds the changes were generally slight. The Pacific issues were a fraction higher. Ohio and Mississippi seconds advanced from 58 to 58½. New-Jersey Central consolidated firsts fell off from 87⅜ to 87, and afterward rose to 87½. Boston, Hartford and Erie guaranteed declined from 17½ to 17. Hannibal and St. Joseph convertibles fell off to 81½, and North Missouri firsts to 97¾. In State bonds Missouri long 6s fell off from 107 to 106¾. Tennessees were firm at 47 for old and 45¼@45½ for new.

The imports of dry goods at the port of New-York for the week ending this date were $1,876,570, and the amount marketed $1,468,781. The total imports of dry goods at the port since Jan. 1 were $72,373,758, and the total amount marketed $73,765,934.

ASSESSING CHURCH PROPERTY.

THE RIGHT OF DOING SO ASSERTED IN CASES WHERE THE PROPERTY HAS ONCE BEEN VALUED BY THE ASSESSORS—JUDGE BARRETT'S DECISION ON THE APPLICATION OF THE CHURCH OF ST. MICHAEL.

An important question in regard to the assessment of church property for local improvements was decided by Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, in the matter of the application of the Church of St. Michael for the vacation of an assessment for an outlet sewer in Seventeenth street. The assessment was levied and confirmed in 1875. The church authorities applied to have it vacated, as far as their property is concerned, on the ground that the Assessors, in violation of law, had assessed the property to the extent of more than one-half its valuation, which, for the year in which the assessment was levied, was nothing, the property not having been valued by the Assessors. The Corporation Counsel, on behalf of the City, claimed that inasmuch as the property had been valued by the Assessors during one year several years prior to 1875, the Assessors in the case at Bar were authorized to assess the property to the extent of one-half of such previous valuation. Judge Barrett in his opinion on the case says: "It is urged that the Legislature meant to limit assessments to one-half the valuation put upon lands by the ward Assessors in the year in which the assessment is laid. This may well have been the intent with respect to lands subject to taxation, and which it was the duty of the ward Assessors annually to value. It could scarcely have been the intent, however, with respect to church property not subject to taxation; for there the duty of making a valuation, in the year in which the assessment is laid, is not imposed upon the ward Assessors. The Legislature has not expressly exempted church property from assessments for local improvements, and it cannot be that it intended to effect such exemption in this obscure and indirect manner. It is more reasonable to assume a legislative intent to impose even a different (and probably reduced) rate of assessment on church property from that imposed upon adjoining property, than an intent in this roundabout way to impose no rate at all. The word "reduced" is used advisedly, because the old valuations of lands now used for church purposes are very generally much less than could now be fairly made, especially in view of the addition of church edifices. In the present case the City has proved a valuation by the ward Assessors at a time when it was their duty to make such valuation. It is not pretended that such valuation is unjust, or that the property has since depreciated. The assessment must therefore be reduced in conformity to the proofs and, as reduced, sustained."

DECISIONS.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

By Judge Larremore.

Applications Granted.—Equitable Life Assurance Society vs. Powers, Nos. 1 and 2; Same vs. Same, No. 3; Equitable Life Assurance Society vs. Silverman; Equitable Life Assurance Society vs. Laverty.

Order Granted.—Gersten vs. Society Gael Cedeck.

By Judge Barrett.

In the matter of Linde.—The report does not seem to follow the testimony as to Emma Linde, whose share was to be paid in cash, as purchaser; this should be paid in cash to render the mortgage to the other three perfectly safe. Then I do not understand how the widow is entitled to the two sums specified.

Opinion.—In the matter of the Church of St. Michael.

Greenfield vs. Saltabassi.—Reference to Roscoe H. Channing, Esq., to take proof of the facts and circumstances stated in the complaint, and to examine the sureties on the undertaking and to report thereon as to its sufficiency.

In the matter of Bonney.—The Receiver had better await the result of the suit. If favorable to the company he will probably realize much more than on a sale.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

By Judge Lawrence.

SUPERIOR COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

By Chief Justice Curtis.

Pooley vs. Dickel.—Motion to vacate, order denied with costs.

Cochran vs. Gottwald et al.—Motion for retaxation of costs denied.

By Judge Robinson.

Irwin vs. Sturgis.—Motion granted.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—PART II.

By Judge Van Vorst.

Cowles vs. Watson.—See memorandum.

THE EVILS OF LITIGATION.

The perils of those who are not willing to "let well enough alone," were strikingly exemplified in the case of John Halstead against Robert Seaman, a decision in which was given by Judge Lawrence, in the Special Term of the Supreme Court yesterday. It appears that the parties to the controversy were very intimate friends about nine years ago. At that time Seaman, in the course of conversation, spoke to Halstead about the case of one John E. Von Eisenbergh, who, Seaman told his friend, was an oculist of high repute, but unfortunate in business and embarrassed in his pecuniary affairs. Seaman said that Von Eisenbergh would be able to get along very well if he could raise some money on his furniture. Halstead, moved by his friend's representations, was induced to loan Von Eisenbergh first $5,000 and then $3,000 additional, taking in return chattel mortgages on the oculist's furniture. The mortgages not having been paid when due, Halstead began to foreclose them, and for this purpose appointed Seaman as his attorney in fact. After the sale of the furniture under the foreclosure, Halstead accused Seaman of not having accounted for $2,000 of the proceeds. The matter was put in the hands of three arbitrators chosen for the purpose of deciding the question raised. The arbitrators came to the conclusion that not only was Halstead not entitled to $2,000 additional, but that he owed Seaman $1,500 in the matter. Apparently disgusted with this unforeseen determination, Halstead then betook himself to the courts, and brought an action to set aside the award of the arbitrators and to have judgment rendered in his favor. In this suit Seaman set up the counter-claim for $1,500 allowed him by the arbitrators, and Judge Lawrence in his decision yesterday gave judgment for Seaman for the $1,500, with costs.

LABOR AND WAGES.

THE RIGHT OF A DISCHARGED EMPLOYE TO SUE FOR WAGES DENIED WHERE SERVICES HAVE NOT BEEN PERFORMED—THE PROPER REMEDY DECLARED TO BE AN ACTION FOR DAMAGES.

Judge Robinson, in the Special Term of the Court of Common Pleas, rendered a decision yesterday in the case of John R. Weed against Edwin C. Burt. The plaintiff in the action was employed by the defendant as a clerk for one year from Jan. 1, 1871, at an annual salary of $3,000, payable monthly, and the action was brought to recover his wages at that rate from May 1, 1871, to Jan. 1, 1872. The complaint alleges that in pursuance of such hiring, the plaintiff entered upon the discharge of his duties, but no averment is made of his having performed any services for the period in question beyond the allegation that "he was then" (at the time he was employed) "and at all times since ready and willing" to perform the services. The testimony shows he was discharged from the employment on Jan. 20, 1871, and tha he then claimed his engagement was for a year, and said "he would remain for the year." He left, however, and performed no services thereafter nor made any tender of his services. He based his right to recover wages for the eight months in question mainly upon the effect which, he claims, resulted from a judgment rendered in his favor before Justice Fowler, of the Third Judicial District of this City, in an action instituted by him in February, 1871, wherein he claimed to recover, on contract for his employment, a balance of $70 50 of wages accruing for the month of January. In that action he made a like allegation of his readiness and willingness to perform the services required by the agreement, without averment of performance, and the defendant for answer denied the agreement, and set up as a defense that plaintiff continued in his employment from Jan. 1 to Jan. 20 under a different agreement for mere temporary employment. The case was determined in plaintiff's favor without any specific finding, and he recovered judgment for $37 42. Justice Fowler, on the trial before Judge Robinson, testified that he rendered judgment "for one month's wages," crediting the defendant, however, with payments and set-offs. No allowance was either claimed or made for damages in consequence of the plaintiff's discharge from employment. Judge Robinson, in his opinion, says the judgment by Justice Fowler established the agreement as contended for by the plaintiff. "It did not, however," Judge Robinson continues, "upon any latitude of construction, decide that plaintiff could recover wages for any subsequent month without the performance of any services, or that he could recover anything by way of wages or as damages without any tender of his services or offer of performance. Mere readiness or willingness to perform a duty or obligation, for performance of which a party is to receive compensation, constitutes no meritorious right of recovery, unless the other party, as a condition precedent, is required by law or contract to do some prior act or has refused to carry out the contract on his part; and a tender of performance by a party claiming to recover as for a constructive performance, is otherwise indispensable. * * * The law is too well established to admit of question that wages can only be earned for services actually performed, and that if the servant has been wrongfully discharged, and has not performed the services because of not being permitted to do so, his only remedy is by action for damages." Judgment is given for the defendant.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 3.—The following cases were argued to-day:

No. 81. Borkly vs. The Board of Levee Commissioners.—Error to the Circuit Court for Louisiana.—This was an application for a mandamus to compel the collection of a tax sufficient to pay certain Levee warrants of the Parishes of Madison and Carroll, in Louisiana. The defence is that the act authorizing these warrants limited the tax to the planters or other persons whose property was benefitted by the levee system, and that the levees built by these warrants in 1858 and 1860 have long since disappeared, and even the plantations they protected also; and that the present owners of the levee property never received any benefit from their issue, and under the law cannot, therefore, be subjected to the tax to pay for them. The court held that under the law, as it now exists, it was without power to afford the relief sought, although the view was taken that the property owners of the present time are liable for the protection of the levee. The case here insists upon the defense urged below. L. R. & C. L. Walker for parishes; R. T. Merrick and G. W. Race opposed.

No. 83.—Berreyesa vs. The United States.—Appeal from the District Court for the District of California.—This is a claim for a tract of land in that part of San José Valley known as Los Milpitas. It was originally claimed that there was a grant of the land by the Spanish authorities in Mexico in 1834, but after the acquisition of California by the United States, no papers being found showing that it was made, the Berreyesa family, in 1852, pre-empted a portion of the tract now claimed, therein declaring that no other title was known to exist. Afterward, a record of the alleged grant was found, but it was rejected by the Land Commissioners under the act of 1851, and the rejection was sustained by the District Court. Subsequently the cause was reopened, new evidence taken, and again the claim was rejected. From this final determination of the District Court the present appeal is taken, and the evidence is of a voluminous character, establishing, as the appellant claims, that the boundaries of the grant were fixed and definite, and that he was entitled to a confirmation of his claim. P. Phillips for appellant; Assistant Attorney General Smith for the Government.

On motion of George T. Curtis, John P. Wilson, of Chicago, Ill., was admitted to practice as an attorney and counsellor of this Court.

No. 83.—Antonio Berryesa, Administrator, &c., Appellant, vs. The United States.—The argument of this cause was continued by Mr. P. Phillips, of counsel for the appellant, and by Mr. M. Blair and Mr. S. O. Houghton for the appellees, and concluded by Mr. P. Phillips, for the appellants.

No. 88. (Substituted). A. E. & C. E. Tilton, appellants, vs. Joseph B. Cafield, et al.—This cause was argued by Mr. George T. Curtis and Mr. George H. Williams, of counsel for the appellants, and submitted on printed arguments by Mr. Amos Steck, for the appellees. Adjourned until Monday.

COURT NOTES.

On the application of the Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents, Judge Larremore, in Supreme Court Chambers, yesterday issued an injunction restraining the giving of theatrical performances in the Pacific Garden, on the Bowery, until the proprietor of the establishment has paid the requisite license fee.

The matter of the contested will of the late Judge Connolly was again up in the Surrogate's Court yesterday. Another of the subscribing witnesses to the will, Dr. N. C. Hensted, was examined at length. The testimony was of little importance, except so far that he gave it as his professional opinion that the deceased died of Bright's disease of the kidneys.

Theodore Kummell, of No. 85 Christopher street, was held in default of bail yesterday at the Tombs Police Court, on the charge of forging a Havana lottery ticket. He had erased a number from his ticket, and substituted another entitling him to draw $25. The complaint was made by Theodore Zschoch, a dealer in lottery tickets, at No. 116 Nassau street.

In the suit of Anthony Smith against Controller Green, Judge Larremore, in Supreme Court Chambers, yesterday granted an order, returnable on the 13th inst., directing Mr. Green to show cause why a peremptory mandamus should not issue to compel him to sign a check for $7,000 handed to Smith by Public Administrator Sullivan as his share of the property of Anthony Jones, deceased, pursuant to a decree of the Surrogate.

CAPT. GRINDLE ADMITTED TO BAIL.

Motion was made in the United States Circuit Court yesterday morning, before Judge Benedict, to admit Capt. J. L. Grindle, who was convicted on Thursday of cruelty on the high seas, to bail, pending a motion for a new trial. District Attorney Foster said he would not oppose such a motion if sufficient bail was offered, naming $25,000 as such. An order, in accordance, was made, requiring the accused to appear in Court on Saturday, Nov. 11, when the motion for a new trial will be argued. Bail in the amount named was furnished during the afternoon, with Frederick Chauncey (Fabbri & Chauncey) and Charles Fanning (Lucius Hart & Co.) as sureties.

A LOYAL WEST VIRGINIAN'S VIEWS.

A native of Tennessee, who has always resided in the South, and for the past twenty years in West Virginia, wrote a letter to the Bangor (Me.) Whig in which he says: "The spirit of 1860 has been revived, and the same men, who, in 1860, voted for Breckinridge and Lane, will, on the 7th of November, vote for Tilden and Hendricks. The places of those who have died or were killed in the war for 'States rights,' will be supplied by the scions of chivalry who have grown up since, and who have been carefully educated in the political faith of their dead sires. We appeal to our loyal brethren of the Northern States to arouse themselves and turn back this tide of Southern rebel Democracy which has been put in motion by a 'solid South;' for we do not wish to see the people of the whole country governed by this Southern Democracy. Sectionalism has always been abhorrent to Republicans, but the Southern Democracy have thrown down the gauntlet, and let a solid North on the 7th of November, overwhelm the solid South. It is to be deplored when this Southern Democracy gets possession of a small State, but who can tell the consequences, if this Confederate Democracy were to gain power over a Government which they hate, under the leadership of an unscrupulous demagogue like Samuel J. Tilden, with a majority in Congress of like political faith?"

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS DISCUSSED.

MR. LUCIUS ROBINSON AND THE ERIE RAILWAY.

Your exposure of Gov. Tilden's operations in the reorganization and foreclosure of railways, has done good service, but you have not given Mr. Lucius Robinson, of Elmira, in these respects, the attention his conduct deserves. It can be shown by official documents, which, according to well-known principles of law, prove themselves, that Mr. Robinson's transactions regarding some of these corporations have been quite as corrupt as those of Mr. Tilden. He is well known among railway managers as a politician who can be used at pleasure—for a consideration—to suit their purposes. In the hey-day of Fisk and Gould's Erie management, he was one of their most efficient and subservient agents, and as such aided in procuring the passage of the notorious Classification act of 1869. In January, 1872, when the Erie Railway shareholders were before the New-York Legislature to procure the repeal of that nefarious act, Mr. Lucius Robinson was there to oppose. By referring to Assembly Document No. 98, of 1873, pages 26 and 27, you will find the following in the testimony of Mr. Mathew Hale, an eminent lawyer of Albany, who was employed by the Attorney General to aid in securing the repeal of the law of 1869:

"Q.—I suppose it would come to your knowledge that such men were opposing you, perhaps? A.—Yes, Sir. I will mention several gentlemen who came here; Mr. Lucius Robinson was here; I know from his feelings he was opposed to it, [the repeal of the act,] as I conversed with him on the subject; there was a gentleman from Yates County made a speech before the committee against the bill, [for the repeal of the act of 1869;] I did not pay much attention to them any way, for I knew if they worked as lobbyists are supposed to, I should have no occasion to meet them."

Mr. Robinson and his friends did not succeed, for the odious law of 1869 was finally repealed by the act of March 20, 1872. But Mr. Gould and his directors, having sold out to Samuel L. M. Barlow, and those he claimed to represent, that gentleman at an expense of $750,000, paid for bribing Gould's men and others, (all of which has been taken from the pockets of Erie shareholders and creditors,) on the 11th of that month took possession of the Erie Railway; and, as a grateful remembrance of Mr. Robinson's services, and with the knowledge that he could be used, when wanted, as a respectable figure-head—Mr. Barlow soon gave him a prominent place in the direction. Upon the departure of Peter H. Watson for Europe, Sept. 3, 1873, Mr. Barlow made Mr. Robinson "Acting President" of the Erie. For the six months of service in that sinecure, Mr. Robinson received from the Erie Treasury the sum of $18,000, although the fact was well known that he was placed in the office as a mere figure-head, knowing no more about railway management than the devil does about holy water. He frequently amused the boys in the general offices by saying that he was there to "look wise and say nothing." Every matter was referred to Barlow—and, as might have been foreseen under such an arrangement, the finances of the company "progressed to ruin"—went to the dogs.

Upon his election to the office of Controller, Mr. Robinson resigned the Erie Directorship, but too late to save the company he helped to throw into insolvency.

Would Lucius Robinson, if elected, be Governor? or, would it be Sam. Barlow, and the other Tammany managers?

NO MOLLIES FOR REPUBLICANS.

It is said that the Mollie Maguires of the anthracite coal region sustained Gov. Hartranft in his election last Fall, and that they were influenced to do so by money spent by his direction. If it can be shown that the coal region counties have decreased their Democratic vote or majorities at any recent election, there may be ground to suspect that the charge could be partially substantiated. But as the Mollies are all Democrats, and as the district maintained its usual Democratic strength at the last election, it does not require very nicely-adjusted steelyards to at once determine the falsity of the charge.

The recent renewal of the calumny, through the evidence of the man Slattery, of Shenandoah, has no weight whatever. This Slattery has been in custody for some time on a suspicion of arson and as an accessory to some of the Mollie murders. His own evidence convicts him of being a member of the Mollie gang, and is therefore not entitled to credence in the Hartranft case, even though he was called upon as a witness against other parties than himself. And if it is upon such evidence as this that Frank Gowen, of the Reading Coal and Iron Company, makes his bold declaration against Hartranft, he will have a difficult time in selecting a jury who will admit the proof.

There is a tolerably good reason for Gowen's position in the matter, as he stands almost as one man in battle array with the Mollies, and he needs all the strength he can obtain, while the pardon of any of those who have been convicted of crimes perpetrated by direction of the order would be a sore defeat to him, as well as an outrage upon the laws and liberties of the people of Pennsylvania. But he must know, he does know, that whatever political influence there may be involved in the matter comes from the side of the Democrats. The order could not be perpetuated by Republican rule. The coal operators, the officers of the courts, and the vital influence of the people of the district is so largely Republican, that, but for the preponderance of Democrats among the rabble, of which the Mollies constitute a leading element, not a Mollie would now be unpunished, was one permitted to inhabit the district. If the Republican Party ever attempted to win this blood-thirsty element over to its support, if it ever attempted to rob the Democrats of their cut-throats and assassins, it has reason to blush with shame.

The proofs are wanting. If Asa Packer, as a Democrat, wants to get rid of the Mollies, he is not to blame, but he is not the man who would want to give them a political status which would perpetuate their existence and consequently also their crimes. If Ario Pardee, as a Republican, desires their assistance, it is only so far as they can be used for each other's destruction. If Frank Gowen and Charles Parrish, as the heads of two powerful railroad and coal mining corporations, desire them to join the Republican Party, they simply desire a measure which would prove suicidal to their best interests. Republicans and Democrats alike who are interested in the great coal interests must join hands to exterminate this band of Thugs, whose leading purpose is to rule and ruin by arson and assassination, and for their extermination are the best energies of the best Republicans in Pennsylvania now being exerted.

A FORGER.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

A tall, dark complexioned man, with a forged letter, is soliciting aid from various persons. The letter is described to me as follows:

Dated "ST. AMBROSE RECTORY, NEW-YORK, Sept. —, 1876."—Recommending "Mr. Leander Fisher," the bearer, as "a person worthy of assistance," &c. Falsely signed, "Z. Doty, $5." "M. Dix, $5," with other names.

The bearer of such a letter is a forger. I do not know such a man; and do not give such letters. Trusting he may meet with justice, and that he may be duly assisted to this end, I am, very truly, yours,

A WARNING TO PARENTS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

As a warning to parents, will you please insert the following: Yesterday my wife went out shopping, and left our only child, a boy fifteen months old, in charge of our servant. About dark, a well-dressed man, with long, black beard, rang our basement bell, and inquired if the baby was in. Being answered in the affirmative, he said that his grandmother (who lives in the same block) had sent for him and wished him to take him across. My wife having previously cautioned the girl against giving the child to strangers, she fortunately refused. As the story he told was a fabrication, I cannot account for such a strange proceeding otherwise than by the supposition that a case of kidnapping was contemplated.

A CALL FOR YOUNG MEN.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Next Tuesday is election day. It is very probable a large fraudulent vote may be polled. The union of both Democratic organizations in the interest of certain Tammany candidates strengthens the number of their workers at the polls—and workers bring about practical results on the 7th of November. To offset this it will be necessary to have as many of our citizens as possible assemble about their respective polling booths and do yeoman's work in the cause. I would call especially the attention of patriotic young men to this fact. They are far more energetic than older citizens, and a certain pride should be taken not only in bringing their own associates to the polls, but also in working, arguing, and drumming up the eleventh-hour men, who wait until the last moment to cast their votes. Any Republican young man who desires to work in the Twentieth Assembly District in furthering the good cause will receive instructions, &c., by writing or calling upon me at my residence. It would be well for the young men in every district to adopt similar measures.

A BUSINESS MAN'S VIEWS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The wide-spread alarm among business men at the bare possibility of the election of Tilden, is but the natural result of the present political condition of the country. How can any thinking man whose business interests are at stake hesitate one moment as to who should receive his vote? My business is indirectly with the South to a great extent. Since the possibility of Mr. Tilden's election has been claimed by the Democrats, I find that confidence in the Southern trade is shaken and that the proportions of that branch of our commerce are being materially reduced. If business men will take a business view of existing facts, they cannot help but see that a vote for Tilden is a direct blow at our business prosperity, while on the other hand, a vote for Hayes means increased confidence among business men, and a healthy growth of business in all its branches.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN CHINA.

RECRUITING THE RANKS OF THE HUNG LEAGUE—333 QUESTIONS OF THE CATECHISM—THE CEREMONY OF AFFILIATION.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

In peaceful times the ranks of the society are recruited by volunteers, but when the League is preparing to take the field threats and violence are often used to secure members. At such crisis a man returning home finds a slip of paper bearing the seal of the League awaiting him, which calls upon him at a given hour to betake himself to a certain spot, and warns him that the murder of himself and his family will be the penalty of disobedience to the command. Sometimes it is said, also, that one of the brotherhood insults a stranger on the road, and, pretending to fly from the just consequences of his act, leads the unsuspecting wayfarer to some lonely spot where he is seized upon by a number of brothers and is carried away to the place where the lodge is held. On the appointed evening the recruits present themselves at the "City of Willows," as the lodges are called, where they are met by the "vanguard," who carefully enters their names and places of residence in a book kept for the purpose. The vanguard then gives orders to form the "bridge of swords," whereupon the brethren place themselves in a double row, and drawing their swords cross them in the air in the form of a bridge or arch. Under this arch the new members are led, and at the same time are mulcted of an entrance-fee of twenty-one cash. After this they are taken to the Hung-gate, where stand two Generals, who introduce the "new horses" to the Hall of Fidelity and Loyalty. Here the neophytes are instructed in the objects of the society; and, finally, they are conducted into the presence of the assembled council in the "Lodge of Universal Peace." As a preliminary to the administration of the oaths, the Master examines the vanguard in the 333 questions of the catechism of the society, and then orders him to bring forward those neophytes who are willing to take the oath, and to cut off the heads of those who refuse to do so. As the vanguard is supposed not to bear the sword in vain, few decline to take the oath, and the ceremony of affiliation is proceeded with by cutting off the queues of the recruits (though this operation is dispensed with if the members are living among Chinese who are faithful to the Tartar rule,) by washing their faces and exchanging their clothes for long white dresses as tokens of purity and the commencement of a new life. Straw shoes, signs of mourning, are also put on their feet to signify the death of their old nature; and thus attired they are led up to the altar. Here some questions with reference to the immediate objects of the League are put to the vanguard, and then each member offers up nine blades of grass and an incense stick, while an appropriate stanza is repeated between each offering. A red candle is now lighted, and the brethren worship heaven and earth by pledging three cups of wine. This done, the seven-starred lamp, the precious Imperial lamp, and the Hung lamp are lighted, and prayer is made to the gods, beseeching them to look down upon the members and to accept the incense burned in their honor. The oath binding them to observe obedience to the League, and to display a spirit of fraternity, devotion, and righteousness toward the brethren, is then read aloud, and is followed by each member drawing some blood from his middle finger, and letting it drop into a chalice partly filled with wine. Each neophyte then, having drank of the mixture and repeated the appointed stanzas, strikes off the head of a white cock, as a sign that so shall all unfaithful and disloyal brothers perish. And now the ceremony of affiliation is over, and it remains but for the President to give to each recruit a diploma, the book containing the oath, law, secret signs, &c., a pair of poinards, and three Hung coins. With these emblems of their obligations the new members return to their homes at break of day.

LED ASTRAY BY WICKED WOMEN.

The Paris correspondent of the London Standard writes: For the moment, however, both home and foreign politics are thrown entirely into the shade by a remarkable but sad case which will come before the Paris Court Martial in a few days. A cadet of the military school of Saint Cyr is about to be tried for robbing his comrades. I believe it is the first time that such a crime has been—I will not say committed—but published, by any member of a national institution that is justly considered as the multum in parvo of French honor and chivalry. It is easy, therefore, to understand the sensation the affair has caused in all ranks of society. The facts may be briefly related. It appears that for some time past the cadets of the school have complained of the strange disappearance of the money contained in their purses. They went to bed all right, but on waking up next morning found their pockets empty. It was resolved at last to set watch in the dormitory, and at 3 o'clock in the morning one of the students was caught wandering about. He excused himself by saying he was suffering from sudden indisposition; but as two of the cadets found their purses emptied, the student in question was arrested by his comrades. They made him undress himself, searched his clothes, and looked everywhere, but the missing money could not be discovered. The affair would have probably dropped there and then had not one of the younger cadets remarked the peculiar shape of a packet of cigarettes taken out of the pocket of the suspected cadet. The packet was opened, and inside, neatly rolled up, was found a bank-note for 1,000 francs, which had been stolen from one of his comrades. On searching further, gold and silver were discovered dexterously secreted in his socks and shoes. His guilt was now beyond doubt. But how to save the honor of his family and the school? To accomplish this it was decided to persuade him to commit suicide; such is the French idea of retributive justice and honor. He was allowed to put on his clothes again. This done, a brace of revolvers, a dose of poison, and a rifle were placed before him. The oldest cadet then approached him, and held forth as follows: "We shall now leave you alone; you know your duty. The means of saving your honor lie before you. Your death will be attributed to disappointed love or family differences, or what you like, and you can write a letter to that effect to the Governor of the school. Good-bye." But the guilty cadet was not made of such high metal, and instead of accepting the "honorable compromise" offered him with such theatrical but very Gallic mise en scène, replied by a vulgar French epithet, which showed that both shame and honor were unknown to him. He was consequently handed over to the military authorities. He has confessed his guilt, and admits having stolen as much as 6,000 francs from his comrades during the past two years. He is the son of a retired officer in the French Army named Philippot, who lost both his arms by a cannon ball at the siege of Sebastopol. It is said that this promising youth has been led astray by one of the fatal stars of the demi-monde.

COLORING HUMAN HAIR BY EATING EGGS.

From the London Echo.

The much vexed question, How to get gold hair, is solved at last. While the Germans shrink from being held a fair-haired nation, who knows, but the sufferers, what other nations have gone through to win the hair despised by Prussia? Ladies have borne unheard of torments in pursuit of this fictitious gold. One who had to be turned round in the sun for hours during the process, bore with stoic fortitude the terrible headaches involved each week, nor ever complained of what she had to pay, though, after all, she was scarcely even electro-plated. Some run other risks, in robbing Teuton corpses of their long fair locks; and all is ineffectual while eyes and skin remain to give the lie to hair. Now, no more dyes, migraines, or wigs will be necessary. Everybody may sport the "glad gold hair"—nay, blue eyes, too, and snowy skins. All you have to do is to go and live on an island and eat penguins' eggs—and the more you eat the fairer you will get. None need despair, for hair too dark to change to gold turns red, and red hair, being more the rage than flaxen, tant mieux. The isle in question is one of the Crozet group, on which the survivors of the unfortunate Strathmore were wrecked last year, and only rescued after six months' durance vile. They had little to eat but penguins' eggs (and doubtless the eggs without the island would be of no avail,) but the slight inconvenience of a sameness in food would be readily encountered by the votaries of fashion. A survivor writes:—"The eggs did every one a great deal of good. * * * * A most remarkable thing was that every one had fair skins and light hair, dark faces and hair being quite changed, black hair turning brown or red, and fairer people quite flaxen." If some enterprising Englishman does not immediately set up a hotel on this enchanted spot, we shall never give John Bull credit for knowing how to make his fortune.

Waterwitch	4	1,279	Hydr. g.-bt.
Wivern	4	2,751	Turret-ship.
Zealous	20	6,096	Broadside.

Besides these we have at the present moment only four armored men-of-war in course of building. Other ships, to the number of thirty-nine, are on the stocks, but these are unarmored vessels. We have building the Ajax and Agamemnon, turret-ships, and the Nelson and Northampton, masted iron-clads, and there are six magnificent craft already launched and fitting for sea, which will add very materially to our strength as a naval power. These are the turret ships Thunderer, Dreadnought and Inflexible, the least of which would be more than a match for half a dozen iron-clads launched three years ago, and the masted ships the Alexandra, Shannon, and Téméraire. These six vessels together constitute a fleet which at the present moment would probably be unconquerable by the combined navies of Europe. Of the thirty-nine unarmored vessels building, two of the most interesting are the Bacchante and the Euryalus, both of which are built on the principle of the Boadicea, which was launched last year. They are intended for cruising and will constitute the most powerful vessels of the kind in our service. Eight of the other vessels are to be of steel, the Mercury and Iris, both building at Pembroke, being large and swift dispatch vessels, lightly armed, whose speed will probably be twenty miles an hour. The other steel ships are corvettes, more powerfully armed with 7-inch guns, and these are to be employed on distant stations and for the protection of our colonies. The number is made up of sloops and small corvettes, one torpedo-boat, four gun-vessels, and twenty gun-boats.

The greatest of these is the one last named. The Peter the Great has only recently taken her trial trip at Cronstadt, and, as the vessel is at last afloat and ready for sea, the Pall Mall Gazette thinks it "worth while to examine how she compares in speed and general fighting power with England's latest iron-clads of similar model, the Dreadnought, the Thunderer, and the Devastation. This last named is the only one which has as yet been put in commission, and it is satisfactory to observe that in speed at least—one of the most important points in these days—she is far superior to her Russian rival. During her trial at Cronstadt the Peter the Great only made 12½ knots an hour, and, although it is added that the trial was most satisfactory, and that she can "easily" accomplish thirteen knots, those who have watched the doings of our own vessels at the measured mile are well aware that the results obtained there are very rarely surpassed on actual service. The Devastation, on the other hand, after having been for some time in commission, steamed about three months ago from Malta to Smyrna in forty-eight hours, or at the rate of fourteen and a quarter knots an hour all the way—nearly two knots more than the Peter the Great could achieve under far more favorable circumstances. In point of armament and thickness of armor-plating the two vessels are almost identical. The Devastation, being equal in other respects and superior in speed, would be very well able to hold her own with the Russian vessel. Her sister ship, the Thunderer, being more powerfully armed with two 38-ton and two 35-ton guns, instead of four 35-ton guns, would be a still more formidable antagonist. As to the Dreadnought, she is considerably larger than the Peter the Great, carries four 38-ton guns, and, as her steam power is more than thirty per cent. in excess of either the Devastation or the Thunderer, it is probable that she will be at least as fast as the former vessel, and is certainly, on the whole, the most dangerous iron-clad afloat at the present time. In an estimate of first-class iron-clads in the Revue Coloniale et Maritime, putting the Inflexible at 100, the Dreadnought is rated at 72, the Peter the Great at 71, and the Thunderer and Devastation at 65 and 63 respectively. But the relative power of the Peter the Great is much overestimated by these figures; and if half the stories which are told of the Russian dock-yards are true, her construction is defective in many important particulars. She is now ordered round to the Mediterranean, and it is not altogether impossible that in the course of the next year or two our own dock-yard officials may have an opportunity of overhauling her completely, and remedying any defects that may be found to exist.

OTHER EUROPEAN NAVIES.

The French Navy consists of 445 vessels, of which 286 were steamers and 44 sailing vessels; 32 iron-clads, carrying 1,163 guns; 238 large war steamers, carrying 1,162 guns; 38 corvettes, transports, &c., carrying 107 guns; 12 large sailing vessels, carrying 101 guns; the entire personnel of which comprised 28,000. Independent of these the "marine" troops amount to 15,000; "Artillerie de Marine," 4,000 more. In time of war provision is made for raising this force to 170,000 men. There were, besides, in course of completion afloat, 7 vessels of 3,710-horse power, and 1 sailing transport.

The Navy of Turkey in 1875 consisted of about 165 vessels, of which 72 were steamers and 20 iron-clads.

The German Navy List for 1876 enumerates the German war Navy as follows: Iron-clads—8 frigates and 3 corvettes. Cruisers—14 corvettes and 9 gun-boats of the first class. Vessels for coast defense—2 iron-clad gun-boats and 5 iron-clad gun-boats, 11 torpedo-boats, 8 gun-boats of the second class, 6 avisos, and 2 transports. School-ships—1 ship of the line, 1 sailing frigate, 4 corvettes, and 3 brigs. Vessels for harbor service—9 steam transports, 3 vessels serving as barracks, 5 pilot-boats, and 10 vessels for the transport of coal.

The Navy of Italy, in 1872, was 76 steam and sailing vessels of war, with 653 guns, and 18,342 men, including marines.

Denmark possesses a Navy consisting of 33 steam vessels, mounting 291 guns, with 1,125 officers and men.

The Navy of Sweden consists of 37 steamers of 3,096 horse power and 47 guns, 14 of the vessels being iron-clads or monitors, 8 sailing vessels, with 156 guns, and 88 rowing vessels. The Navy, when fully manned, comprises about 8,000 sailors and marines, with a reserve of 35,000 men.

The Navy of Norway consists of 28 vessels, with 155 guns, 4 being monitors, besides 12 gun-boats, mounting 100 guns.

The Royal Navy of Holland consisted, on Aug. 1, 1875, of 52 men-of-war steamers, 28 of them iron-clads, and 15 sailing men-of-war, with 388 guns.

The Navy of Portugal consists of 38 ships—many in bad condition and scarcely seaworthy—with 288 guns, manned by about 3,200 sailors.

CAT SHOW AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE FELINE RACE ON EXHIBITION—THREE HUNDRED AND EIGHT BEAUTIFUL TABBIES—A SHORT-HAIRED CAT VALUED AT $125,000—THE PRIZES.

From the London Standard Oct. 21.

The eighth National Cat Show, which will continue up to next Tuesday evening, opened yesterday at the Crystal Palace. The show is being held in the north nave, along which run four parallel rows of cages containing 308 beautiful creatures of all sizes, colors, and kinds. Some are arrayed in white and gray and silver silken dresses, that one might fancy ought to rustle with every graceful movement of the wearer, and others in coats of wire-like fabric that would emit phosphoric sparks if rubbed the wrong way. There are cats of all nationalities—although this year, unlike the shows of former years, the contributors are confined to England, and indeed, it would appear for the majority, to persons residing in London, or within a radius of ten miles therefrom. In some cages there were majestic-looking monsters sitting with closed eyes on cushions emblazoned in purple and amber, as if they heeded not the curiosity they were exciting, or the admiration so lavishly bestowed upon them, while round the corner or in the adjoining compartments were sulky or retiring witches that hid themselves away, and better still, twin kittens playing with the children's fingers thrust between the cage bars. Indeed the prettiest sight of the day was to watch the play between these junior generations, to see the pleasure light up the faces of the children, or to listen to the merry music of their laughter. The great majority of the visitors yesterday consisted of ladies and children, and it may be added that the majority of exhibitors are also ladies. One of the chief delights of the day was to see the creatures fed, and to witness this sight, which took place close upon 4 o'clock, almost every one in the building flocked. The event was interesting, not only from the fact that the animals themselves took a lively interest in it, but that it provoked a curiosity among the spectators like to that which prevails when the great carnivora are being banqueted in the Regent's Park Gardens. The howls of the eaters were not as loud in the palace as those heard on similar occasions in the park, but taking into account the relative size of the beasts, they were equally deep. The prizes, which in the total amounted to about £120, were divided into three for each of the fifty classes of which the show consisted—the first prize in each being £1, the second 15s., and the third 10s. It cannot but have added to the labors of the judges to have to regard the value set upon the various animals by their owners—a value which ranged from tens of thousands of pounds down to the modest sum of 1s. 6d. Every exhibitor was permitted by the rules laid down to set a prohibitory price upon the animal he or she exhibited, and one exhibitor took a very liberal advantage of this permission, for she set the value of £25,000 on Little Brownie, a short-haired she tabby aged three years. This highly-esteemed puss, numbered ninety-two in the catalogue, is set forth by her owner, Miss Nellie Shorthouse, as of thoroughbred descent from cats in the possession of the owner and her father for nearly thirty years, and a tabulated pedigree for seven generations framed and glazed is affixed to the sales-office in the palace. Notwithstanding the feats of Little Brownie, however, who is reported to be a famous rat-catcher, having on many occasions "dispatched" five rats in a minute, the judges awarded in this class the first prize to Miss H. King's cat, which the owner values at the more modest sum of £4. It would be impossible to give here the list of prizes in extenso, and it is almost invidious to single out any. But we cannot refrain from calling the attention of visitors to the show to a few animals, the merit of which struck us as being extraordinary. No. 2 in the programme, a short-haired tortoise-shell, the property of Mr. John Hurry, is one of these; and among the others are those numbered 14, 20, 21, 26, 33, 41, 53, 62, 70, 107, 156, 157, 200, 212, and 245. Special attention should be called to a remarkably colored short-haired tom-cat, (No. 56,) the property of Mr. John Walter, and to Mr. Hawthorn's tabby, valued by the owner at £1,000, and which weighs twenty-three pounds two ounces. On the whole, the show may be pronounced, so far as the quality of the exhibits goes, a decided success.

PROSPERITY IN FRANCE.

MR. SHAW LEFEVRE, M. P., AT THE SOCIAL SCIENCE CONGRESS IN LONDON.

At the meeting of the Social Science Congress in Liverpool on the 17th inst., Mr. Shaw Lefevre, M. P., delivered an address in the course of which he said: "I cannot avoid remarking on one of the most extraordinary economic facts of modern times, namely, the revival of France from the misfortunes and losses entailed upon her by her war with Germany. Never did a country appear to be more hopelessly crushed by the weight of its losses and by the large indemnity imposed on it by the victors. Yet she has borne her burden with heroism, and has emerged from her difficulties with an elasticity which has surprised Europe. The contrast between France and Germany at this moment is most remarkable. The defeated, humiliated, and plundered country is, apparently, richer than ever. The victorious country, the 'Pays de Milliards,' the recipients of the indemnity, appears to be not only none the richer, but absolutely the poorer for the transaction. The feverish excitement caused by the influx of so much wealth has now given place to a reaction in which all commercial transactions are involved; general gloom and distress pervade the country. In a recent comic paper published at Berlin, it was suggested as a remedy for the general distress in Germany, as compared with France, that Germany should again declare war against France, that it should again march its armies to Paris, again defeat those of France, but in making peace, in lieu of imposing an indemnity of 200,000,000 on France, it should agree to pay that amount to the conquered. [Cheers and laughter.] By that means alone, it was humorously suggested, would Germany secure to itself the prosperity which France was enjoying. What, then, is the economic explanation of this great difference in the condition of the two countries? Why is it that the loss of two milliards has not made the one country poorer or the gain not made the other country richer? Is not the explanation to be found in this, that the true and only source of wealth is production and saving? The French people are the most industrious and saving that the world contains. In no other country is wealth so widely distributed. In none are habits of industry, economy, and thrift more universally exercised. After the war these people, from the highest to the lowest, met their losses by even greater industry and greater economies than ever. Now, when they have retrieved their losses and overcome their difficulties, this habit is still continued. On the other hand, the influx of money to Germany led to a general expansion, not only of trade, but of the habits of living. Luxury of all kinds increased. Foolhardy speculations multiplied. Unproductive employment was stimulated. In the subsequent collapse the people as a whole have lost more than they gained by the Indemnity, while it is no easy task to divert so much unproductive labor into its old channels of production. The great recuperative power shown by France has again turned the attention of economists to her social condition. What is it that constitutes her strength? What is it that creates this universal habit of thrift and industry? It cannot, I think, be doubted that the answer is to be found in the wide distribution of property which is so distinguishing a feature of the French system. Upward of seven millions of persons own property in land or houses, and of these five and a half millions are owners of agricultural land. Upward of four millions of persons own between them the public debt of France. The passion for land has not only created five millions of peasant proprietors, the most industrious and thrifty people in the world, but it has spread through the whole population, from the highest to the lowest, the feeling of individual ownership, the desire to become independent, and the habit of thrift and saving which enables them to become so."

GENERAL POLITICAL NEWS.

THE HARTFORD MERCHANTS' ADDRESS.

The address in favor of the election of Hayes and Wheeler, signed by the foremost business men of Hartford, Conn., of which mention was made in our special telegrams on Thursday, says: "We have seen with satisfaction and pride that recently public credit has so improved that we are second to no nation on earth in our ability to command money at low rates, and we have thus been able, by refunding our debt, to reduce our annual interest $32,824,000. We have seen a steady and decided improvement in business; and under a wise Republican rule the day is just at hand when general prosperity will be known and its blessings felt throughout the land. We then, as business men, ask, is it wise to change the administration of this Government just at the time when a brighter day is dawning? Is it wise to displace from the management of public affairs a loyal party which has managed so well? The Republicans have not a hungry solid South at their backs howling for payments of all sorts of claims as a reward for a solid vote. The Democrats have just that. The Republican candidate is not obliged to write letters disavowing all intention to pay such claims. The Democratic candidate has had to do just that, and has made forced promises utterly impossible for him to keep with the hungry crowd who would place him in power. The Republicans have placed in nomination men of spotless reputation and clean hands. The Democrats have nominated a man whose canvass has been a continued defence of charges of wrong dealing in our courts of justice, and of whom August Belmont, one of the National Democratic Committee, wrote while the question of his nomination was pending: 'He has been a leading railroad lawyer, and he has not come out with clean hands.' The Republicans are safe from all danger of Southern control and Southern claims which threaten the Democratic Party, and which must exercise an irresistible influence over them should they come into power. We therefore ask, is it wise now to place Democrats in power? and we urge upon our fellow-citizens who desire a return of prosperous times, and who would not paralyze our business interests by fears of fresh disaster, to exert themselves to the utmost to prevent the return to power of a party composed so largely of the late enemies of our Government, and which brought on the present state of affairs, and not to change the physician when the patient is getting well."

GEN. BUTLER IN ERROR.

In his recent letter Gen. Butler charges Judge Hoar with having, in a selfish and unseemly manner, clung to the office of Attorney General when the President had intimated to him that he wished him to resign, in order to enable him to nominate Mr. Boutwell to the place of Secretary of the Treasury without the embarrassment of having two members of his Cabinet from one State. In contradiction of this the Boston Advertiser quotes the following paragraph from a letter, dated Oct. 29, addressed by Secretary Hamilton Fish to a gentleman in that city: "The President authorizes the statement that his recollection is, that, after the nomination and confirmation of Mr. Hoar as Attorney General, Mr. Hoar visited him at his residence in I street, he not having then moved into the White House. The disability of Mr. Stewart, who had been nominated as Secretary of the Treasury, had then been ascertained. That Mr. Hoar recommended the appointment of Gov. Boutwell as Secretary of the Treasury, and said that no objection would arise from the appointment of two members of the Cabinet from the same State, as he was perfectly willing to resign, or not to enter upon the office of Attorney General; that the appointment had been a favor to him, as it had afforded an opportunity to resign his position on the Bench of Massachusetts, which he was glad to give up."

ALABAMA REPUBLICANS.

The Alabama Republican State Committee has issued an address full of encouragement to the Republicans of the State. It says: "Let the true and honest Republicans of every county in the State, and of each precinct in the counties, organize as thoroughly as possible before election day, and poll their full vote. Do not ask what your sister counties are doing. Do your own duty, and leave the blame to fall elsewhere, if we are defeated. If all do their duty we will not be defeated. We are in a fair and honest majority, and it is the controlling principle of our political institutions that the majority must rule. Nothing is required but a little energy and determination to give us victory. Surely our cause is dear enough to induce us all to give a few days of our time to its success. The Union men of Alabama are disgusted with the spirit of sectionalism aroused by the Democratic Party, and are ready to join with us in rebuking and crushing it once and forever. Let us then make the effort, and by the help of God we will once more place the name of Alabama on the roll of Republican States."

THE PATRIOTS OF MASSACHUSETTS NOT DEMOCRATS.

In a recent letter Hon. George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts, asks: "What has the Democratic Party to show either of history or of promise that it should ask the co-operation of the ingenuous, honest, liberty-loving youth of Massachusetts? For thirty years its orators and press have poured forth the same stream of vituperation that we hear to-day. The men whom it has denounced maintain their place in the reverence and affection of mankind. Yet what single man among the leaders of the Democratic Party in Massachusetts is now remembered among her honored names for any deed of patriotic service? The great statesmen, the great orators, the great poets, the great philanthropists of Massachusetts have been always among the ranks of the opponents of Democracy. The Democratic Party of Massachusetts now presents the singular spectacle of looking to securities which the Republicans have provided to protect the nation against the dangers of its own accession to power."

THE DEMOCRATS OF WEST VIRGINIA.

A letter from a resident of West Virginia says: "The Governor elect of West Virginia is a man who left the State in the beginning of the rebellion, and afterward led raiding parties into the State to burn the houses and steal the horses and cattle of the loyal citizens, and in many instances to kill the citizens themselves. The Attorney General elect was Colonel of a Confederate regiment. The State Auditor was a rebel Captain. The State Treasurer a rebel sympathizer, without the physical courage to enable him to enter any army, and without the moral courage to enable him to do right as a citizen. One Supreme Judge elect was a Captain in the rebel Army, and another one was a rebel bummer and camp-follower. The Superintendent elect of the Free Schools was a reverend clergyman who believed in the divinity of human slavery, and sympathized with the rebellion, but lacked the nerve to give the cause his active assistance."

THE PROSCRIPTION OF TRADERS.

The Columbia (S. C.) Union-Herald, a Republican paper, has this sensible paragraph: "A subscriber asks us why we do not advise Republicans to trade only with Republicans, as the Republican trade which comes to Columbia is worth as much, or more than all the trade of Democrats in the articles of food. We have no doubt that a number of the Democrats who are most prominent in the proscription movement might be ruined by the withdrawal of Republican custom, but we do not advise such retaliation. We buy where we can buy best and we don't ask a man about his politics. We leave that to narrow-minded bigots. Let our Republican friends pursue the even tenor of their ways. By the end of next week the bitterest Democrat in the State will submit to circumstances, and the query 'Where do you buy your meat?' will be answered by 'Wherever it is cheapest.'"

THE FINANCES.

Congressman Herr Smith, of Pennsylvania, writes: "Under the present financial policy the Government has prospered. The public debt has been reduced $665,298,915 30 since 1866, and money can be borrowed at four and a half per cent., whereas in 1860 Buchanan's Administration was unable to obtain a loan at less than twelve per cent. The highest act of heroism on the part of this Government, next to the crushing out of the rebellion, was the imposition of a tax upon ourselves, by means of which the credit and the honor of the nation was raised to the very highest pinnacle of grandeur. We voluntarily paid an income tax to preserve the life of the country, and repealed it as soon as the exigency which called it into existence had passed. We are now respected throughout the world, and the honor thereof is due alone to the Republican Party."

NOT TO BE TRUSTED.

The address of the Alabama Republican State Committee contains this forcible paragraph: "The enemies of our country's life but a few short years ago, cannot at this day be trusted to uphold our nation's honor. The party that has been dragged along after the Republican Party in its march to human liberty for all, cannot be elevated to the post of honor, and put to guard that liberty now that it has been obtained. The party that changes its professions and practices to suit the exigencies of different times and places, cannot be accepted as honest on the strength of empty promises and profuse denunciations of its opponents."

FOUR CENTS AN HOUR FOR WOMEN'S WORK.

A London newspaper of recent date printed the following advertisement: "Young lady required, who can write neatly and distinctly, to address circulars, &c. Hours, 9:30 to 7:30. Salary ten shillings per week. Apply, by letter only," &c. Here, then, is the magnificent chance for some young lady not born with a silver spoon in her mouth. She is not required to know several languages, to be a brilliant pianist, a sweet singer, an accomplished painter, but only to "write neatly and distinctly," for such a fragment of each day as ten hours, and for such splendid remuneration as ten shillings a week which is practically twopence per hour.

THE LOCAL CANVASS.

A FRAUDULENT CALL.

HOW TILDEN'S FRIENDS DECEIVE THE COUNTRY—THE NAMES OF MEN OF INSIGNIFICANT COMMERCIAL STANDING APPENDED TO THE LIST—CLERKS AND PORTERS AS FULL-BLOWN "BUSINESS" MEN.

The call issued yesterday morning to the business men of the United States in behalf of Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks, and signed by about two hundred names, purporting to be the names of New-York business men, turns out, upon investigation, to be one of the weakest and most dishonest tricks of the present Democratic canvass. It was gotten up by the Liberty Street Literary Bureau, the unsigned "calls" having been sent out from that place in large numbers among the various classes of business men in this City. It was intended as an offset to the call issued a few days ago, in which the leading business men of New-York, the representative houses in every branch of trade, signified their belief that the best interests of the country demanded the success of the Republican ticket. Comparisons of the signatures to the two calls will show clearly that the Liberty street call is not an offset to the Hayes and Wheeler call in any sense of the word. The ratio between them is about equal to the ratio between the light of a tallow-candle and the rays of the sun. Such of the signers of the Liberty street call as are known are men of inferior calibre, or men whose political preferences can readily be accounted for on other grounds than patriotic love of country. There are a few names of representative houses, and it is a noticeable fact that an attempt to spread has been made by printing twice the names of several firms, besides printing the names of the individuals composing those firms. The name of Lawrence Meyers & Co. appears twice; the firm name of Kelley & Alexander is reinforced by the name of J. B. Alexander, one of the firm: the name of M. Kalbfleisch's Sons appears, followed by the names of both the sons comprising the firm, A. M. Kalbfleisch and T. H. Kalbfleisch; Charles McFrey appears twice, and so also M. Folsom. The worst instance of this sort, however, is the publication of the names "Anson Phelps Stokes, of Phelps, Dodge & Co.;" "James Stokes, of Phelps, Dodge & Co.;" and "William E. Dodge, Jr., of Phelps, Dodge & Co." A great parade is made of the firm name "Phelps, Dodge & Co.," but it counts for little when it is known that neither of these gentlemen is an important member of the firm, and that the heads of the house have affixed their signatures to a call in favor of Hayes and Wheeler.

The paper was circulated largely in the Produce Exchange, the Cotton Exchange and the Stock Exchange. Those who read the list of names with this knowledge in mind, must have looked in vain for the names of merchants who are regarded as the leading men in those several Exchanges. Taking the Produce Exchange, with a membership of over 3,000, including some of the wealthiest and most respected citizens of New-York, there are less than half a dozen names of men who are at all prominent in the trades represented in that Exchange, and perhaps not one of the really great produce merchants of New-York is represented. Even members of the Exchange itself fail to recognize as familiar the names of many of the signers to that document. The truth of the matter is, that a majority of the Produce Exchange signers are the feeblest brokers that appear upon the floor, and that many of them are worthless speculators, who hang about ready for any job that will bring in a quick return with no outlay except that of capital that exists only on paper.

The Stock Exchange shows to even worse advantage. There are several names attached to the call which even men of the largest acquaintance in Wall street declare they never heard of before. The most of them are of that class commonly known as "curbstone," brokers. The Cotton Exchange appears with more names on the list of signers than either of the other public bodies. There are between forty and fifty names of Cotton Exchange men upon the list, and of this number fewer than ten are Northern men. Thirty-seven of them are natives of the South and avowed secessionists. Twelve are known to have been members of the Confederate Army, and others were interested in the war against the Union as blockade-runners. It is a fact also that the signers are not the representative men of the Exchange. On the contrary, the representative men absolutely refused their signatures. It is also a fact that the call was circulated in the Cotton Exchange by Southern men, all of whom are ex-rebels. These same gentlemen, it is stated, have been engaged during the week raising funds among other Southerners and Southern sympathizers to carry on the campaign in New-York. This is an interesting fact to contemplate in connection with Gov. Tilden's proclamation of Thursday last.

But there are a large number of names upon the list which are thoroughly bogus. Forty-nine names out of the 200 signers do not appear in the City Directories. There may be persons corresponding to these names, but they are of so slight importance in New-York that they escaped record at the hands of the Directory reporters. The circulation of these names as the names of representative business men in New-York was a deliberate, and at the same time a stupid attempt, to deceive the country. The general character of the call, however, is perhaps best shown by the following extract from the list of signers:

E. Henriques, No. 8 East Fifty-seventh street.
W. H. Davis, No. 69 West Forty-ninth street.
P. J. Brady, No. 140 Church street.
John Riarden, No. 140 Church street.
George W. Petit, No. 140 Church street.
J. P. Carstens, No. 140 Church street.
Thomas Humes, No. 140 Church street.
John McArdell, No. 140 Church street.
R. B. Morton, No. 140 Church street.
James C. Seymour, No. 140 Church street.
James F. Bruen, No. 140 Church street.
William Murphy, No. 140 Church street.
M. C. Crowley, No. 140 Church street.
L. Winters, No. 140 Church street.
E. Teller, No. 140 Church street.
Wellington Hackett, No. 140 Church street.
E. Kirby, No. 140 Church street.

It will be observed that there are fifteen signatures of what purport to be merchants and representative business men doing business at No. 140 Church street. The truth is that every one of these fifteen men, as well as the two whose names appear immediately before, are employes of H. B. Claflin & Co., whose establishment is at No. 140 Church street. There is not a prominent man in the list. Some are salesmen and some are porters, and one, John McArdell, is a boy under age. Not a member of the firm of H. B. Claflin & Co. affixed his name to the call.

The call was naturally an object of derision among the business men of New-York, and particularly among the members of the Exchanges. The question as to which side the moneyed men of the City are on was pretty thoroughly decided in the Stock and Gold Exchanges yesterday. The vote which was taken at the Stock Exchange, the polls being open till 3 o'clock, was—Hayes and Wheeler, 393; Tilden and Hendricks, 204. In the Gold Room the vote was 91 to 65 in favor of Hayes and Wheeler.

DISTINGUISHED REPEATERS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In the manifesto published by the Sun and World this morning, signed by distinguished merchants and others, the names of Anson Phelps Stokes, Charles D. Dickey, James M. Brown, J. B. Alexander, and others appear twice. We have too good an opinion of them to think they mean to vote as repeaters, but this is the way Democratic majorities are manufactured.

REPUBLICAN VOTER.

NEW-YORK, Friday, Nov. 3, 1876.

TILDEN'S CONFEDERATE FRIENDS.

Among the "patriots" assembled with Gov. Tilden on the reviewing stand on Thursday evening was the ex-Confederate General, Joe Johnston, who, wearing an overcoat of approved gray, stood immediately behind the Democratic aspirant for the Presidency, and was somewhat "lionized"—at any rate, Gov. Tilden's Secretary was at great pains to furnish his name for publication to the reporters present on the occasion.

REPUBLICAN RALLY IN YONKERS.

The last Republican rally of the campaign in Yonkers came off in Washburn Hall, in that city, last evening. The hall, which has a very large seating capacity, was completely filled, and the seats reserved for ladies were all occupied. Previous to the opening of the meeting there was a parade of the various Hayes and Wheeler campaign organizations. Mr. James Stewart presided, and among the list of Vice-Presidents were John K. Myers, President of the Pacific Fire Insurance Company, of this City; Charles R. Otis, and Lyman Cobb. Some stirring campaign songs were sung by a glee club, after which addresses touching the principal questions involved in the canvass were delivered by Hon. James R. Angel, the Republican candidate for the Assembly from the Third District of Westchester County, and Mr. William Allen Butler. Both speakers ably and clearly expounded the principles of the Republican platform, and eulogized Gov. Hayes. The meeting adjourned at a late hour, with hearty cheers for the Republican candidates.

MORE OF ELY'S HISTORY.

CONTINUATION OF THE DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE'S RECORD AS A TWEED SUPERVISOR—RECORD FOR 1869 AND 1870.

The transcripts from the minutes of the Board of Supervisors during 1868, which we published yesterday, show that Mr. Ely, the Tammany candidate for Mayor, was present at many of them where enormous sums of money were voted away, and that he voted to pass most of the fraudulent bills and voted against others. The negative votes, however, are few. The annexed record for 1869 and 1870, shows that Mr. Ely was absent from meetings where the worst of the frauds were committed, but as he attended others where the minutes of the meetings were read, he must have been fully informed of what was done:

Jan. 7, 1869—Regular meeting. Mr. Ely not present. Board organized, committees were appointed, annual department estimates were received, large amounts of personal taxes remitted, and bills of Ring tradesmen and others to the amount of $199,446 were presented, referred, reported back, and passed.

Feb. 13—Regular meeting. Mr. Ely not present. Bills of Ring tradesmen to the amount of $329,924 were passed in the usual way; two leases for armories at a rental of $14,000 each were authorized; a resolution authorizing the Controller to pay the bills of the "Manufacturing Stationers" on the certificate of the clerk of the board, and an ordinance appropriating for various purposes nearly six million dollars, were on motion of Mr. Tweed, duly passed.

April 19—Mr. Ely not present. Ring tradesmen's bills, aggregating $343,989, were passed at this meeting by the customary process.

May 18—Mr. Ely not present. At this meeting an ordinance directing that additional means be provided for fitting up the new County Court-house at a cost of $600,000 was passed; also an ordinance appropriating $100,000 to provide means for constructing a fire-proof roof to the Hall of Records; also a resolution directing the Controller to pay the salaries of the Sheriff's employes from Jan. 1, at rates to be fixed by the Sheriff.

May 31—Regular meeting. Mr. Ely not present. This was a field day for fraud. After numerous smaller swindles had been run through the mill, the following enormous sums were ordered to be paid to the usual favorites: For furniture, printing, repairs, safes, &c., $1,157,143; for repairs to armories $218,848; for new County Court-house, $416,318; for stationery, $23,024; to J. Monaghan, for "repairs to books," $8,928; in all amounting to $2,-829,262.

July 5—Regular meeting. Mr. Ely not present. Ring tradesmen's bills and appropriation for armories, aggregating $1,098,762 were run through in the usual way; and salary of Counsel to the Board of Supervisors was fixed at $10,000 per year.

Sept. 17—Special meeting. Mr Ely not present. Rule suspended to receive Report of Committee on Tax Levy for 1869, which was passed at same meeting; two items of which were: Armories and drill rooms, $1,450,000; contingencies for different departments, $145,200. Additional appropriations for various purposes were made, amounting to $313,836. Sheriff's bills for July and August, $23,802; County Clerk's bills, $11,478; bills from Monaghan for repairing books, $10,803, were all received and allowed at this meeting.

Nov. 24—Special meeting; call signed by Mr. Ely. Mr. Ely present. Minutes of last two meetings read and approved. No dissenting vote. Mr. Ely voted in favor of the following resolutions: To pay Terence Smith, Isaiah Rynders, Dennis Leary, and thirty-one others $103 50 each for services in Court of Oyer and Terminer from Sept. 1 to Nov. 19; to pay bills for advertising to a large number of obscure newspapers. On the following resolutions there was no dissenting vote: To pay Ingersoll, Miller, Keyser, and Garvey, $458,906; Roe and Seymour & Co., for printing, &c., $44,874; Sheriff's bills, $28,441; authorizing County Clerk to appoint six additional recording clerks at $1,200 each; remitting personal taxes on valuation of $2,161,300.

Dec. 27—Special meeting; Mr. Ely signed call, and was present. Mr. Ely voted in favor of each of the following resolutions: Fixing salary of clerks in Marine Court, Chief Clerk at $4,000 Deputy Clerk at $3,500, First Assistant Clerk at $3,000, Second Assistant Clerk at $2,500; to pay seventy-thee persons $250 to $500 each for services at three courts during naturalization; to pay Keyser, Miller, Garvey, Monaghan, Roe $622,511; County Clerk's bills, $14,448; Sheriff's bills, $6,635; Tracy's bill for County Jail supplies for November, $2,887; making additional appropriations for 1869, $29,311; fixing salaries of attendants at Supreme Court, $2,500 per year; allowing additional clerk and interpreter to Third District (Police) Court, $1,200 per year; fixing compensation of Surrogate and his assistants, viz: Surrogate, per year, $10,000; Chief Clerk, per year, $6,000; Assistant Clerk, $2,500; Probate Clerk, $4,000; Assistant Probate Clerk, $2,000, and forty-nine others at aggregate per year of $69,900. No negative vote was given on the following resolutions: To pay bills from Ingersoll, Garvey, Miller, Keyser, for armory repairs, $128,687; for Armory leases, to the amount of $65,000 per year in all; fixing salaries of Police Magistrates' clerks at $3,000 each, and allowing an extra clerk to two of them at $2,500 each; fixing salaries of Recorder and City Judge at $15,000 each,

Jan. 1—Regular meeting. Mr. Ely not present. Board organized. Appropriations for 1870 passed; an additional appropriation for armories made to the amount of $300,000.

Resolutions passed fixing salaries of William M. Tweed, Jr., George W. Blunt, Jr., J. B. Fellows, Assistant District Attorneys, at $10,000 each.

PRELIMINARY VOTING.

An event occurred in Wall street yesterday which is eminently calculated to settle the question as to which political party the financial and business interests of the country preponderably lean toward. A vote for the Presidential candidates was taken in the Stock and Gold Exchanges. Of the 1,083 members of the Stock Exchange, 597 were present yesterday and voted, with the following result:

For Hayes	393
For Tilden	204
Majority for Hayes	189
Hayes' percentage of the total vote	65.8
Tilden's percentage of the total vote	34.2

For Hayes	91
For Tilden	65
Majority for Hayes	26

At the store of James McCreery & Co., Broadway and Eleventh street, a vote for Presidential candidates stood thus: Hayes, 54; Tilden, 41; Cooper, 3.

A vote taken yesterday on the train from Philadelphia on the Pennsylvania Railroad gave Hayes 309 and Tilden 110.

Of 316 passengers on the 7:15 train from Philadelphia yesterday, 85 voted for Tilden and Hendricks and 231 for Hayes and Wheeler.

A ballot was taken in the office of a leading insurance company yesterday, with the following result: Hayes, 23; Tilden, 7.

A vote was taken among the customers of Gould's restaurant yesterday, which gave Hayes 210 and Tilden 189.

A vote was taken yesterday among the employes of Lord & Taylor's Broadway store, with the following result: For Hayes and Wheeler, 147; for Tilden and Hendricks, 107, and for Cooper and Cary, 1.

Yesterday a vote was taken on the 6 P. M. train from Philadelphia by two gentlemen, one a Democrat the other a Republican, with the following result: Hayes, 307; Tilden, 103. After this had been done it was proposed to take a vote of the ladies on the train, which was also done. The result was: Hayes, 123; Tilden, 40.

NOT IN FAVOR OF TILDEN.

THE SENTIMENT IN THE NEW-YORK PRODUCE EXCHANGE.

A paper was circulated on the New-York Produce Exchange yesterday at the instance of Mr. August Belmont, indorsing Tilden and Hendricks, but the signers were few and far between. About twenty minutes before the close of the Exchange, Mr. Paul Babcock started the following paper for the signatures of those not indorsing Mr. Tilden. The rush to sign it was so great that not one in five who desired to do so could get an opportunity. The following names were obtained in a short time:

We, the undersigned, do not think Mr. Samuel J. Tilden a safe man for President of the United of America, and do not advise our fellow citizens to vote for him, as we fear, should he be elected, that we may be called on to pay the "Rebel Claims."

MR. ELLIOT C. COWDIN ACCEPTS.

A GOOD NOMINATION FOR ASSEMBLY IN THE ELEVENTH DISTRICT—HE YIELDS TO THE URGENT REQUEST OF PROMINENT CITIZENS.

Mr. Elliot C. Cowdin has yielded to the pressure brought upon him, and consented to accept the nomination for Member of Assembly for the Eleventh District of this City. For once, at least, our leading citizens have a candidate of their own, as will be seen by the following letters urging Mr. Cowdin's acceptance.

NEW-YORK, Oct. 30, 1876.

Elliot C. Cowdin, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: We are sure we cannot be mistaken in our conviction that the affairs of this City have suffered greatly from the want of more members of the State Legislature who have worthily represented its higher sentiments and its vast business interests, and there has never been a time when such representation has been more important than it is likely to be at the next session. If a high and broad field of public usefulness, where honorable distinction may be won, were the only reasons why a citizen should take upon himself the labor and expense of a canvass for the New-York Assembly, these reasons would fully exist; but beyond all these are the higher considerations of public duty which hardly leave men of adequate means and capacity the liberty of declining when their fellow-citizens call them to such public service.

It is plain that our Municipal affairs can never be much improved until our first citizens shall set an example by giving them their time and talk in the discharge of legislative functions. In looking about for a candidate for the office of Assemblyman from the Eleventh Assembly District of this City, for whom, with such views, we could vote, and who, upon such a theory of public duty, we could call upon to make the necessary sacrifice of private interests for the public good, we have selected yourself, and we venture to hope that if the nomination shall be tendered you, you will in the same spirit decide to accept it. And we are, with great respect, your obedient servants,

D. B. Eaton,	Joseph H. Choate,
Jackson S. Schultz,	Theodore Roosevelt,
Lewis L. Delafield,	Sinclair Tousey.

Elliot C. Cowdin, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: The undersigned, merchants and business men of the City of New-York, have heard with pleasure that you are being urged to accept the nomination for member of Assembly. Your familiarity with public affairs and energy of character, coupled with your acknowledged ability, induce us to express the earnest hope that you will consent to be a candidate, feeling assured that your election will be certain.

We make this appeal as business men, having solely in view the best interests of the City, for never were the services of gentlemen like yourself more needed in the Legislature than at the present time. We are your obedient servants,

W. E. Dodge,	Cyrus W. Field,
Isaac Sherman,	David Dows,
B. G. Arnold,	James W. Elwell,
James Seligman,	Benjamin B. Sherman,

THE COUNTY NOMINATIONS.

LETTERS OF ACCEPTANCE FROM MR. WILLIAM H. GEDNEY, MR. WILLIAM H. STINER, AND DR. B. A. BARRY—MR. GOEBEL DECLINES.

Hon. Benjamin K. Phelps, Chairman of the Republican County Committee, has received a communication from Mr. William H. Gedney accepting the Republican nomination for Sheriff, and also communications from Mr. William H. Stiner and Dr. B. A. Barry, accepting, respectively, the nomination for Coroner tendered to them. The following is the full text of the letters:

NO. 143 WEST FORTIETH STREET, NEW-YORK, Nov. 2, 1876.

Hon. B. K. Phelps, Chairman of the Republican County Convention.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your note of the 1st. inst., informing me of the action of the Republican County Convention held on Monday evening last, in placing so unanimously my name before the citizens of this City and County, for the office of Sheriff.

It is a position, Sir, I have not sought. It is an office of great responsibility, one also of honor. I accept the nomination so kindly tendered. My greatest desire, however, is the success of the general and State ticket; but should I be elected, my first and greatest duty will be to introduce many much-needed reforms in the administration of that office. Very truly yours. WILLIAM H. GEDNEY.

NO. 207 WEST THIRTY-THIRD STREET, NEW-YORK, Nov. 2, 1876.

Hon. Benjamin K. Phelps, Chairman Republican County Convention:

MY DEAR SIR: I beg leave to acknowledge receipt of your kind favor of yesterday, in which you inform me that the convention over which you presided has unanimously nominated me as one of the candidates for Coroner. In accepting this flattering mark of distinction bestowed upon me by the great Republican Party of this county, I am not insensible of the great honor conferred upon an humble but ardent worker in the Republican ranks, especially as my name is associated upon the ticket with such eminent statesmen as the gallant Gen. John A. Dix, Henry J. Scudder, Charles A. Peabody, &c. If my private and late official reputation, and my slender means can contribute but a mite toward the success of our noble standard-bearers, Hayes and Wheeler, Morgan and Rogers, even a defeat for the office for which the convention has honored me with the candidature, will amply repay any sacrifice my running may involve.

With the most ardent wishes for our general success, and the assurances of my distinguished consideration, I have the honor to remain yours respectfully and truly, WILLIAM H. STINER.

NEW-YORK, CITY, Nov. 2, 1876.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of Nov. 1 informing me of my nomination for Coroner by the Republican County Convention. The nomination is an entire surprise to me. I did not seek it, and would not have allowed my named to have been used had I known it was to be suggested.

At this late day to decline might embarrass your convention, and wishing to do anything to advance the interests of the Republican Party by the election of Messrs. Hayes and Morgan I accept the nomination. I am, sir, yours obediently,

B. A. BARRY.

Hon. BENJAMIN K. PHELPS, Chairman.

Mr. Phelps has received the following letter from Mr. L. S. Goebel declining to accept the Republican nomination for Justice of the Marine Court:

NO. 254 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK, Nov. 2, 1876.

Hon. Benjamin K. Phelps, Chairman Republican Nominating Convention:

DEAR SIR: In response to your notification of my nomination for Justice of the Marine Court by the Republican County Convention, I hasten to say that I most respectfully decline to accept the same. Yours truly, L. S GOEBEL.

WATCHERS AT THE POLLS.

Superintendent Walling was directed yesterday by the Police Board to issue an order to the force to the effect that the Election laws required that "watchers" at the polls, in the interest of the different candidates, are to be afforded facilities to witness the counting of the votes from within the railings at the polling places. The Inspectors of Election and Poll Clerks were notified to be at their posts of duty at 6 A. M. on election day.

THE GERMAN COUNTY TICKET.

CANDIDATES FOR ALDERMEN AT LARGE NOMINATED—THE CANDIDATE FOR SHERIFF ACCEPTS.

The German-American Independent Conference Committee, which was given power on Thursday evening to nominate two candidates for Aldermen at large, made the nominations yesterday, selecting as their candidates Messrs. Henry Clausen, Jr., and Robert G. Cornell. Mr. Clausen was elected to the Assembly in 1873, as an Independent Democrat, from the Twentieth Assembly District, but was kept out of his seat by Tammany Hall until near the close of the session, under the fraudulent pretext that he had not received a sufficient number of votes. He was appointed a member of the Board of Aldermen by Mayor Havemeyer, in 1874, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Alderman Peter Gilsey. He is President of the Brewers' Association of this State, was one of the committee of twenty-five appointed by the Independent Citizens' mass-meeting at Cooper Institute, which nominated Controller Green for Mayor, and was Chairman of the joint sub-committees of the Anti-Tammany, Independent Citizens' and German-American Independent organizations who recently met at the Astor House to form a combination ticket against Tammany Hall.

Mr. Robert G. Cornell is a well-known Republican. He is the senior member of the firm of Cornell & Moore, wholesale butchers, in Washington Market; is Vice President of the North River Bank, and was one of the committee of twenty-five appointed at the Green mass-meeting.

Major George W. Sauer, the candidate for Sheriff nominated by the German-American Independent County Convention, said last evening that his nomination was a surprise to him, but that he had accepted it in good faith, and, while he had no expection of being elected, he would put forth every effort to poll the largest possible vote. His nomination will take away a large German vote from the Tammany Hall candidate. He is the first German who has been nominated for Sheriff, and his countrymen will probably do all that they can to insure his having a good support.

BROOKLYN CAMPAIGN NOTES.

Mr. S. B. Chittenden, whose candidacy in the Third Congressional District has evoked so much enthusiasm among the best men in the district, is doing splendid work all over the city for the whole ticket. His majority will be greater next Tuesday than it was two years ago.

A large transparency bearing the name of Gen. Dakin as the Democratic candidate for Congress in the Third District was carried to its destination yesterday in an undertaker's wagon. The incident is suggestive, and foreshadows the decent political burial which the voters of the Third District will give Gen. Dakin next week.

Alderman William A. Murtha, of the Ninth Ward, who seeks re-election on Tuesday, proved himself to be a willing servant of McLaughlin during the past year. He never could have obtained his present position had it not been for Republican votes. Republicans, and all who oppose the Kingsley-McLaughlin Ring, should take care that Mr. Murtha is retired to private life on Tuesday.

Republicans should remember, before casting their votes for Alderman in the Twenty-fifth Ward on Tuesday, that the election of a Democrat will help the Ring to get that $500,000 which the Democratic Legislature of 1875 authorized the Board of Aldermen to appropriate for the completion of the Hempstead Reservoir. Tax-payers generally are of opinion that they have been fleeced sufficiently for that unfinished work.

There is not the slightest chance of electing a Republican in the First Assembly District, and the candidacy of Mr. Rome will only have the effect of increasing the chances for the election of John Mr. Clancy, a henchman of the Boss, who does not rise even to the ordinary level of a ward politician. Republicans should not waste their votes on Rome, when by supporting Hon Daniel Bradley, who is a thoroughly honest man, they can defeat one of the most subservient tools of the Ring.

Boss McLaughlin gave the people ex-Controller Evan M. Johnson and ex-City Treasurer Sprague, both of whom were apparently respectable men when nominated, and both of whom proved defaulters. He now seeks to give to Brooklyn for Controller Mr. William Burrell, about whom the people know nothing. Mr. Ripley Ropes, the Republican and Independent Democratic candidate for Controller, is known to every voter in Brooklyn as the author of several valuable reforms in the City Government, and the enemy of Ring rule in every shape.

WESTCHESTER CAMPAIGN NOTES.

A large Republican meeting at Irving Hall, Tarrytown, last evening, was addressed by Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, who delivered a vigorous and telling speech on the issues of the campaign.

Ex-Judge Dittenhoefer is announced to address a German Republican meeting in Washburn Hall, Yonkers, on Monday night next. The speech will be in German.

The largest Republican torchlight procession that has taken place in Westchester County during the present campaign, came off on Thursday evening at Yonkers. The following organizations took part in the parade: Young Men's Hayes and Wheeler Club, Nodine Hill Hayes and Wheeler Association. Second Ward Hayes and Wheeler Club, the Colored Boys in Blue of Yonkers, and the Mount Vernon Hayes and Wheeler Club. The streets were illuminated and fully 700 men were in line. The demonstration was a perfect success.

HOME WORK.

George W. Da Cunha, candidate for Congress in the Ninth District, has been indorsed by the Independent Germans and the Regular German Organization.

The Republican Clubs of Newark, N. J., held a large parade last evening. About twenty-five hundred men were in line and numbers of houses were handsomely illuminated.

The Westchester Boys in Blue had a parade at King's Bridge on Thursday evening, and a mass-meeting was held in the large ball, which was addressed by Hons. J. H. Platt, of Virginia; Isaac Dayton, J. R. Angel, E. C. Lee, and E. H. Foster.

A large Republican mass-meeting was held last evening in Keplar Hall, Jersey City, under the auspices of the First District Campaign Club. Hon. Courtlandt Parker, of Newark, and Hon. William A. Lewis, of Jersey City, delivered addresses.

The members of the German Republican Club met last evening at the Harmonic Rooms, No. 141 Essex street, and indorsed the regular Republican ticket, State and national, and pledged themselves to do all in their power to secure the election of Hayes, Morgan, and Dix.

The last grand rally of the Boys in Blue of the Eighth Senatorial District will take place at Terrace Garden, Fifty-eighth street, this evening. The following eminent speakers are expected to address the meeting: Major Gen. Francis C. Barlow, Major Gen. Lloyd Aspinwall, Major Gen. Joshua T. Owen, Major Z. K. Pangborn, Lieut. Gov. John C. Robinson, Hon. Levi P. Morton, Hon. Salem H. Wales, Gen. Edward Jardine, and Hon. Hamlin Babcock.

THE REGISTRATION IN NEW JERSEY.

It is alleged that over one hundred names have been fraudulently registered in the town of Orange.

The registry in Jersey City yesterday swells the total to an unusual size. The total vote last Fall was 13,817. The registry this year numbers 21,156 names.

The registry in Paterson numbers 8,293. The total vote of the city in 1868 was 5,298, and in 1872, 6,3.7.

THE SCARCITY OF CROTON WATER.

Commissioner Campbell has issued the following notice to consumers of Croton water:

"To prevent any waste of Croton water during the present scarcity, washing carriages, street cars, or vehicles of any kind, by means of hose or pipe, throwing a jet of water, will be strictly prohibited, and in every instance of a violation of this order, the water supply will be immediately shut off."

This order is to remain in force until revoked.

THE PENNSVILLE PUGILISTS SENTENCED.

Weeden, Goodwin, and Collyer, convicted at Salem, N. J., of manslaughter, in aiding in the killing of the prize-fighter, Koster, alias Walker, were yesterday sentenced to six years' imprisonment each in the Trenton Penitentiary. The remaining two prisoners, Clark and Neary, were sentenced to two years' imprisonment.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

A fire broke out in St. Hyacinth yesterday morning, in a stable on the premises of E. Lariviere & Frere's planing and machine shop. The surrounding buildings were all of wood, and the wind, which at the time was almost blowing a gale, spread the fire with such rapidity that the whole eastern part of the town remaining intact from the fire of Sept. 3, was almost immediately a mass of flames. Lariviere & Frere's insurance is $6,000; the other insurances are not known. About twenty buildings were burned. The fire is under control. The insurance losses are $10,000, in the St. Adacona, Royal Canadian, and Niagara Mutual.

A fire Thursday night in the card-room of the Minot Manufacturing Company's mill at Eufield, Mass., caused a loss of $3,000. The property is fully insured.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

Christopher Sherlock, aged fourteen, was last night stabbed in the back with a pen-knife by a playmate named Daniel Hanlon, in Roosevelt street.

A boy six years old, named George Trimberger, of No. 920 Third avenue, was run over and killed last evening by a Third avenue car, at Fifty-fifth street.

The steamers Bristol and Providence, of the Fall River Line, leave this City at 4:30 P. M. instead of 5, as heretofore. The fare to Boston has been reduced to $4.

The New-York Bible Society distributed by gift and sale during October, 4,823 Bibles and Testaments among 3,456 families, 231 vessels, and 9,172 emigrants at Castle Garden.

Mr. Gordon W. Burnham's bronze statue of Daniel Webster will be unveiled on its pedestal, in the Central Park, on Evacuation Day. Mayor Wickham will receive the statue on behalf of the City.

Permission was granted yesterday by the Police Board to the Irish societies to parade on Sunday at the funeral of Thomas Foley, one of the escaped Fenians, but no bands will be allowed in the procession.

Hon. F. S. DeHass, United States Consul at Jerusalem, will lecture on "The Land of Israel" before the Young Men's Hebrew Association, at their rooms, corner Forty-second street and Sixth avenue, this evening.

Yesterday afternoon, about 5:15 o'clock, another explosion occurred on Diamond Reef, between the Battery and Governor's Island. Gen. Newton had charge of the whole operations, which were successful.

James E. Ford, brother of Patrick Ford, editor of the Irish World, and connected with the editorial staff of that journal since its foundation, died yesterday at his residence, No. 114 Willoughby street, Brooklyn. He was a native of Boston, and aged twenty-nine years.

A stated meeting of the New-York Historical Society will be held at the library, in Second avenue corner of Eleventh street, on Tuesday next, at 8 P. M. Prof. Asa Bird Gardner, LL. D., of the United States Military Academy, West Point, will read a paper on "The Uniforms of the American Army."

Articles of agreement have been signed by Messrs. C. McClelan and De Noielle, both of New-York, for a twenty-mile bycicle race for the sum of $250 and the championship of America. The race to take place at the American Institute Hall, Sixty-third street and Third avenue, on Nov. 29, at 8 o'clock P. M.

The annual report of the Young Men's Association of St. Peter's Church, shows receipts during the past year of $551 49, and expenditures of $512 30. The association appeals for aid in the work of relieving the poor and suffering. Contributions may be sent to Rev. Alfred B. Beach, D. D., No. 346 West Twentieth street.

This evening being the last of St. Stephen's Church fair, all the articles upon which chances have been taken will be disposed of, and the remainder will be sold at auction. During the evening a valuable building lot, donated to the Sisters of Charity, will be disposed of by raffle. The fair has been very successful.

James Wilson, who claims to reside at Kingston, N. Y., was arrested by Patrolman McIlhargy, of the Steam-boat Squad, last evening, having in his possession a valise containing property valued at $150 belonging to Edson T. Grant, of Pennsylvania, which he had stolen from the Merchants' Hotel, in Cortlandt street.

BROOKLYN.

The suit of Kingsley & Keeney against the city was continued yesterday before the Referees, and the entire day was taken up in the cross-examination of Chief Engineer Adams by Mr. Parsons. No new facts were developed.

Francis Gallie, aged thirteen years, who was taken from a New-York hospital a short time ago by Dr. Soprohon, of No. 100 South Tenth street, E. D., and adopted, was sent on an errand Thursday morning and has not since returned.

Mary Ann Wilson, aged thirty years, was yesterday found in Atlantic, near Classon avenue, bleeding freely from a wound in the face. Being under the influence of liquor, it is supposed that she received her injury by falling on the pavement. She claimed, however, that she had been assaulted by two men.

The labor performed in the various departments of the Brooklyn Post Office last month, as reported by Postmaster Talbot, is as follows: Letters delivered by carriers, 403,740; postal-cards delivered, 79,456; local letters delivered, 97,906; local postal-cards delivered, 770,679; letters collected, 295,-990. The expenses for the month were $6,357 42.

LONG ISLAND.

There is yet considerable small-pox in Astoria, although the disease does not appear to be of a very virulant type.

On Thursday evening, as the 5:30 train on the Southern Railroad from Hunter's Point was leaving the depot at South Oyster Bay, a large stone was thrown through one of the windows of the rear car, smashing the glass and seriously cutting the face of a gentleman seated near. The stone was sent with such force that it passed through a window on the opposite side of the car. The brakeman on the rear platform recognized the rascal who threw the stone, as he disappeared in the woods, as a boy named Hendrickson.

NEW-JERSEY.

The body of an unknown woman was found yesterday floating in Newark Bay, near the Central Railroad bridge.

John Irving, who pleaded guilty to a charge of burglary, was yesterday sentenced in the Hudson County Sessions to six years' imprisonment.

Ex-Gov. Ward was taken suddenly ill in the National State Bank of Newark, on Thursday. He was removed to his home. He is said to have suffered from an attack of vertigo.

The body of the man killed Thursday evening by a Midland Railroad train at West End, has been recognized as that of Thomas Gordon, an inmate of the Hudson County Alms-house.

In the trial of Oschwald and Ryan for the murder of Officer Brock in Newark the whole of yesterday was consumed by the argument of counsel. The case will be given to the jury to-morrow.

An unknown colored man was found lying in front of the railroad station at Shelton last evening. He was suffering from a wound in his right side which he had inflicted on himself with a pistol. He was removed to St. Michael's Hospital, Newark, where his wounds are regarded as fatal.

William Williams and Louis Langan became engaged in an altercation in a Hoboken saloon yesterday, during which Williams drew a pistol and fired at Langan. The latter, with a blow, changed the direction in which the pistol was presented and the ball passed through Williams' hand. A warrant was issued for Williams' arrest.

Patrick Devine, John Macklay, and Frank Gately, convicted of having taken Annie Jackson, a colored girl, from the street and forced her into a building on Newark avenue, Jersey City, where an outrage on her was attempted, were yesterday respectively sentenced by Judge Hoffman to five, three, and four years' imprisonment in the State Prison.

AN EXTRAORDINARY EXHIBIT.

A rather extraordinary schedule was filed in the office of the Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas yesterday, in the matter of the assignment of Samuel Schifter, Gabriel H. Schifter, and Louis G. Schifter, to Jonas B. Jacobs. Their statement of assets is appended:

ASSETS.

	Nominal Value.	Actual Value.
Bills receivable and open accounts	$70,716 73	$16 42
Real and personal estate, S. Schiffer, & Nephews	19,450 00	2,670 00
Real and personal property, S. Schiffer	286,128 03	1,726 00
Total	$376,294 76	$4,412 42

The liabilities of the firm amount to $433,909 97. A bond in the sum of $10,000 has been ordered from the Assignee. Some of the items among the assets are worth nothing. Thus, one entry is: "About 16 lots on Boulevard, 121st and 122d streets, valued at $70,000; subject to a mortgage, of which validity is disputed on the ground of usury, $50,000; interest, taxes, &c., assessments, $9,750; total indebtedness on property, $59,750; nominal value of property, $10,250; actual value, doubtful. Two lots between 61st and 62d streets, on Fifth avenue; value, $65,000; subject to a mortgage, $51,333; interest about $1,686 65; taxes, 1875, $990; total of indebtedness, $54,009 65; nominal value of property, $10,990 35; actual value, nothing. One-fifth interest in about 56 lots, King's Bridge Road, 186th street; value, $45,000; mortgages, interest, taxes, &c., $40,000; nominal value of share, $1,000; real value, nothing. Among the liabilities is a claim of $241,-811 25 due to S. Schiffer & Nephews, for which there is no security. A schedule is also given of the property of S. Schiffer & Nephews. From this it appears that they had over half a million of dollars worth of real estate on hand, all of which is heavily mortgaged. In many of the cases the property is under foreclosure. One piece of property valued at $20,000 has $19,980 of incumbrances on it. Among the personal assets is the loan of $241,811 25 cash to S. & J. Schiffer, for which there is no security.

A CLEVER CONFIDENCE WOMAN.

ARREST OF MRS. MARY A. GIBSON IN JERSEY CITY—HER EXTENSIVE OPERATIONS—SEVERAL GENTLEMEN VICTIMIZED IN LARGE SUMS.

Considerable excitement has been created in Jersey City by the arrest of Mrs. Mary A. Gibson, alias Mrs. Hanson, on a charge of carrying on extensive confidence operations. Two years ago she presented herself at the hat establishment of Isaac Parmenter, bearing from a friend of Mr. Parmenter in Philadelphia a letter of introduction. The letter explained that she was largely interested in property in New-York, and desired his aid and advice in adjusting affairs connected with it. She told Mr. Parmenter that she had learned from New-York City officials that some lots on Ninety-second street had been sold for taxes, and $150 was needed to release them. She had $100, and Mr. Parmenter lent her the remainder. She subsequently told him that she had fallen heir to a large inheritance, valued at $700,000, in Germany; that a wealthy relative, Rev. Francis Xavier Wolff, Bishop of Baden, had died, leaving her sole heir to his vast estate; that Cardinal McCloskey had taken charge of the estate for her, but that the want of ready money prevented her from prosecuting her claims; that she needed cash to pay the expenses attending her identification, &c. Upon these representations she succeeded in victimizing Mr. Parmenter to the extent of about $500. Her importunities became so frequent that Parmenter finally mistrusted her, and inquiries concerning her in Philadelphia discovered that she was a notorious confidence operator. He endeavored to procure her indictment in Philadelphia, but the Grand Jury refused to act, as her operations had been confined to Jersey City. She was not seen in Jersey City till last Summer. At the Union Hill Schuetzen Park she became acquainted with Judge F. T. Farrier, Horace, his brother, and Samuel and John Garretson. She told to them the story of her German wealth, and became quite a favorite with them. They drove out with her frequently and took her to all the points of interest in Hudson County. She succeeded in fleecing Samuel Garretson by means of a power of attorney authorizing him to act as her agent in the management of her large estate. In sums varying from five hundred to one hundred dollars, he lent her the aggregate of about fifteen hundred dollars. She placed in the hands of Horace Farrier two heavily-sealed yellow envelopes bearing the address of Cardinal McCloskey. "These," she said, "contain the papers which entitle me to my vast inheritance in Germany. They are, as you see, addressed to Cardinal McCloskey, and, of course, I have not dared to open them. I leave them with you, so that if in my travelings I should be killed, my property will be secure to the dear friends I leave behind me." Farrier accepted them, and regarding them as ample security for whatever moneys he might advance, subsequently advanced her $1,500. When the envelopes were opened yesterday they were each found to contain a blank sheet of paper. On Thursday last Parmenter encountered the woman in Jersey City, and called the attention of the Police to the fact that he had been swindled by her. The true character of the woman was also represented to Mr. Garretson, and he learned from Cardinal McCloskey that no such woman had ever been heard of by him. Mr. Garretson went at once before Justice Keese, and a warrant was issued for her arrest. Inspector Murphy went to Philadelphia and found the woman living in good style at No. 2,330 Catharine street. She at first objected to leaving Pennsylvania without a requisition, but was finally prevailed upon to accompany the officer to Jersey City. She arrived there on Friday evening, and was locked up to await an examination.

THE JERSEY-CITY SCHOOL QUESTION.

The teachers employed in the Jersey-City schools met yesterday for consultation upon the question of closing the schools on Nov. 11, at which time the appropriation for the support of the schools for the year will have been expended. The new fiscal year will open Dec. 1. They decided to give their services between the dates mentioned gratuitously on condition that the Board of Finance and Board of Education will agree to use their best endeavors to secure legislation which will enable them to get their pay. The boards mentioned will probably agree to the compromise suggested, and the threatened necessity of closing the schools for three weeks will be avoided.

MALICIOUS YOUTHS.

Volleys of stones were thrown into the Patchogue, Long Island, train on the Long Island Southern Railroad, both on Tuesday and Wednesday, at South Oyster Bay. On the latter day one lady was severely injured. The train was stopped, and the passengers gave chase to the perpetrators of the outrage, and fired several shots after them, but they escaped. Yesterday morning Detective Schmidt arrested John Henderson and Maurice Weeks, aged respectively thirteen and sixteen years, as the guilty parties. They were sent to the House of Refuge.

TILDEN'S FRAUD ON THE BALLOT.

PREPARING TO REPEAT THROUGHOUT THE ENTIRE STATE THE TAMMANY FRAUDS OF 1868—THE DEMOCRATIC DESPERATION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ROCHESTER, Nov. 4.—The Democrats are resorting to the most desperate devices to carry the State. The election frauds of New-York City are evidently about to be repeated in all the large towns and cities in the interior of the State. This whole section is flooded with Democratic repeaters and illegal voters, and the local authorities seem powerless to deal with the intended fraud on the ballot. The registry here is something unheard of, and it is only too evident that immense frauds are to be attempted, and seemingly without any adequate means to prevent their success. The local committees are moving in the matter, however, and no effort will be spared to prevent the honest expression of the will of the people from being overridden by the tramps, repeaters, and vagabonds who have been colonized by Tilden's agents.

TILDEN'S MONEY IN WISCONSIN.

VOTES TO BE PURCHASED ON ELECTION DAY—INTENSE INDIGNATION AMONG ALL GOOD MEN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 4.—It has leaked out here, and is exciting intense indignation among all good men, that Tilden has sent a large amount of money, estimated at $25,000, into this city, to be used on election day to purchase votes. Tilden's financial manager in this State is Perry H. Smith. The Republicans are on the watch, and the conspiracy to carry Wisconsin by the corrupt use of money will be frustrated, and the conspirators are likely to be criminally prosecuted.

SAMPLE SCHEDULE OF CLAIMS.

SIXTEEN SLAVES MADE FREE BY THE EMANCIPATION ACT—THEIR ONCE OWNER PRESENTS HIS CLAIM IN A GEORGIA COURT OF LAW—THE NEXT STEP IS TO HAVE IT ALLOWED BY A DEMOCRATIC CONGRESS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SAVANNAH, Nov. 4.—Hon. Isaac M. Marsh, the person who filed the following schedule, is a lawyer, and was a judicial officer of this State. There were a great number of them filed in different parts of this State. This schedule is only a sample, and shows what may be expected with Tilden and a Democratic Congress.

STATE OF GEORGIA, CHATHAM COUNTY.

Before me, personally came Isaac M. Marsh, a resident of Savannah, Ga., at date, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says, he was in possession of and the lawful owner of the following-named slaves at the time they were emancipated and made free by the United States Government, to wit: One woman, Sarah, aged fifteen; one woman, Ellen, aged thirty-five, and four children, aged from three to twelve years; one woman, Amy, aged forty, and four children from three to fourteen years of age; one man, Charles, aged about forty-one years; one woman, Ellen, his wife, aged about sixty years; one woman, Isabella, aged about eighteen years; one woman, Rhino, aged about fifty-one years; one man, aged about sixty-one years. Total, sixteen.

ISAAC M. MARSH.

Sworn and subscribed to before me, this July 20, 1874. LEVI S. HART, Notary Public and ex officio Justice of the Peace for Chatham County, Georgia.

Recorded July 20, 1874.

GEORGIA, CHATHAM COUNTY, CLERK'S OFFICE, SUPERIOR COURT. }

I hereby certify the above and foregoing instrument of writing to be a true and perfect transcript of the original record, as taken from book Q. Q. Q. Q. of county record, folio No. 203. In testimony whereof, I set my official signature, and the seal of the Superior Court of said county, at Savannah, the fourth day of November, A. D., 1876.

HE WILL NEVER COUNT A FAIR VOTE.

REVOLUTIONARY SPEECH BY A DEMOCRATIC MEMBER OF CONGRESS—THE REAL FEELING THAT EXISTS AMONG SOUTHERN DEMOCRATS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 4.—At a Democratic meeting in Clarksburg, West Va., last night, Hon. Charles J. Faulkner, member of the House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress, made a revolutionary speech. He declared, in the course of his remarks, that if South Carolina, Louisiana and Florida were carried for Hayes and Wheeler, through the means now being used by the Government of the United States, he and his friend, Col. Wilson would never consent to the counting of the votes of these States; and as for his part, he would say now that he would die before he would consent to such a thing.

MICHIGAN GOOD FOR 20,000 MAJORITY.

AN INCREASE OF REPUBLICAN CONFIDENCE—THE BUSINESS MEN OF DETROIT—THE CLOSING MEETING OF THE CAMPAIGN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

DETROIT, Nov. 4.—The increase of Republican confidence and enthusiasm has been marked here to-day. Quite a number of prominent jobbing establishments have added their names to pledges to close their doors on election day and work at the polls for the Republican cause, and this afternoon a similar movement has been started among the leading retail establishments of the city. The agreement will be extensively signed. Chairman S. D. Bingham, of the Republican State Central Committee, telegraphs us to-day from Lansing, as follows: "Reports are in circulation that the Republican State Committee regards Michigan as doubtful. State for me that the canvass shows Michigan good for not less than 20,000 majority for Hayes and Wheeler." The last meeting of the campaign is taking place here to-night at Central Wigwam, where a large crowd is being addressed by Senator Ferry.

THE NEW-JERSEY CAMPAIGN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BORDENTOWN, Nov. 4.—The last grand Republican rally took place here to-day. An afternoon meeting was addressed with great eloquence and effect by Senator Frelinghuysen. Large delegations came from the country in wagons and on horseback. The farmers of the country turned out, and no such enthusiasm has been witnessed here since 1860. A large torch-light procession is now parading, and thousands are being addressed by Capt. A. J. Ricks, of Ohio, whose ten years' residence in Tennessee enables him to speak with great effect on the Southern question. The danger from Southern claims he presented elaborately. The Republicans of New Jersey are growing more confident every day of a victory next Tuesday.

REPUBLICAN TORCH-LIGHT PARADE IN PASSAIC—GREAT ENTHUSIASM MANIFESTED—HOW SECRETARY MORRILL'S SPEECH IS RECEIVED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PASSAIC, Nov. 4.—A Republican torch-light parade took place here this evening, with over 300 citizens and 50 horsemen in line, reinforced by about five hundred Hayes and Wheeler Guards from Paterson, with torches and uniforms. The Holland Republican banner was inscribed, "Deze Fun Niet te Koop" on one side, and in English on the other, "These can't be bought." Another banner read, "Our cause is just, succeed we must, as God is with the right." As the procession passed through the principal streets the ranks were increased by new accessions. The illuminations were very fine, especially at the houses of Mr. Roberts, Dr. R. A. Terhune, Mrs. Fritts, B. F. Popple, and Mr. Bosch. People lined the streets through which the parade passed, and the cheers were hearty and frequent, especially when passing the house of Henry McDonald, Esq. At the head-quarters the cheers grew louder for Hayes and Wheeler, and were repeated before the Democratic club-room. The Paterson boys returned in a special train of eight cars.

The speech of Hon. Lot M. Morrill, in Wall street to-day, is very generally spoken of here as a masterly and convincing statement of the situation, and as an effective answer to Mr. Belmont's absurd manifesto and pretensions. We have now only to wait till Tuesday's votes are counted to know how large a majority Hayes and Wheeler will secure in the Electoral College.

THE BUSINESS MEN OF BUFFALO.

AN APPEAL TO VOTING MEN BY MERCHANTS AND MANUFACTURERS—THE REAL DANGERS OF THE DAY POINTED OUT—THE ATTITUDE OF DEMOCRATIC LEADERS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BUFFALO, Nov. 4.—The following appeal from the merchants and manufacturers of Buffalo, showing why they favor the Republican candidates, has been put forth:

To the Electors of Erie County:

We feel that the business interests of the county demand the best exertions of all our citizens in aid of the election of the candidates nominated at Cincinnati. The signs of the times indicate, faintly it may be, but certainly, the return of better days. The readiness evinced by foreign capitalists to invest in our Government securities at the reduced rate of interest, the gradual reduction of the national debt, the healthier tone of business credits, increasing actively in the demand for manufactured goods, all indicate a healthy revival of trade. In this condition of affairs, we regard a change in the policy of the national Government as fraught with danger. The interval between the election and the final adoption of a definite policy by the Democratic Party, if successful, would be an interval of uncertainty in all the domain of trade and commerce. The possibility that such a policy may be influenced, more or less, by sectional feeling; the certainty that the delegations from a Solid South would form a large element of the party in power; the general distrust regarding the course which might be pursued with reference to claims for property injured and destroyed in the rebellion, and the attitude of Western Democratic leaders on the currency question, would, in our judgment, all tend to create a general and widespread feeling of uncertainty in business affairs, which of itself would be destructive of trade. The interests of employers and employees, of producers and consumers, are, in our judgment, identical in this regard. For if the prospect does not justify the manufacturers in continuing operations, employees are deprived of work. If the producer cannot estimate with certainty the cost of production, he must of necessity charge the consumer a price which will protect against the risk of fluctuation in values, so that in effect all classes alike are concerned in securing a fixed and certain policy, under which all may be able to make definite calculations as to the future.

We can all foresee the future if the Republican ticket is elected, but we cannot all feel certain of it if that ticket is defeated. Therefore, in the interests of business, in the interests of the laborer as well as the employer, of the retailer as well as of the wholesale merchant, of the consumer as well as of the producer, we advocate the election of Hayes and Wheeler.

THE BUSINESS MEN OF TROY—THEIR APPEAL TO THE WORKING MEN—HOW TRADE WILL BE DISARRANGED IF TILDEN IS ELECTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TROY, Nov. 4.—Over three hundred representative business men, merchants, and bankers sign an address in the Troy Times this evening, expressing their hope of Hayes' election, and fear that the success of Tilden will shake the public credit, and embarrass all business operations, if not actually destroy them. Our merchants, both Republican and Democrats, fear serious disarrangement of trade if Tilden is elected. The manufacturers are especially anxious. A number of Democratic working men feel that their employers would not be so anxious without reason, and will vote for Hayes. Erastus Corning, of Albany, the principal owner of the great iron and steel works in Troy, said, in the presence of a number of his employees recently, that Tilden was unfit for the Presidency, and hoped the men would vote for Hayes. Corning's works are shut down, but after the election of Hayes, and with stability in business, it is hoped they will resume. "Larry" Sheary, City Superintendent, a leading Democratic politician, was arrested to-day for illegal registration.

THE COTTON MEN FOR HAYES AND WHEELER.

The undersigned business men, engaged in the cotton trade in the City of New-York, believe that the best interests of the country demand the election of Rutherford B. Hayes as President and William A. Wheeler as Vice President of the United States:

SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS MEN.

THE NECESSITY OF GOV. HAYES' ELECTION—THE PROSPERITY OF THE COUNTRY INVOLVED—AN APPEAL SIGNED BY MEN REPRESENTING $60,000,000.

M. D. Burroughs, Secretary of the Republican State Central Committee, telegraphs from San Francisco, under date of Nov. 4, that the following appeal, the signers of which represent sixty millions of property, has been issued:

It having been asserted that there was great apathy and indifference among business men in San Francisco as to the result of the Presidential election, we take this means of correcting any false impression that may be circulated in relation thereto. The undersigned merchants, bankers, and business men, are deeply impressed with the grave importance of this election, and recognize the necessity of earnest work to secure the election of the Republican nominees as President and Vice President of the United States. The financial and business prosperity of the country is involved in the preservation of good order, the rights of persons and property, and in maintaining the supremacy of the law throughout the entire country. Believing this, and entertaining the opinion that the best interests of the nation will be subserved by the election of Hayes and Wheeler, and that the material progress of the nation will be best advanced by their success, we earnestly recommend our fellow-citizens to unite with us upon election day in promoting the success of the Republican Party and the triumph of the Republican principles.

MEETINGS IN THIS STATE.

A GOOD ACCOUNT FROM OSWEGO—THE CAMPAIGN CLOSED WITH A LARGE DEMONSTRATION—THE "SOLID" NORTH.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

OSWEGO, Nov. 4.—The Republicans of this city closed the campaign to-night with a monster demonstration, which consisted of a grand street parade and torch-light procession. The parade was nothing less than an army with banners and torches. The procession consisted of a grand cavalcade of horsemen, the Boys in Blue battalion, the Eighth Ward clubs, and clubs from neighboring county towns. The procession was fully a mile long, and occupied more than half an hour in passing a given point. One of the features of the line was a large body of men, each member of which weighed two hundred pounds and upward, calling themselves the "solid" North. This organization comprised many of the best men of the city. Each one bore a beautiful American flag. The entire line was thronged with spectators, fully fifteen thousand people witnessing the progress of the procession. Everywhere the procession was greeted with cheers and a lavish display of fireworks. Many of the private residences of our citizens were brilliantly illuminated. Everywhere the utmost enthusiasm prevailed. No demonstration in this city for years has equaled the one of to-night. Oswego County will give a good account of herself next Tuesday.

HUNDREDS UNABLE TO HEAR A DISTINGUISHED SPEAKER—HON. A. W. TENNY AT HUDSON—THE TORCHLIGHT PROCESSION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HUDSON, Nov. 4.—The last grand Republican rally occurred this evening, and was indeed a fitting finale to the glorious campaign in this city. Hon. A. W. Tenny was announced to speak in City Hall, and the audience was so large that hundreds of people could not get in the place. The speech delivered was a masterly one, and decidedly the best heard in this city during the canvass. Clubs from Catskill, Athens, and Philmont were in attendance, and after the meeting a splendid torchlight parade was made through the principal streets. Buildings were illuminated, the heavens were lighted with rockets and Roman candles, and the utmost enthusiasm was manifested on every side. The meeting and parade was a magnificent success and a glorious triumph for the Republicans.

TEN THOUSAND VOTERS GATHERED TOGETHER—GREAT ENTHUSIASM IN PLATTSBURG.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PLATTSBURG, Nov. 4.—Our mass-meeting to-day was a glorious success. Ten thousand voters were assembled with bands, and glee clubs surrounded the stand. Senators Boutwell and Edmunds, Gov. Noble and Judge Poland spoke in their best humor. Great enthusiasm is manifested among the people. There was never such a crowd at any political meeting in Northern New-York.

AN IMMENSE MEETING IN BINGHAMTON—BROOME COUNTY AROUSED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BINGHAMTON, Nov. 4.—The Republicans have just held an immense meeting, commencing at 10 o'clock A. M. There was great enthusiasm. Five hundred men go from here to Elmira to-day. The Republicans of old Broome are thoroughly in earnest, and since the attempt of the Democrats to break up the meetings here their earnestness has known no bounds, and they will be heard from next Tuesday.

REPORTS OF REGISTRATION FROM OSWEGO, ROCHESTER, BINGHAMTON, AND OTHER PLACES.

OSWEGO, Nov. 4.—The total registration of voters in this city is 5,205. It is larger than any former year.

SYRACUSE, Nov. 4.—The registration in this city this year is heavier than ever. The vote is expected to reach 10,000.

LOCKPORT, Nov. 4.—The total registration of the city of Lockport is about 3,550.

HUDSON, Nov. 4.—A large vote will be polled in this city on Tuesday.

ROCHESTER, Nov. 4.—The indications in this city point to an increase of registration of 1,500 over 1872, and it is estimated that the county will poll 2,000 extra over 1872.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Nov. 4.—Not quite complete returns show about 5,000 votes registered in this city. A close estimate shows that the city will poll 3,900 votes on election day, which will be full as many as in 1872.

BINGHAMTON, Nov. 4.—The total registration in this city to 7 o'clock to-night is 4,422. The total number registered last year was 3,996. Probably five more will register this evening.

BUFFALO, Nov. 4.—The total registration of votes for the thirteen wards of this city show 31,626, an increase over last year of 2,734.

ALBANY, Nov. 4.—The total registration in this city is 24,241, against 22,767, last year.

CONNECTICUT REPUBLICANS.

A GREAT MEETING IN BRIDGEPORT—SPEECHES BY SENATOR BLAINE AND OTHERS—A DECREASE OF THE DEMOCRATIC MAJORITY PROMISED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BRIDGEPORT, Nov. 4.—The open-air meeting held in this city this afternoon was the largest and most enthusiastic held in this State for many years. Fully ten thousand people listened for over an hour to Senator Blaine. Hon. Henry C. Robinson, Republican candidate for Governor, and Hon. W. P. Fiero, of New-York, also spoke. Hon. P. T. Barnum presided at the main stand, and on introducing Senator Blaine referred to the magnitude of the issues that are before the American people in the present canvass. The Senator was received with tumultuous applause, and, although suffering from hoarseness, spoke with energy and convincing logic for over an hour. Mr. Blaine, among other points, said: "On the 28th day of February last, Mr. Riddle, Member of Congress from Tennessee, introduced into the House, and it was referred to the Judiciary Committee, a bill authorizing the payment of rebel war claims. It provides that any citizen may recover for the loss of property sustained by the occupation and use of the Federal Army; that the only evidence required for the establishment of such claim shall be an affidavit of one other reputable citizen. This has caused so much alarm in the Northern mind that Mr. Tilden has deemed it necessary to publish a pronunciamento promising to veto any such measure if elected to the Presidency. The promise of Mr. Tilden, and the assurances telegraphed from certain Southern States, are like a man beating the air, for Mr. Tilden promises to veto any measure that is prohibited by the fourteenth amendment, which is wholly unnecessary, for they are prohibited by the Constitution. But Mr. Riddle's bill, as will be seen, covers a class of claims not mentioned in the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments. Claims prohibited are for losses sustained by the war—the loss of slaves, &c.; but Mr. Riddle's bill provides for the payment of sufferings sustained by the people of the South from the occupation of the Federal Army." From this point Mr. Blaine's argument was conclusive and exhaustive, leaving a very marked impression.

Hon. Henry C. Robinson followed at the main stand, in a clear and logical dissection of the platforms of the two parties, the letters of acceptance of the candidates, and the record made by the Democratic Party. Mr. Robinson is a close reasoner, and an eloquent talker, dealing in no clap-trap, and even in his most violent onslaughts upon the attitude of the Democrats, giving no offense to his opponents. Hon. W. P. Fiero spoke from stand No. 2, to at least four thousand people, for over two hours, gaining their attention by his arguments and eloquence until near sundown, when he was forced to stop by the lateness of the hour. Mr. Fiero addressed our citizens only two weeks since, at which time he made a record which is universally acknowledged as excelled by no other speaker at this place for several years, and the attention he received to-day must have been extremely flattering to him, as it was helpful to us and the cause. The parade of Boys in Blue, with an illumination, followed by an immense cavalcade and gathering from the adjoining towns, of this afternoon, has assisted materially in awaking our own people to the fact that this hotbed of Democracy and rebellion is not to be left to the enemy without a determined fight, which will bring about a largely decreased Democratic majority.

YALE'S STUDENTS FOR GOV. HAYES—606 FOR HAYES AND 147 FOR TILDEN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-HAVEN, Nov. 4.—Upon a vote taken in Yale College to-day, Gov. Hayes received 606 and Tilden 147.

GREAT RALLY IN PHILADELPHIA.

THE CLOSING MEETING OF THE CAMPAIGN—SPEECHES BY SECRETARY MORRILL, ATTORNEY GENERAL TAFT, AND OTHERS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 4.—The Republicans held the closing meeting of the campaign in front of the Union League House to-night, Broad street being crowded. The array of speeches was such as to attract the business men. Hon. John P. Verree presided. Among the list of officers were some of the most extensive manufacturers and business men of the State, such as William Sellers, Edward C. Knight, Jacob Reigel, George Morrison Oates, William Cramp, George O. McCreary, and others. Hon. Lot M. Morrill was the first speaker. He addressed the meeting at length on the cry of the Democracy that "We have a solid South." The war was a result of the solid South, and it is also responsible for the burden of the public debt. The Secretary reviewed at length the administration of the Republican Party and how it had reduced taxation. Hon. Eugene Hale, of Maine, made a speech in which he said that the Democracy had for the past year engaged in murdering citizens, and now asks to be given the right to protect them. "They have continually assaulted the public credit, bankrupted municipal and State credits, and now have the effrontery to ask to ask that all these be placed under their care. The Democracy speak of a solid South for themselves, but not of a solid North. The speaker showed that the intelligence of the North would not admit of the nefarious schemes of the pretenders being carried into effect. Attorney General Taft made a short address, and among other things said: "I find that I have been criticised by Mr. August Belmont, who took it into his mind to make some reflections upon my statements with regard to the finances of the Government." He then showed Mr. Belmont to be in error and endeavoring to make capital out of nothing. Speeches were also made by Rufus E. Shapley, Esq., and Hon. Charles O'Neill.

DEMOCRATIC ATTACK ON NEGROES.

PEACEABLE COLORED MEN ASSAULTED BY A MOB—AN UNOFFENDING CITIZEN BRUTALLY BEATEN—HE DEFENDS HIS LIFE, AND IS THEN ARRESTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 4.—A Democratic riot occurred in the streets here to-night, and a mob is now surrounding the station-house, threatening the life of a colored man, who was forced, in self-defence, to fire several shots at members of the Democratic procession to-night. The procession had paraded the streets up to 11 o'clock, when it dispersed and a large number of Democrats marched to the Republican Head-quarters, on Fifth street. A number of colored men were standing in front of the head-quarters and when the Democrats approached they shouted for Hayes and Wheeler. This enraged the crowd, some of whom were drunk, and they gave chase to the negroes, who through fear of overpowering numbers fled up-stairs into the Republican Head-quarters. The Democrats followed, and continued the attack, using chairs, stones, &c., indiscriminately. Those remaining outside threw volleys of stones from the street through the windows, breaking the glass, and causing serious damage. Several persons were considerably hurt. A few minutes later a colored man was quietly driving along on an express wagon, on Sixth street, when he was stopped by the Democrats, and, it is said, was brutally struck several times over the head with a torch which had been used in the procession. He begged the man and his associates to desist, but their treatment continuing, he then drew his revolver and fired, the shot taking effect in one man's hip. The negro was then arrested and taken to the station-house, followed by a mob of Democrats from the procession, threatening his life. Several shots were fired at the negro by the mob, and he was also stabbed by one man, while he was being taken to the station-house by the Police. He was locked up, and a strong guard placed over him to prevent his being attacked by the crowd. The numbers of the mob increased rapidly, and finally the danger became so imminent, and threats of lynching so loud, that a riot alarm was sounded, and additional Police were called to the station-house. They quickly responded, and at this time—midnight—the crowd is being held in check. Mayor Johnston has addressed the mob, urging them to desist and go home, and as he has great influence with the rabble it is hoped there will not be further bloodshed. Much excitement exists at this unprovoked attack by the Democrats on peaceful Republicans.

PENNSYLVANIA CANVASS.

ALLEGHENY COUNTY SURE TO GIVE A LARGE MAJORITY FOR HAYES AND WHEELER—THE CONTESTS IN THE CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS—THE INFLUENCE OF HEWITT'S "MULES"—A GRAND REPUBLICAN DEMONSTRATION TO TAKE PLACE NEXT MONDAY.

From Our Special Correspondent.

PITTSBURG, Thursday, Nov. 2, 1876.

The political prospects in Western Pennsylvania are constantly brightening for the Republicans, and the situation now looks so promising that many politicians are inclined to lay claim to majorities approaching those of 1872. In that year, to superficial observation, there was not ground to hope for an unusual majority in Allegheny County, and yet Hartranft received between eleven and twelve thousand; and in November President Grant received upward of sixteen thousand. The county has been greatly affected, as is well known, by the prostration of its special industries by the financial depression since 1873, and there is no reason whatever, to expect so large majorities now. Two years ago thousands of laboring men, in protest against hard times, voted for a change, and they appear to have had enough of it; for last year they largely returned to their party, and the majority for Hartranft was about 5,400. The county has two Representatives in Congress, and both Republican candidates were beaten two years ago by Democrats. Hopkins received about 2,300 over Negley. Cochrane had a plurality of 260 votes over Bayne, and 2,800 votes were given for Purviance, an Independent Democrat. These results were among the many political surprises of that year, though the defeat of Negley ought to have been foreseen.

The county has two distinct and foremost duties this year. One is to give a good, round majority for Hayes and Wheeler, and the other to send two Republicans to Congress. If any doubt existed as to the performance of either, it has now completely vanished. There remains only an uncertainty concerning the extent of the majorities. For Hayes and Wheeler the majority will not be less than six thousand. This is regarded on all hands as the lowest possible figure. The feeling and judgment of Republican politicians is that it will reach 8,000 to 10,000. The latter claim does not now seem extravagant, though I should have regarded it so a month ago. Russell Errett will be elected to Congress over Hopkins in Pittsburg, and Bayne over Cochrane in Allegheny City. Errett seems likely to run behind the rest of the ticket, but not so much as was expected even within a few days. He does not appear to have any personal popularity whatever, and he has incurred some hostilities in the past that have been disadvantageous. There is no charge against his honesty or character, and he is a man of far more ability than his competitor. But Hopkins goes around shaking hands in a graceful and good-natured way, and being a likeable kind of fellow, will get the votes of some heedless young Republicans of his association. There were many people who opposed Errett for one reason or another who are now rapidly coming to his support. They begin to see that the next Congress must be very close, and they don't feel willing to assume the responsibility of even a risk of a Democratic Congressman from this district. The election of Errett cannot be doubtful, and he will have a large majority.

The Democrats began the campaign early in this county. They were encouraged to labor especially because they had the two Congressmen, and they hoped above all things to reelect them. There was also some hope that they might produce disaffection enough to reduce the general majority very low. Whatever the hope and purpose, an active campaign was early resolved upon, with approval from New-York. A few days before the October election, and before the Republicans had done much at organizing, a Democratic torch-light parade was announced, and, of a Saturday night, they came out in a procession of five or six thousand torch-bearers, all uniformed with capes and hats. Such a thing had never been seen before in Pittsburg. The uniforms had never been attempted, and money could not have been raised among Democrats here for their purchase. It was afterward learned that money was furnished from the mule-buying head-quarters in New-York. The demonstration was most fortunate for the Republicans. They were at first frightened, and then inspirited to work. The result has been such a diligent and earnest canvass as has not been made for many years. Within a few days the great manufacturing firms have become interested, and, aroused by fear of the effects of Democratic success upon the industries and business of the country. Some of the richest men in Pittsburg are now engaged daily in working for a Republican victory. This means a great deal, for they are men who do not mingle in politics ordinarily, and do not ask or accept of public office. But it has always been observed that when, in great public emergencies, they are aroused to action, the result is sure and decisive. In the canvass of 1872, it was their labors that produced, more than any other influences, the great majorities for Hartranft and Grant.

On next Monday there is to be a grand Republican demonstration and a daylight procession, in which the business men and firms will be largely represented. Manufactories owned by Republicans will be shut down, and the city will have the aspect of a holiday. The different firms will have their teams in the procession, the wagons being designated and gaily decorated. The marching clubs will be present. There is hardly a prominent business house or shop that will not join in the display. The enthusiasm is increasing every day, and the most sanguine expectations as to the majorities may perhaps be exceeded.

One important fact is worthy of notice. I can nowhere hear of any Republicans who will vote for Tilden. I have heard of only one in this State, and his reason is a personal one. On the other hand, there are a few Democrats known who will vote for Hayes. The number is small, of course. This fact removes, of itself, any doubt as to the general result if a full vote is polled.

As for Congressmen in the western part of the State, the certainty increases that Gen. Harry White will be elected over Jenks in the Twenty-fifth District, that the Twenty-sixth and Twenty-seventh will be regained, and that Stenger, in the Eighteenth, will be beaten. Indeed, the prospect of a net gain of nine members of Congress in the State is not now so very remote.

The Cooper and Cary nonsense has been encouraged by the Democratic managers, and most of the votes will be lost from the Republicans. There is little vitality among the Greenbackers, and it is not believed that for the whole State this vote will be greater than the temperance vote of last year, which was upward of twelve thousand. The Prohibition vote will amount to nothing this year, so at the worst there will be no real loss on account of the Greenback movement. J. E. C.

OPPONENTS OF FREE SPEECH.

DEMOCRATS PREVENT EVEN GREENBACKERS FROM SPEAKING IN MISSOURI—STATE RIGHTS AND SOUTHERN RIGHTS DECLARED THE ISSUES OF THIS CONTEST.

The Democratic ruffians in Missouri will not permit even the Greenbackers to hold meetings in peace. Recent experiences in Jackson County are described at length in a card published by the Greenback County Committee, in which it is said: "Notices of a Greenback meeting to be held at Buckner on the evening of the 23d inst. were sent to that place, and accidentally, or by mistake, fell into Democratic hands and were laid away. On the evening of that day, Mr. Pepper, W. C. Adams, McBride, George Hiffner, and Dr. De Bernardi, all citizens of this county, went to Buckner in pursuance of the appointment. Mr. Pepper De Bernardi, and Mr. McBride going together were met by one Jim Adams, one of the leaders of the mob, and informed 'that he was on his own dung-hill,' &c. A room was secured, and the meeting held, Mr. Pepper, W. C. Adams, and Hiffner making speeches in the order named. While Mr. Pepper was on the floor, Jim Adams' men—as he called them—commenced coming in, and creating disturbance in the room, and around the house outside. After Mr. Hiffner had concluded his remarks, the mob—growing more boisterous and insulting—called for Jim Adams, who took the floor and uttered a tirade of personal abuse and insults toward Pepper, and announced, as the sentiments of the Democrats in that part of the county, that 'State rights was the issue,' 'Order No. 11 was the issue;' 'Southern rights was the issue,' using his powers of speech trying, apparently, to inflame the passions of the mob to violence against Pepper, and stated that when he got done speaking the meeting would be adjourned, reminding Mr. Pepepr that he was 'backed by his men.' After Jim Adams had ceased to harangue, a Mr. Stayton, of Buckner, took the floor for a few minutes and ridiculed the Greenback Party. About 1 P. M. the meeting was declared adjourned. Pepper, DeBernardi, and McBride proceeded to their lodging place, the house of Mr. Hanthorn. Mr. Hanthorn was absent from home, or the after outrage, we believe, would not have been permitted. After Pepper and his associates had retired, some of them in bed, two men came to the house and walked in without permission, and demanded of the landlady 'where those men were?' After learning, they went up to the sleeping-room of Pepper and comrades and demanded that they should get up and go with them down to the drug store, 'the boys wanted to see them,' and compelled them, against their protestations, to get up and go with them. At the drug store were congregated about twenty of the mob, and there Pepper and associates were again abused and insulted for over two hours. Mr. Pepper was notified by Adams not to go to Sibly to fill his next appointment or he would receive worse treatment than at Buckner. At last they were permitted to depart."

GREAT RALLY IN RAMAPO.

Last Friday evening the Republicans of Ramapo held a grand demonstration. The meeting took place in the Ramapo Car Wheel Works. Speeches were made by Assistant Attorney Russell and Mr. Z. T. Abell. Great enthusiasm prevailed, and the speakers were loudly applauded.

SURRENDER OF THE INDIANS.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 4.—The Pioneer Press special, dated "Camp in the Field, on the Yellowstone, Oct. 27," via Bismarck, Dakota Territory, Nov. 4, says: Gen. Miles, commanding the troops on the Yellowstone, after fighting, defeating, and pursuing Sitting Bull and the confederated tribes under him this day accepted the surrender of 400 lodges of Indians belonging at the Cheyenne Agency, these tribes surrendering five of their principal chiefs as hostages as guarantees of their faithful compliance with the terms of the surrender. These bands are to go at once to the agency, where, upon their arrival, they will submit to the requirements of the Government. The Indians held as hostages, left this evening for St. Paul, under the charge of strong guards.

THE CANDIDATE IN THE EIGHTH DISTRICT.

The Dayton (Ohio) Journal says: "Gen. Anson G. McCook, formerly of Steubenville, in this State, has received the Republican nomination in the Eighth New-York (City) District for Congress. Gen. McCook is favorably known to many of our citizens. He is a man of fine character and abilities, and was an admirable soldier. Before he was promoted to Brigadier General he was Colonel of the gallant Second Ohio Volunteers, a regiment that had no superior in the Army."

A SCHEME OF ROBBERY.

A CHAPTER OF DEMOCRATIC TRICKERY AND FRAUD.

THE WAY BY WHICH GERMAN CATHOLICS WERE TO BE MADE "GOOD DEMOCRATS"—FULL HISTORY OF THE GERMAN PRESS SOCIETY—ITS GROSS MISMANAGEMENT AND THE EFFORTS AT CONCEALMENT—WORKING PEOPLE ROBBED OF THEIR HARD-EARNED SAVINGS.

A very curious, but none the less disgraceful series of transactions in the recent history of Tammany Hall, the Democratic Party and John Kelly has been revealed in some disclosures in regard to the origin and conduct of the German Press Society, of New-York. The exposure tends to throw light on the means employed, and utter lack of principle exhibited by John Kelly, in his attempt to keep under his control, and under that of his hirelings, the German Roman Catholic vote of the Cities of New-York and Brooklyn and of the surrounding country. The facts, indeed, would seem to show that in order to retain his supposed influence and control over the voters in question, Mr. Kelly was willing, and really did actively strive, to cover up frauds of the meanest and most despicable kind, which were perpetrated by persons in the garb of religion on the poor, hard-working portion of the community.

In order to understand fully the story of the swindle, a brief narration of some of the circumstances under which it arose will not be out of place. The overthrow of Tweed and Tammany by means of THE TIMES' exposures in 1871 was a severe blow to the Democracy in this City, as well as elsewhere throughout the State, since it unveiled the methods by which a pack of thieves and swindlers plundered the Metropolis and intrenched their power by the rolling up of almost fabulous and very accommodating majorities in favor of the Democracy. The exposure of their practices promised to be a death-blow to the future hopes of the Democratic leaders who clutched, with a grasp as tenacious as that of a drowning man to a straw, at everything which gave some expectation, however slight, of enabling them to avert from themselves their well-merited doom. How futile one portion of their efforts was is too well known to need repetition here. The "reformed" Tammany Hall, with different leaders, but having the same rank and file as before, with as specious promises as those given by the platform of the recent St. Louis Convention, but just as false and fraudulent as the latter, was beaten severely at the polls in 1872 by the uprising and combined effort of the honest citizens, irrespective of party, whose patience had at length become exhausted by the repeated insults to popular honesty and intelligence given in each successive act of Tammany Hall and the Democratic Party. In casting about, after their defeat, for the causes which led to Tammany's overthrow, and the influences which had been at work to secure it, the leaders of the party had their attention called to the German Catholic vote as a factor which had theretofore formed an important element in each Democratic success, but which had signally failed to do so at that important juncture.

How to secure this recreant element was now not one of Mr. Kelly's "hypothecated" cases, but a problem calling for serious thought in its solution. An expedient was finally hit upon which, to the mind of the average Democratic politician, seemed an exceptionally happy one. The plan was to begin the publication in German of one or two newspapers in this City and Brooklyn which should advocate Democratic doctrines after a rather peculiar fashion. In the first place the paper or papers were to be so originated and conducted as to have circulation among the German Catholics. After this the favor of that class of persons was to be gained by catering to their religious prejudices, by awakening bigotry and intolerance, and by seeking to obtrude into politics the matter of Church and State, the public school question, and other cognate topics. The Democratic politicians were found to be none too squeamish to strive to excite the bitterest religious feuds, if these would serve their purpose and enable them to perpetuate a power to which they were not entitled by moral or intellectual merit or qualifications. By false pretenses, in many instances, quite a large number of the Roman Catholic clergy, including Archbishop McCloskey, were induced to lend the aid and sanction of their names, efforts, and contributions to the scheme proposed. Besides the Archbishop, Rev. Fathers Bonaventura, Ino, May, and many other priests worked in favor of the matter. Among the Tammany politicians money for political purposes was not just then too abundant. They had been compelled to withdraw their hands from the public Treasury in the payment of political expenses. Tilden's "barrelful of greenbacks" had not yet entered into their calculations to any great extent, and they had not up to that period learned the lesson of paying their debts out of their own pockets instead of out of the public crib. Still among the stockholders appear the names of John Kelly, ex-Judge Michael C. Gross, ex-Assemblyman Germain Hauschel, Magnus Gross, Anthony Eickhoff, and others. The great bulk of the contributions to the fund for starting the new paper had to be furnished by various Roman Catholic churches and societies. Priests, who had been misled by the specious pretenses held forward, urged upon their parishioners to withdraw their savings from all manner of securities and to invest them in the proposed venture. The advice thus given was followed in great measure by the poorer kind of parishioners, who withdrew their scanty, hard-earned hoards from savings banks and other places of deposit and placed them in the hands of their spiritual advisers for the purchasing of shares in the scheme.

As soon as the managers of the affair began to see their way ahead, they organized a corporation, known as the German Press Society of New-York, under the general incorporation act of 1848. The objects of the association were declared to be, "To establish in the City of New-York a printing and publishing establishment, and to conduct and issue a daily, a Sunday, weekly, semi-weekly and tri-weekly newspaper in the German language and carry on a general printing business." The capital stock, according to the articles of incorporation, was to be $150,000, with the privilege of increasing the amount to $300,000, and was divided into shares of $20 each and half-shares of $10 each. About $92,000 was paid in when the working of the scheme began, and there were about nine hundred stockholders. How the greater part of this money was obtained is well told, though, perhaps, in homely and uncouth phrase, in a letter written to the Receiver of the society, on June 11, 1876, by J. M. S. Wackerburg, who says, among other things: "I had $4[illegible]—the remainder of some money brought by me from Germany—in the Dry Dock Savings Bank, where it was bearing seven per cent. interest. After the Presse had been organized, I was induced by the priests to invest this money in the Presse, as I would thereby, undoubtedly receive far higher percentage, and far higher interest, and it would be exceedingly likely that the principal would be doubled within two years. I did so, and now, through the outrageous management which squandered the money, mostly the sweat of poor people, I have been defrauded of principal and interest in such a scandalous manner I have been entirely ruined by it. * * * For the rest, it is sad enough that in this manner many hundreds of poor working people, who, in the hope of increasing their savings, and on the advice of the priesthood, gave their little all to this enterprise, have been swindled so outrageously out of everything. I do not believe that such a bankruptcy as this was ever occurred," &c. This letter gives an inkling of what really occurred in the carrying on of the affairs of the corporation.

The incorporation of the society was on Feb. 4, 1873. By the articles of association the whole business management of the concern was put in the hands of a board of thirteen Directors. For the first year the following were elected as such Directors: Revs. Joseph Wirth, P. Dauffenbach, Anthony Kessler, Adam F. Tonner, and Lawrence Holzer, and Messrs. John Muller, Christian Schmitt, John Schnugg, John Raber, Francis J. Lambert, Andrew Smith, and Julius C. Schlachter. These persons, or some of them at least, seem to have proceeded in a somewhat unusual and extraordinary way. Almost the first thing that engaged their attention was the procuring of a suitable building and a printing-press, to be used for the editing and publishing of their proposed periodicals. At the meeting of the Directors, "held at the house of the Capuchin Fathers on Feb. 13, 1873," —the quotation is from the minutes of the society—"the Finance Committee reported that they had a suitable place for the business at No. 7 Frankfort street, which building and rear building, with lot, could be bought for $37,500. The report was accepted and the committee authorized to buy said building. * * * The Finance Committee reported that they had inquired into the different presses, and came to the conclusion that the $20,000 Bullock press was the most economical and best adapted for our purpose. A motion was made and carried to authorize the Finance Committee to order the Bullock press for $20,000." The building referred to, which cost $37,500, was put down and charged in the society's books at the value of $77,600, and the press costing $20,000, on which, however, only $5,000 had been paid, was put down among the society's property as $44,000 of assets. This device was adopted to cover up a defalcation whose chief perpetrator and moving spirit is said to have been Rev. Father Holzer, who is charged with having appropriated most of the funds to his own use, squandering them in drunkenness and debauchery, as was sworn to during his trial in November, 1873. He was deposed from his office as Manager, and was sent to Rochester. The matter was hushed up, however, as far as the stockholders were concerned, and to cover the deficiency money was borrowed. Here, however, a little difficulty was met with. As is well known, an incorporated society cannot mortgage its property without the consent of two-thirds of its stockholders, though it can convey its property by deed without going through this formality. Publicity in regard to the mismanagement of the funds of the society, would have been inevitable in the present instance in case the Directors had sought leave of the stockholders to mortgage their property, and this was therefore specially to be avoided. A rather remarkable expedient was then resorted to by the Directors to avoid the difficulty. John Muller, one of their number, resigned his office as Director on Nov. 13, 1873, and the real estate at No. 7 Frankfort street was then conveyed to him by deed. On the second succeeding meeting of the Directors, Muller was re-elected as a Director. The property was deeded to him for the alleged consideration of $80,000—though it only cost $37,500 in the first instance. Muller gave nothing for the property, but immediately after obtaining it mortgaged it for $50,000 by three mortgages. Prior to Miller's re-election as a Director, on Dec. 30, 1873, the following resolution was taken up by the Board of Directors, and referred to the President, Secretary, and Treasurer:

Resolved, That Mr. Muller make deed over to the Press Society, without record, until further orders, for $75,000, if it can be legally made.

No such deed was found among the papers when the society passed into the hands of the Receiver, and no such deed was on record. The mortgages, however, made by Muller were not sufficient to cover up the deficit, and so loans were made of large sums of money from the German Exchange Bank, of this City, and from the Manufacturers' Bank of Williamsburg. Benevolent contributions were also collected from time to time, among them being $4,000 collected for the relief of the Kansas sufferers. These sums it is alleged were not used for their avowed purposes, but for the support of the newspapers of the society. Archbishop McCloskey, to save the concern, sent out an episcopal letter to his parishioners throughout the State. John Kelly was also applied to by the managers of the concern to save the establishment from dissolution. In the early part of 1874, advertisements were asked for from him. On Oct. 5, 1874, a committee of three was appointed "to see that more stocks be sold to politicians whose part the New-Yorker Presse has taken so zealously." In the following year Tammany Hall, through John Kelly and Treasurer Donnelly, gave the paper $10,000. Of this amount $4,850 were given for the "Hackett pamphlet," abusing the Recorder, which was drawn up by George W. Wingate, and translated by Dr. Richard S. Rosenthal; $2,000 were paid for a pamphlet drawn up by Alderman Gross, and $2,000 were given by Gov. Tilden, through Mr. McLean, for printing the State and electoral tickets, and the remainder was for advertising. Tammany, in addition to these sums, made Herman Ridder, the manager of the paper, a promise to give him $90,000 during the present year, and only a few weeks ago Tilden gave the concern, through Mr. McLean of the Democratic head-quarters in Liberty street, the sum of $2,000. During the entire conduct of the papers published by the society from first to last, appeals were made to the religious feelings of their readers in the effort to stir up a religious strife on the school question. Two of its editors were rewarded with political office, Mr. Eickhoff being made Coroner, and Mr. Gross, Alderman at large. The society went on sinking deeper and deeper in debt from time to time, until March 24, 1876, when John Kelly stepped to the front and put in Richard S. Rosenthal as Receiver of the establishment. Further details of Kelly's connection with the matter are given further on. While Rosenthal was Receiver an effort was made to remove him. This was on July 20, 1876, and was made by ex-Senator Gross, acting in behalf of Herman Ridder, Bernard Amend and Henry Hanselmann, a committee of the stockholders who charged the Receiver with wasting the property of the society, &c. The Receiver answered the charges by making others against the committee and against the Directors. Judge Westbrook, before whom the matter came, promptly denied the application for the Receiver's removal. Later on, on Sept. 4, 1876, the Receiver filed a report under oath in the Supreme Court, detailing the results of his investigations into the management of the society.

THE RECEIVER'S REPORT.

He reported that he had published the New-Yorker Presse and the Brooklyner Presse from March 27 to April 29, 1876, at an average loss of $800 per week; that he had issued Receiver's certificates for the loss incurred and had paid the same. As soon as the books, papers, &c., of the society had been delivered to him he made a careful examination of the affairs and business with the assistance of an expert. The report then proceeds: "I found that the assets of the society then consisted of the building No. 7 Frankfort street, on which there were three mortgages—one for $28,000, with one year's accrued interest; a second mortgage for $12,500, with six months' interest, and a third mortgage of $11,000, held by Schapper & Schlachter, the latter given as collateral security for promissory notes issued by the defendant, [the society,] and upon which notes the Directors of the defendant were personally and individually responsible as indorsers. In addition to this were two years' back taxes and some assessments, amounting in all to about $2,000. The remaining property consisted of the good-will of the two newspapers, the types, a large Bullock press, and the paraphernalia of a job-printing office, valued at from $15,000 to $20,000. There were numerous claims upon the books of the defendant as due to it, and there were a large number in very small amounts reported to me as not good. I proceeded to advertise for claims against the defendant to be presented to me at my office, and received from time to time claims against the defendant, amounting in all to nearly $58,000. Of this $58,000 of indebtedness nearly $28,000 was represented by the members of the defendant itself, the Directors and officers who had made loans to the defendant." * *

On March 31, 1876, the Receiver was, by order of court, directed to sell and dispose of the society's property at public auction. He thereupon advertised the real estate for sale on April 20, 1876, and of the personal property for April 26, 1876. At the auction sale of the real estate the building in Frankfort street was struck off to Henry Hanselmann for $40,500 that being the highest bid. In accordance with the terms of sale the Receiver received $4,050 or ten per cent. of the amount in cash. The personal property was struck off to Bernard Amend on the appointed day for $5,000, that being the highest bid therefor, and Amend paid the whole amount in cash. After the statement of these preliminary facts, the Receiver proceeded in his report to make the following allegations and charges:

"I do further report that the sales were had in view of the following facts and circumstances, and in pursuance of an arrangement made and had in view of those facts and circumstances. Shortly after my appointment as Receiver, I, having made an examination of the books above referred to, found that there had been a large misappropriation of the funds of the defendant, and of moneys collected for benevolent purposes, and that the true state and condition of the defendant had been continuously concealed from the stockholders, and I acquainted the leading Directors and officers of the defendant with the discoveries that I had made. Thereupon a committee consisting of Bernard Amend, Henry Hanselmann, and Herman Ridder, claiming to be a committee of the stockholders of the defendant and appointed by them for the purpose of consulting myself and my counsel, Messrs. Wingate & Cullen, as to the best mode of winding up the affairs of the defendant, represented to me that an exposure of the mismanagement of the concern and the misappropriation of its funds would bring great scandal to the religious sect whose organ the papers published by the defendant were considered, and reflect seriously upon the clergymen and others who had induced a large number of people in very moderate circumstances to invest in the stock of the concern, and that in order to avoid this scandal and these exposures, it would be advantageous to all interested to wind up the affairs of the defendant without further legal procedure, and as quietly and rapidly as possible. It was, therefore, proposed to me, by this committee and by other friends of the defendant, that they would, with my consent, buy in the personal property of the defendant, being the good-will, types, presses, &c., and organize a new corporation for the benefit of all the old stockholders who would pay twenty-five per cent. on the amount of stock held by each of them respectively toward carrying out the arrangement; that they would buy in the personal property for a merely nominal consideration; that they would arrange with all the leading and heavy creditors of the defendant, and, if it was permitted for them so to do, they could pay every creditor dollar for dollar; and that the fund which they proposed to collect from the stockholders should be used in paying Receiver's fees, counsel fees, the cost of the litigation, plaintiffs' attorneys' fees, and defendants' attorneys' fees, and expenses of sale, and would pay those debts which were not held by members of the defendant itself. And it was further stated and promised to me that if this arrangement was carried out, they or the members of the defendant who held claims against it, would forgive and discharge the same; and if the Receiver would acquiesce in such an arrangement, he would save great expense and trouble to all concerned, and the interest of the creditors would be best subserved. I submitted this proposition to my counsel, Messrs. Wingate & Cullen, and particularly to Mr. Cullen of my counsel, and then and there at the office of said counsel, at No. 206 Broadway, in the City of New-York, the same proposition was made in my presence, and in the presence of Mr. Cullen, and upon the faith of the representations which were made by said committee to said Cullen, the arrangement was entered into, and I was directed by Mr. Cullen, as my counsel, to consent to the same. It was then and there agreed that the personal property should go for $5,000. This same committee further represented, in regard to the real estate of the corporation, that they did not desire the real estate, but would prefer that it would be sold to some third party. They stated that the building adjoined the buildings of the Sun and Tribune, who might wish to acquire it; also, that, as it would front upon the terminus of the East River Bridge, it might be purchased by capitalists if well advertised. They also stated to counsel in my presence, and counsel agreed with them, that the only way to induce outsiders to bid, was to offer the property subject to certain specified liens having a certain definite term to run, and that if only the right, title, and interest of the Receiver were to be offered, no sale could be effected. They also stated that the first mortgagee had threatened to foreclose, and it was conceded on all hands that he would foreclose unless some responsible party became the purchaser at the sale. They then represented to Col. Wingate, one of my counsel, in my hearing, that if the Receiver would sell the property subject to the first and second mortgages, with back interest and the taxes, they would pay off the mortgage held by Schappert & Schlachter, which was collateral security for the notes of the defendant, and indorsed by the Directors of the defendant, amounting in all to about eleven thousand dollars, so that it need not be reckoned in the terms of sale, but should be simply considered as a debt of the defendant, which they would pay and discharge, the same as other debts, provided the arrangement which was proposed should be carried out. Under these representations, and by the advice and consent of my counsel, I did enter into such an arrangement with the said committee, and as they specially requested that the greatest publicity might be given to the sale, I applied to the court and obtained an order authorizing me to advertise the sale specially, which I accordingly did. The terms of sale of the real estate were drawn in exact accordance with this arrangement, specifying the two mortgages and the back interest and the taxes, and it was understood at the time of sale that the amount necessary to cover these incumbrances was $45,000, and the said committee promised my said counsel that they would bid that sum, the intention being that if any outsider bid over that he should take the property. The sale was had under this arrangement, and to my surprise Ridder, who acted as the spokesman of the committee at the sale—and which committee were all present, and also a large number of those interested, creditors, stockholders, and friends—bid only the sum of $40,500; and Col. Wingate, my counsel, informed him that that would not be enough, and that if they did not bid more he would be compelled to withdraw the property; to which said Ridder replied that it would be all right; that they would take care of the difference, whatever it might be; and the property was then struck down to said committee, no name being given at the time of sale, and it being understood by all present that the same was bid in by this committee for the stockholders under the arrangement that had been made and entered into. Henry Hanselmann signed the terms of sale. At the time of the signing of said terms of sale he was in the office of Richard V. Harnett, auctioneer. Great regret was expressed by all present that they were compelled to buy it in. After this nothing more was heard from Hanselmann or the committee in regard to the real estate, until the 20th of May, when the passing of the title was adjourned to the 20th of June; and on the 20th of June, one Thomas M. Wyatt called at the office of the Receiver's counsel, and demanded the deed and the return of the ten per cent paid."

To this demand a letter was sent by the Receiver, calling attention to the agreement under which the sale was made, &c., "of which no notice was taken by said Wyatt or said Hanselmann, and this was the first intimation that I had that said Hanselmann, acting in his own behalf, did not intend to carry out the arrangement which had been made; and said Hanselmann has made a motion to this court to compel me to refund the $4,050, which motion is now pending and awaiting decision; and he, said Hanselmann, now claims to have bought the property for speculative purposes of his own. I do further report that in pursuance of the understanding and arrangement entered into between myself, my counsel, and the committee of the stockholders, the sale of the personal property was had on the 26th day of April, 1876, and said property was struck off to Bernard Amend for the sum of $5,000, a merely nominal consideration. In pursuance of said arrangement, and on the faith of it, I delivered possession of said property, and he has ever since then remained in possession of said property, and has had the sole use of the same; and upon the same faith and credit I permitted said Hanselmann to take possession of the real estate purchased by him, although I had executed no deed, and he has collected rents therefrom to the amount three hundred dollars, and, for all I know, he is still in possession of the property. I do further report that I waited after these sales a reasonable time for the committee of the stockholders to carry out the arrangement which had been made, and made numerous requests to them that they should proceed to pay those debts which they had agreed to pay and discharge those incumbrances which they had agreed to discharge, to all of which I received promises that the same would be done; but the same has never yet been done except to this extent, that the creditors of the defendant who were members of it, in filing their claims with me endorsed thereon the words: 'In the event of any arrangement being carried out this claim will be forgiven and discharged.' The purchaser of the real estate has not only made a motion to compel me to refund the $4,050 paid by him, but has failed to discharge the taxes and assessments which were a lien upon the premises even under the written terms of sale. He has failed to pay the back interest due on the mortgages, which were also a part of the written terms of sale, irrespective of any arrangement, and has failed to pay the $11,000 mortgage thereon himself or as one of the committee of stockholders, and now seeks to throw upon the Receiver the responsibility of assuming and discharging the said $11,000 mortgage. This arrangement, which I have detailed above, was stated and proclaimed to the stockholders at a meeting held by them on or about the 31st day of May, 1876, at which resolutions were adopted authorizing the committee to carry out the arrangement with the Receiver, and directing them to collect an assessment of twenty-five per cent. upon each share held by the stockholders, and that this fund was to be used for purposes specified by the committee and by the Receiver, and a resolution of thanks was passed indorsing me for the prudent and wise management with which I had managed the affairs of the defendant and the courtesy with which I had treated the stockholders. * * * I am informed and believe that the stockholders, or a great majority of them, have paid the sum of twenty-five per cent upon the stock held by them respectively to this committee, and that such collections amounted to nearly $15,000, a sum amply sufficient to have carried out the arrangement which was entered into and hereinabove set out in full, but that said sum has been used and squandered in publishing the New-Yorker Presse and Brooklyner Presse by said Bernard Amend and Henry Hanselmann for their own particular benefit, and not a single cent of indebtedness, to the best of my knowledge and belief, has been discharged, although I repeatedly requested them to carry out the arrangement that was made. I do further report that when I learned that said Hanselmann did not intend upon his part to carry out the terms upon which the real estate was sold to him, I did notify him that I retained in my hand the sum of ten per cent. paid to me to await the result of a resale, and I have readvertised the said premises for sale on the 4th day of September, 1876, in pursuance of the terms of sale which were issued and announced then. I have also notified said Amend that he having failed upon his part to carry out the arrangement that had been made, I would report to this court the said sale to him and ask the court not to confirm the same, and in the meantime any removal of the property by him while he held no title would be at his peril, and I refrained from retaking possession of the property sold, on account of the trouble it would cost to poor stockholders. I do further report that, owing to the refusal and neglect of the committee to use the fund collected by them from the stockholders in carrying out the arrangement which I have detailed, no single creditor of the defendant has been paid, and I have been unable to collect sufficient assets wherewith to pay the same, and that the personal property sold Amend for $5,000 being really worth from $15,000 to $20,000, the said sale should be set aside by the court and leave given to the Receiver to re-advertise it upon returning so much of the purchase money paid to him as he may have left in his hands. I do further report that, believing that such arrangement was to be carried out, I have disbursed, by way of attorney's fees, counsel fees, auctioneer's fees, advertising, loss in running the paper, and at the request of said committee, after the sales had been had, very nearly the sum of $7,000 out of the $9,050 received by me on the two respective sales. Lastly, I ask the instruction of the court as to whether or not the said sales so made by me shall be confirmed, and pray that the said sales be not confirmed, and that I have leave to readvertise the same for sale upon such terms as the court may think just and proper, and upon returning such moneys as to the court may seem proper."

The substance of this report was published in THE TIMES on Sept. 5, and caused considerable excitement among the managers of the society, as well as among the Tammany politicians who had been seeking to cover up the frauds committed on the poor stockholders, the exposure of which they justly feared would be a death-blow to all their fancied influence over the German Catholic vote. Another application was then made—this time to Judge Donohue—by ex-Judge Michael C. Gross, who claimed to represent five stockholders, and who asked for the removal of Rosenthal as Receiver. Before this matter was decided, Rosenthal resigned his position, and Anthony Miller, one of the former Directors, was substituted in his stead. This is the story as it appears upon the surface. Another chapter in the narrative remains to be written, and furnishes an interesting commentary to that already given. This chapter has reference to the manner of the appointment of Rosenthal as Receiver. In the early part of this year it appears that one Victor Zeis, who owned five shares of the stock of the corporation, began an action to wind up its affairs and to place them in a Receiver's hands. The names of various gentlemen were suggested to the court by Mr. Zeis and by the German Press Society. As was to be expected, these gentlemen were Roman Catholics. Both parties to the action objected to Rosenthal because he was an outsider, and also because he was of the Hebrew faith. In spite of these objections, Rosenthal was appointed Receiver of the society on March 24, 1876, through the influence of John Kelly, it is said, who wished to prevent the disclosures concerning the management of the corporation's affairs, which might reflect on the character of some of his friends and influential supporters. Rosenthal was chosen by Mr. Kelly as his tool in the matter for particular reasons, the principal one of which perhaps was that he had done some well-meant service to the Tammany Hall Sachem by the furious onslaught which he made against Recorder Hackett in the Municipal canvass last year. Rosenthal had in consequence forfeited his position as interpreter in the Court of General Sessions, and had received a very meagre reward only in being selected as one of the minor clerks of the Surrogate's office by Delano C. Calvin, when this nominee of John Kelly's was appointed by Gov. Tilden to fill temporarily the office made vacant by the death of Surrogate Van Schaick. The position of Receiver of the German Press Society promised to be a somewhat lucrative one, and therefore Mr. Kelly thought he had better get it for Rosenthal as a reward for his services. Again, the fact that the latter understanding the use of the German language, and had had some experience, even though of brief duration, as a newspaper man, gave some show of reason to the appointment. Mr. Kelly seems to have been sure of being able to get the position for any one whom he desired, and also showed, or pretended to show, a great deal of influence over Judge Donohue, of the Supreme Court.

Some of the facts from which these inferences are drawn are as follows: On March 15, nine days before the Receiver's appointment, Kelly sent a letter to Rosenthal, informing the latter that he wished to see him on business of great importance to him. Rosenthal called on Kelly on March 19, and at the interview the latter told him that the Presse was insolvent, and would be put by "Charley"—meaning Judge Donohue—into his hands as Receiver. He said the paper was to be edited in the interest of Tammany Hall and the Catholic Church, and that no exposure whatever of any frauds was to be made under any circumstances. On March 20, Kelly's private secretary sent Rosenthal a note telling him to transact matters through Mr. Wingate, and to avoid seeing Mr. Kelly personally. On March 21, three days before the case came up for argument before Judge Donohue, the latter informed Rosenthal that he had appointed him Receiver of the concern, and wished him to "keep the paper going" until after the election. After this, on March 24, as before stated, Rosenthal was appointed Receiver, notwithstanding the fact that his appointment was not agreeable either to Zeis or to the society. His bondsmen, too, were accepted without examination. He was notified to engage as his attorneys Messrs. Wingate & Cullen, in whose library Kelly has his private office, and who are Kelly's attorneys. Mr. Wingate put his brother-in-law, one Charles T. Carret, at the Society's books as an expert, at a salary of $50 per week. In a letter introducing Carret to the Receiver, Mr. Wingate pithily says he has explained to Carret what ought to be done. From the sequel, it appears that he did understand. He came finally to the conclusion that the books of the society had been kept in such a confused condition that he could not possibly make any clear statement in regard to the condition of the concern. Wingate & Cullen then advised Rosenthal, according to the latter's statement, to hush up the matter of the Secretary's condition, and to sell the house No. 7 Frankfort street, the deed of which was then in the name of John Miller, to Henry Hanselmann for the first and second mortgages. They also advised the sale of the good-will and personal property, worth about twenty thousand dollars, to Bernard Amend for $5,000. The old Board of Directors of the society, in accordance with the agreement mentioned in the Receiver's report, promised to pay all the debts of the corporation in full by June 17. Failing to do so, however, the Receiver began to call in subscriptions for the unpaid stock. John Kelly thereupon threatened to have Rosenthal removed from his position in the Surrogate's office unless he immediately resigned his position as Receiver. Rosenthal refused to accede to this good-natured request, and Messrs. Wingate & Cullen withdrew from their position as attorneys to the Receiver, alleging that he was not acting as they advised. The second application was then made for the removal of the Receiver by ex-Judge Michael C. Gross. The Receiver was accused of mismanagement and of failing to account for $1,700. The latter amount was claimed by Rosenthal for counsel fees, and for Receiver's fees for the six months he held the position of Receiver. The case was set down for argument before Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, but Rosenthal, as has been stated, resigned before the argument was had, and Anthony Miller was then appointed by Judge Donohue to the position of Receiver.

RATIFYING THE NOMINATION OF GEN. ANSON G. McCOOK.

The Republicans of the Eighth Congressional District held a meeting at No. 748 Broadway last evening, for the purpose of ratifying the nomination of Gen. Anson G. McCook for Congress. The meeting was well attended, many of those present being representatives of some of the largest and most wealthy business firms in the community. Hon. Thomas E. Stewart presided. Charles P. Shaw, the gentleman who had received the Congressional nomination from the Independent Republican Association of the district, sent a letter declining to be a candidate, and urging all Republicans of the district to unite in support of the regular nominee—Gen. McCook. Later in the evening he put in a personal appearance, and made a rousing speech in behalf of the entire State and national ticket. Toward the close of the meeting Gen. McCook entered the hall and was received with three hearty cheers and a "tiger." He made a short speech, in the course of which he said that the nomination had been conferred upon him without any request or even wish on his part. He was alive to the importance of the situation, and thought if the Republicans of the district would give him an earnest and hearty support he would win the fight and wrest the district from the Democrats. It was a Republican district, and there was no reason why a Republican should not represent it in Congress. At the conclusion of Gen. McCook's speech Dr. Hayes, the candidate for Assembly from the Eighth District, and two or three other gentlemen addressed the meeting, which finally broke up about 11 o'clock.

A CHILD BISHOP.

The Salt Lake Herald says: "As Bishop Tuttle of Montana was making his annual visitation last July, a ranchman and his wife brought their family to be baptized. Among them was a fine baby boy of six months. When the Bishop asked the names of the children, the mother gave as the baby's name, 'Bishop Tuttle.' The Bishop mildly suggested that his first name was Daniel, but the mother could not be driven from her resolution, and the baby was accordingly baptized Bishop Tuttle Curtis."

THE JEROME PARK RACES.

THE EXTRA DAY'S SPORT.

FIVE GOOD CONTESTS, TWO OF WHICH WERE WON BY OUTSIDERS—THE FIRST EVENT WON BY SPRINGLET, THE SECOND BY VIGIL, THE THIRD BY MADGE, THE FOURTH BY REUTER'S FILLY, AND THE STEEPLE CHASE BY BULLET.

The extra day's racing at Jerome Park was a fitting termination to a most brilliant season. The weather of yesterday could not have been better for out-door sports, and consequently thousands of people wended their way to Fordham to enjoy the sport furnished by the American Jockey Club. The Coaching Club was strongly represented on the lawn below the Club House, and was not the least attractive feature of the day. The programme furnished an attractive series of events, five in number, and two of them were won by rank outsiders, which added zest to the sport if not profit to the members of the betting ring. Although all the events were well contested, probably the grandest race of the year was that between Vigil and St. Martin in the two-mile dash. Two gamer horses have not been seen together for a long time, and the final struggle between them fully justified the vast amount of enthusiasm manifested by the spectators. Vigil won the race by half a head only, but sustained the reputation he has made, by winning the Dixie and Breckenridge Stakes at Baltimore, as the best colt of the year. The track was in good condition, and the time made was most satisfactory for the lateness of the season.

THE SELLING RACE.

The sport was opened with a selling race for all ages, one mile and a quarter, with the usual allowances. For this there were eight nominations, and included Charles Reed's b. c. Red Coat, L. C. Chase's ch. f. Springlet, George Longstaff's br. h. Partnership, P. Dwyer & Brother's ch. h. Galway, H. O. Bernard's b. f. Explosion, Carr & Co.'s ch. f. Ella Wotten, M. Donohue's ch. g. Waco, and D. McDaniel's ch. f. Sister of Mercy. The knowing ones plunged heavily on Red Coat, and he brought $175; Partnership, $115; Galway, $195; Sister of Mercy, $45; Waco, $30, and the field $45. The winner came out of the field, and it was an astounding surprise to the heavy betting men. The distance being a mile and a quarter, they were started from the three-quarter pole, and Mr. Conner gave them an excellent start, the lot getting away together, and they came up the stretch in a neck, with Partnership leading and Waco second. The latter took the lead as they approached the stand, and Partnership gave place to Explosion. When they reached the judge's stand, finishing the first quarter of a mile, Waco was a length in the lead of Explosion, who was lapped at the quarter by Partnership, followed closely by Galway and Springlet. As they ran round the turn, Explosion pushed past Waco, who fell back to the neck, and Partnership ran up toward the front. When they reached the quarter pole Explosion showed three parts of her length in advance of Partnership, with Galway third and Springlet fourth; but when they ran under the Club-house hill Partnership ran up equal with Explosion, while Galway and Springlet followed hard upon them. When they were going out of sight, these four were at close quarters and making a determined struggle. On their re-appearance they were still at close quarters, with Explosion cutting out the work, but when they turned into the home-stretch the filly gave it up, while Springlet ran into the lead, pursued by Galway and Red Coat. Springlet held her own to the finish and won the race by a length, in 2:15½, from Galway, who was a length in front of Red Coat, and Partnership fourth, he having quit when he looked like a winner. The result was a great surprise, and was an ominous opening for the heavy betting men.

Time—2:15½.

According to the conditions of the race the winner was sold at auction, and was bought for $505, by L. A. Hitchcock, the surplus going to the second horse.

THE TWO MILES.

The second event presented by the programme was the sweepstakes for all ages—two miles—which was got up purposely to bring the Brother to Bassett, Tom Ochiltree, and Parole into competition. The laudable desire of the Jockey Club was, however, frustrated by the three horses being out of condition, but the contest yesterday was such a good one that it fully compensated for the absence of the above-named horses. There were four nominations to the sweepstakes, and included P. Dwyer & Bro's. b. c. Vigil, James A. Grinstead's ch. c. St. Martin, D. McDaniel's blk. c. Virginius, and H. O. Bernard's b. c. Waller. When they were summoned to the post, the latter did not respond, and Vigil was a great favorite over the other two, bringing $100 to $30 in every pool, and the gameness of Vigil only succeeded in bringing his backers out safely. When the flag fell the three got under way together, but Vigil soon got to the front, and made the pace, leading the other two about three lengths around the turn. He reached the quarter pole three lengths in front of St. Martin, who was a length before Virginius. Running under the club-house bluff Vigil got away another length from St. Martin, while there was a length of daylight between the latter and Virginius. There was little change as they went around the bluff out of sight, but when they reappeared Vigil was leading three lengths, and there was but half a length of daylight between St. Martin and Virginius. When they came round into the homestretch Hayward brought St. Martin up to Vigil, and Virginius followed them up closely. There was a grand struggle up the stretch, and when they finished the first mile Vigil and St. Martin were dead even, with Virginius but a length behind. The spectators were now thoroughly aroused, as there were indications of a mighty struggle. Going round the turn St. Martin outran Vigil, and gradually worked to the front, and by the time the quarter pole was reached he led the favorite a length, and Virginius was three lengths behind. There was now the most intense excitement, and the backers of St. Martin sent up cheer after cheer as he went out of sight with a lead of a length and a half. When they reappeared, however, Vigil had closed the daylight between him and St. Martin, while the pace was too much for Virginius, who had fallen out of the race. When they turned into the homestretch St. Martin still had the best of it, but Spillman brought Vigil up to the saddle girth of St. Martin at the furlong pole, where they both began whipping furiously. St. Martin held his advantage for nearly two hundred yards, and the spectators fairly yelled with enthusiasm. As they neared the stand Vigil gained inch by inch under the whip, and finally got level with St. Martin. Still whipping, the pair came to the goal, where Vigil succeeded in catching the eye of the judges by half a head, amid the most intense excitement. Virginius was a dozen lengths behind. Time—3:40. When they returned to weight both the horses and riders received an ovation, for a gamer race was never witnessed on this continent. Vigil showed signs of lameness when pulled up, but nothing serious is expected from it.

SUMMARY.

SECOND RACE.—Sweepstakes for all ages; $200 entrance, half forfeit, with $2,000 added; the second horse to receive $500 out of the stakes; two miles; four nominations; value to winner, $2,200.

Time—3:40.

THE MILE HEATS.

The third contest of the day was one of mile heats for all ages, which had the following fine contestants, viz.: Charles Reed's ch. f. Athlene, P. Dwyer & Brother's blk. c. Rhadamanthus, W. R. Babcock's ch. h. Egypt, James A. Grinstead's b. c. Mettle, and D. McDaniel's ch. m. Madge. This field furnished a splendid race, and for the second time the knowing ones were at fault, and the race captured by a fielder. There was much plunging on Rhadamanthus, and he brought in the pools $350, Mettle $270, Egypt $95, and the field $135.

FIRST HEAT.—Athlene was very fractious and delayed the start. They broke away three times, after which the flag fell to a rather straggling start, Mettle having the best of it by a length, Egypt second, a length before the others. When they went round the turn Mettle and Egypt struggled hard for the pole, and at the quarter-pole Mettle showed half a length before Egypt, who was a length away from Athlene, and she a length before Rhadamanthus, while Madge ran easily in the rear. When they ran under the club-house hill Egypt again challenged Mettle, and soon led the latter a neck, while Athlene was close upon them. In this manner they went out of sight, and when they reappeared Mettle and Egypt were still racing head and head a length before Rhadamanthus and Athlene, who were also yoked, with Madge behind them. On the home-stretch the contest between Mettle and Egypt continued, but the former lasted the longest, and won the heat by three-quarters of a length, in 1:47¾. Rhadamanthus was third, Athlene fourth, and Madge fifth.

Second Heat.—Mettle was now a great favorite, and brought $300, Egypt selling for $110, and the field $200. Mettle had the best of the send-off, Egypt second, and Rhadamanthus third. These three were lapping each other's quarters as they ran round the turn, but at the quarter-pole Egypt and Mettle were head and head, half a length before Rhadamanthus, the other two being close up. Under the hill Mettle shook off Egypt and led him half a length on passing from view, and reappeared a length before Egypt, with Rhadamanthus and the other two close up. As soon as they came into the home-stretch Egypt gave it up, and Mettle came away as if he would win easily, but Madge came up on the outside with a rush and challenged Mettle, who quit, and was given the whip, without avail however, as Madge passed him and won the heat by a length in 1:47¾, Athlene third, Egypt fourth and Rhadamanthus last.

Third Heat.—All but Mettle and Madge were sent to the stable, and Madge was the favorite at $650 to $200. When the flag fell Madge immediately took the lead, and was two lengths before Mettle at the quarter-pole. The latter was unable to get near the mare until they were on the lower turn, when he reached the tail of Madge, but from this point all was over, as Madge came away, and won easily by two lengths in 1:48.

SUMMARY.

THIRD RACE.—Purse $600, for all ages; beaten maidens allowed 5 pounds; mile heats.

D. McDaniel's ch. m. Madge, 5 years, by imp. Australian, out of Alabama, by Brown Dick, 121 pounds. Clark....5 1 1
J. A. Grinstead's b. c. Mettle, 3 years, by Melbourne, Jr., dam by imp. Eclipse, 105 pounds. Sayers....1 2 2

W. R. Babcock's ch. h. Egypt, five years, by Planet, out of Lady Barry, by imp. Emue, 124 pounds. Hazzard....2 4 r.o.
Dwyer & Brother's blk. c. Rhadamanthus, four years, by imp. Leamington, out of Nemesis, by imp. Eclipse; 118 pounds. Barbee....3 5 r.o.

THE GENTLEMAN'S HACK RACE.

The fourth contest on the programme was a hack race for gentleman riders, for a purse of $500, dash of one mile. There were six entries but only four of them started, including H. Alexandre's b. m. Pollywog; A. B. Purdy's b. f. Florrie; W. E. Peet's b. h. Retriever, and Robert Center's Minnie Minor, filly. The latter was the favorite, and in the pools brought $125, Pollywog, $70, Florrie, $55, and Retriever $55. The race occasioned some amusement, especially among the ladies. Center stole a march on his competitors and got away three lengths before Retriever, the other two straggling. At the quarter pole, Center led Retriever three lengths, Pollywog third, and Florrie a long way behind. Center increased his lead to four lengths as they went out of sight, and when they again appeared he was leading three lengths, Pollywog second, Retriever having gone to pieces. There was only two in the race, and the struggle between Center's filly and Pollywog was exciting, Center winning by a neck only. The others were beaten off a long way.

SUMMARY.

FOURTH RACE.—Purse, $500, (presented by Mr. Pierre Lorillard,) of which $100 to the second horse; for horses which have not been in a training stable within the last six months; entrance free; gentlemen riders; Welter weights; one mile.

Robert Center's b. f., three years, by Narragansett, out of Minnie Minor, 140 pounds; Mr. Center....1
H. Alexandre's b. m. Pollywog, five years, by imp. Eclipse, out of Oliata, 159 pounds; Mr. Alexandre 2
A. B. Purdy's b. f. Florrie, three years; Mr. Reeves..3
W. E. Peet's b. h. Retriever, six years, by Leamington, out of Margaret Anderson, 162 pounds; Mr. Peet....4
Time—1:56.

THE STEEPLECHASE.

The season was brought to a close with a handicap steeplechase for a purse of $700, presented by Mr. James Gordon Bennett. It was over the the usual course and seven entries were made for the event, but only four of them appeared, viz.: Bullet, Deadhead, Resolute, and Doubtful. In the pools Bullet brought $350, Deadhead $200. Resolute $180, and Doubtful $100. They were started from the foot of the hill as usual, and when the flag fell the four moved off together. Doubtful then went to the front, and led a length over the first obstacle, followed by Resolute two lengths before Bullet and Deadhead. They ran round the north field to the fourth jump, when Doubtful bolted out of the course, and that finished him. Returning to the starting point, at the foot of the bluff. Resolute led a length. Bullet was second, six lengths before Dead Head. They then ran into the south field and over the first obstacle. Resolute led Bullet three lengths, and the latter was four lengths away from Dead Head. After taking the several jumps in the south field in admirable style, they approached the waterin front of the grand stand, when Bullet took the lead from Resolute and then ran to the hill near the polo grounds. Bullet came over the mall a length ahead of Resolute, who was three lengths ahead of Deadhead. They ran in this order into the south field again, and ran into the track on the lower turn, where Bullet still led, a length from Resolute, with Deadhead within striking distance. There was a splendid race up the stretch and the three took the last hurdle close together. Resolute soon fell back, however, and a fine struggle ensued between Bullet and Deadhead, which resulted in a well-earned victory for the former by half a length. Resolute was three lengths behind. Time—4:16.

SUMMARY.

FIFTH RACE.—Handicap Steeplechase. Purse, $700, (presented by Mr. James Gordon Bennett,) of which $100 to the second horse; entrance free. The usual course.

THE REMAINING DUTY.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I think that any impartial outsider who attended the meeting at Cooper Institute the other evening when Mr. Evarts delivered his brilliant oration, and who saw last night the great Republican torchlight procession, will admit that the most respectable, the most solid, the best elements of cosmopolitan New-York, are now enlisted on the side of Hayes and Wheeler. This is indeed so; and all that is wanted to give the Republican Party a splendid majority is for the people to keep up the enthusiasm the remaining few days, and rally in their true strength for the election. New-York has crushed out its terrible municipal corruption in the overthrow of Tweed and the Ring. It has now another duty to perform, and that is to thoroughly trample upon every vestige of national dishonor, to kill and put out of sight copperheadism and disloyalty, by letting Mr. Tilden see that the City, the State, and the country have no use for him. It seems to me that his mere nomination to the highest office in the gift of the people was a cruel insult to the memory of those who fell in the defense of the Union; and I trust that the survivors of the war will be spared the degradation of having him elected to the Presidency. To accomplish this, and make us feel that we have a country of which we may well be proud, it is only necessary that every citizen should attend to his simple duty of voting on Tuesday next, Nov. 7. NATHAN APPLETON.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, Nov. 4, 1876.

AN EXAMPLE FOR ABSENTEE REPUBLICANS.

Dr. Walter Cary, of Buffalo, who was sojourning with his family in Europe, reflecting that as a good citizen it was his duty to be at home on the first Tuesday in November, took passage in the steamer Britanic, of the White Star Line, on the 26th of October, arrived in New-York yesterday, and departed for Buffalo in the evening train, intending to deposit a ballot for Hayes and Wheeler, Morgan, Rogers and Spaulding on Tuesday. Dr. Cary's example should not be lost upon Republicans who are visiting the Centennial Exposition. Tuesday being a legal holiday, it is presumed that clerks and employes will avail themselves of the occasion to visit Philadelphia. Republicans who intend to do so should deposit their ballots on their way to Jersey City.

EXTRAORDINARY TRANSATLANTIC STEAMING.

The White Star steamer Britannic, Capt. Thompson, anchored on the Bar at 1 A. M. Saturday, having completed the fastest passage on record, viz., seven days, thirteen hours, eleven minutes mean time from Queenstown to New-York. The previous four passages of this steamer show the following unequaled average: Seven days, eighteen hours, forty-four minutes from Queenstown to New-York; seven days, twenty hours, twenty-five minutes from New-York to Queenstown.

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

THE HEMPSTEAD RESERVOIR CASE.

THE KINGSLEY & KEENEY SUIT AGAINST THE CITY BEFORE A REFEREE—TESTIMONY OF THE CHIEF ENGINEER.

The taking of testimony in the suit of Kingsley & Keeney, the Hempstead Reservoir contractors, against the City of Brooklyn, was resumed yesterday before the Referees, Judge Lott and Messrs. Rodman and Fisher, Col. Julius W. Adams, the Chief Engineer of the work, being again placed on the stand, and his cross-examination being continued. He testified that he had no recollection of the existence of any map showing a proposed bottom of the reservoir except the profile map; there was a recognized slant of the bottom about two-tenths in one hundred feet. The change in the bottom, the witness said, was made dependent on the change in the flow-line, but it did not necessarily follow; a part of the increased excavation of 600,000 yards was taken from the sides, but the greater part of it from the bottom. The change from a thirty-two to a twenty-nine foot level was made between Jan. 9 and March 12, 1872, Mr. Probasco being the principal engineer in charge on the latter date. That gentleman's predecessor, Mr. Clapp, was appointed in January, 1871, and after Mr. Probasco's appointment, he was retained as his assistant until some time in 1874, when the force was reduced. Witness could not say whether or not he visited the work between the time of the execution of the contract and the appointment of 1872. His impression was that no excavating was done within the proposed reservoir up to the appointment of Mr. Probasco. On May 6, 1872, ground was broken on the reservoir proper, and it was at this time the excavating began; the forty-seven unexcavated acres below Nichol's dam are filled with roots and muck with gravel at the bottom; the depth of the excavation around these forty-seven acres was from 3½ to 4 feet; the water of the reservoir would be purer if the impure composition contained in these forty-seven acres was removed; the change in the water level had made a difference of 200,000,000 of gallons less in the holding capacity of the reservoir, and an additional expense of excavating 600,000 yards of earth; the expense of an intermediate dam would be about $230,000.

Q.—Was the very paper with the very writing upon it which was sent to the printer and from which the original specifications were printed the same paper that you sent in your communication to the Water Board on June 20, 1870? A.—I presume so; that is as far as I can say about it.

Q.—What amount do you assume to be the present holding capacity of the reservoir? A.—One thousand millions of gallons for the city's use at a water level of twenty-nine or thirty feet.

Q.—By reducing the water level from thirty-two to twenty-nine feet, and thus losing 200 000,000 of gallons of water capacity, how could you bring out the reservoir capacity the same now as by the first level? A.—I did it by including the saturated sand outside the reservoir. Leaving out this saturated sand the capacity of the reservoir at twenty-nine feet level would not be as great as it would be at thirty-two feet level, but the thirty-two feet level would have held more than the thousand millions of gallons capacity demanded.

Q.—When were the changes in the specifications made with reference to the second dam? A.—All changes were made previous to my sending the paper to the Water Board on June 20, 1870; there was a clause in the original specifications making a second dam optional before this time.

In response to further questions by Mr. Parsons, who carried on the cross-examination, the witness said that he first knew Messrs. Kingsley & Keeney intimately in 1867, when they had the Wallabout contract. He had first had under consideration the subject of a new storage reservoir in the Fall of 1869, but did not recollect having had any specific interview with the plaintiffs between that time and the execution of their contract. William Beard had called at his office with other contractors in reference to the matter, and had made an earnest effort for the privilege of proposing for the contract. The witness had never occupied the same office with William A. Fowler, nor did he ever see either of the plaintiffs there. He identified a letter sent by him on Dec. 12, 1871, to E. J. Lowber, Chairman of the Construction Committee, suggesting that bids for the contract for the building of the reservoir be invited from James McDonald, E. J. White, Edward Friel, Henry Wells and Kingsley & Keeney, as experienced and home contractors. He did not know at this time that Mr. Beard was desirous of becoming a bidder at $400,000 less than Kingsley & Keeney; if done by Mr. Beard, the work would not have answered its purpose so well; witness excluded the item for extra hauling from all the bids. The examination was adjourned at this point until Thursday next.

A CONFIDENCE OPERATOR ON TRIAL.

THE EXAMINATION OF MRS. GIBSON IN JERSEY CITY—NO TESTIMONY ADDUCED TO SUSTAIN THE CHARGE OF SWINDLING.

Mrs. Mary A. Gibson, the confidence woman, who was arrested in Philadelphia on Thursday, for having swindled residents of Jersey City, had an examination before Justice Keese yesterday morning. She was defended by Counselor Bretzfeldt of Hoboken. Samuel Garretson, whom it is alleged she swindled out of $1,400, testified that he became acquainted with the woman on Sept. 1, and she told him of her great inheritance in Germany. She subsequently telegraphed to him requesting a loan of $250, which he sent her. He subsequently advanced her smaller sums, and at one time $500, until the aggregate of her indebtedness to him was $1,400. When he loaned her the sum of $500 she gave him a power of attorney, empowering him to take care of her estate for her. Before he had made the first loan he had visited her in Philadelphia, and remained at her house for ten or twelve days. He admitted that he was moved by considerations of friendship to make the advances, and not upon the security she had given him. Horace Farrier testified to the receipt by him from her of the two envelopes directed to Cardinal McCloskey, purporting to contain papers relating to her estate in Germany, but which really contained only blank sheets of paper. Inspector Benjamin Murphy, who arrested the woman, testified that she told him that the envelopes contained papers establishing her title to her property. When he showed her the blank sheets of paper found in the envelope she feigned astonishment and said that there must be some mistake about it. Bernard McCloskey, a Hoboken livery-stable dealer, admitted that he had also been victimized by the woman. When he had pressed her for payment, she had taken one of his carriages and gone to New-York for the purpose, as she said, of getting some money from Cardinal McCloskey. She drove to a house on Elizabeth street, and said the Cardinal was not at home. No proof was adduced that her representations were false, and the further hearing was adjourned till to-morrow morning.

DEFRAUDING THE REVENUE.

About ten days ago, Isaac Lichienstein was arrested by the United States authorities as the reputed proprietor of the cigar manufactory No. 173 East Broadway; and at the same time two boys, employes in the place, named Judah Lamoso and Levi Kaufman, were taken into custody as witnesses, the charge against the former being that of carrying on business without a license. The two boys were examined separately by Assistant United States Attorney F. W. Pullman, and swore to affidavits fully implicating the accused, and also promised information which, if verified, would implicate other dealers in tobacco in this City. The statements of the witnesses went into the minutest details, they unhesitatingly admitting that they were employed by Lichtenstein. Much interest seemed to be manifested in the case, for at the examination last Thursday, a large number of their class was present. The prosecution, however, at the start met with a severe drawback, for both the witnesses denied sriatim the statements sworn to a few days before. The examination was then adjourned till to-morrow, and yesterday upon affidavit of District Attorney Pullman, warrants charging perjury against these witnesses were issued and will be served when they are brought into Court to-morrow.

A REPREHENSIBLE PRACTICE.

Another instance of the reprehensible practice of allowing office boys to open boxes and receive mails for business firms was brought to light yesterday by Special Agent Sharretts. Complaint was made to him of letters received by different persons, answers to which were to be addressed to a certain box, promising to return lost articles upon the receipt of a named amount of money. The complaint once made, and the number of the box given, it was easy to find the culprit, who proved to be an office boy in a Broadway firm, who was intrusted with the key to the letter-box. He made a clean confession of the whole affair, stating that he had written answers to advertisements for lost articles, giving it to be understood that he had found or stolen the same, and would return them, if suitably rewarded and no questions asked. It is known that he has been quite successful in this business, but to what amount is not known. It is not probable that there will be any prosecution in the case.

ARRESTED FOR FRAUDULENT NATURALIZATION.

Martin Powers, John Monahan, and Martin Ballinger, all three residents of Yonkers, and Democrats, were arrested in that city on Friday night, on a charge of having fraudulently obtained their naturalization papers. It seems that some time ago the prisoners appeared before City Judge Baird, of Yonkers, and having sworn that they had previously obtained their first papers from United States Commissioner John J. Davenport, in New-York, they were granted their naturalization papers. On inquiry, it was ascertained at Commissioner Davenport's office in this City that such was not the case, and warrants were immediately placed in the hands of United States Marshals for the arrest of the perjurers. Yesterday afternoon United States Marshals Newcome and White, on a warrant issued by Commissioner Davenport, arrested David Beckett, a Scotchman, in Yonkers, for the same offense. Beckett was brought to this City, as were the other three previously arrested.

THE COUNTY TICKET.

GEN. DIX ACCEPTS THE NOMINATION FOR THE MAYORALTY—HE CONSIDERS IT HIS DUTY TO SERVE—DR. NEWMANN, NOMINEE FOR CORONER, ALSO ACCEPTS.

Hon. Benjamin K. Phelps, Chairman of the Republican County Convention which nominated Gen. John A. Dix for Mayor, on Tuesday evening, received the following letter yesterday from Gen. Dix, accepting the nomination:

Nov. 4, 1876.

GENTLEMEN: I received last evening your favor of the 1st inst. informing me of my unanimous nomination by the delegates representing the Republicans of the City and County of New-York in County Convention for the office of Mayor. I beg you to be assured that I fully appreciate the unanimity with which that nomination is tendered to me. I had hoped never again to be a candidate for office, or to be called on for any political service except that which every citizen owes to his country in emergencies of more than ordinary importance. I believe that such an emergency is upon us now, and no other consideration would outweigh my reluctance to accept the nomination. But convinced, as I am, that the public credit and the interests of the business classes—especially the merchants, manufacturers, and mechanics—are in imminent peril, I am willing that my name be used in any way my political friends think expedient, if in their judgment it will contribute to the success of the Republican cause; for I feel that its success is essential to the tranquillity of the Union, the redemption of the plighted faith of the Government, the restoration of the prosperity of the country, and the preservation of its good name. I am, very truly, yours,

JOHN A. DIX.

BENJAMIN K. PHELPS, Esq., Chairman.
WILLARD BULLARD, Esq., Secretary.

The following note accompanied the letter, and explains why an immediate answer was not given to the notification sent to Gen. Dix advising him of his nomination:

Nov. 4, 1876.

DEAR SIR: In sending you my letter accompanying this note and accepting the Republican nomination for Mayor, do not infer that the delay had any other cause than my absence from the City. On the 1st, the day on which your letter advising me of my nomination was written, I was addressing a meeting at Jamaica, and the day after, another, at Sag Harbor, from which I returned last evening. I speak in Westchester County this evening, and have only time to add that I am truly yours,

JOHN A. DIX.

BENJAMIN K. PHELPS, Esq.

DR. LOUIS NEUMANN ACCEPTS.

NEW-YORK, Nov. 3, 1876.

Hon. Benj. K. Phelps, Chairman Republican County Convention:

DEAR SIR: Having received your letter notifying me of my nomination as Coroner by the Republican County Convention, I take pleasure to reply that I accept that honor, and shall endeavor to do my best to advance the interest of our ticket in general. Respectfully yours, LOUIS NEUMANN, No. 205 William street.

THE ERIE RAILWAY AFFAIRS.

The report of James C. Spencer, passing on the accounts of the Receiver of the Erie Railway Company for the month of August, was filed in the County Clerk's office yesterday. From this it appears that the balance of cash in the Receiver's hands on Aug. 1, 1876, was $388,765 38. This, with the receipts during the month, makes up a total of $2,199,615 94; $1,636,472 72 were disbursed during the month, leaving a balance on hand Aug. 31 of $563,143 22. The aggregate of certificates of indebtedness issued during the receivership foots up $3,441,539 40, of which $2,261,539 40 have been paid and canceled. There are at present outstanding and unpaid $1,180,000 of such certificates; $280,000 of them were canceled and $190,000 of them issued during August; $50,000 were loaned on call during the month.

A MOTHER RECOVERS HER CHILD.

About three years ago Augusta Hawkins, a resident of Brooklyn, being in poor circumstances, sent her three-year-old son to the Howard Colored Orphan Asylum, one of the rules of which provides that any person placing a child or children in the asylum as boarders shall pay the board regularly, and in case of its non-payment in six months, and a refusal on the part of the person placing the child in the care of the institution to pay it, the child or children should be considered as surrendered to the society. Since that time Mrs. Hawkins has been somewhat prosperous, and made application to the officers of the institution for her son, but they, claiming that she had failed to pay his board, refused to give him to her. She procured a writ of habeas corpus, and the hearing of the argument on a demurrer to the return same up yesterday in the City Court, Brooklyn, before Judge Reynolds, who, after hearing the evidence of the mother as to her ability to support the child, awarded the custody of the boy to her.

MUNICIPAL NOMINATIONS IN ELIZABETH, N. J.

DECISIONS.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

By Judge Larremore.

Application Granted.—The Equitable Life Assurance Society vs. Powers, Nos. 1, 2, and 3; The Equitable Life Assurance Society vs. Silverman; The Equitable Life Assurance Society vs. Laverty.

Gersten vs. The Society Gael Zedeck.—Order granted.

By Judge Barrett.

Matter of Linde.—The report does not seem to follow the testimony as to Emma Linde, whose share has to be paid in cash as purchaser; this should be paid in cash to render the mortgage to the other three perfectly safe. Then I do not understand how the widow is entitled to the two sums specified.

Greenfield vs. Saltabassi.—Referred to Roscoe H. Channing, Esq., to take proof of the facts and circumstances stated in the complaint, and to examine the sureties on the undertaking, and to report thereon as to its sufficiency.

Matter of the Church of St. Michael.—Opinion.

Matter of Bonney.—The Receiver had better await the result of the suit. If favorable to the company he will probably realize much more than on a sale.

SUPERIOR COURT—CIRCUIT—PART II.

By Judge Van Vorst.

Cowles vs. Watson.—Memorandum.

SUPERIOR COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

By Chief Justice Curtis.

Glass vs. Muller et al.—Motion dismissed, with $10 costs to plaintiff, and stay set aside.

Etzel vs. Byrne et al.—Commission ordered.

The Jagger Iron Company vs. Phelps.—Motion denied, with $10 costs to defendant.

Stiger vs. Partridge.—Demurrer sustained, and that the defendant have judgment.

The Wahoo Tool Manufacturing Company vs. Lathrop.—Reference ordered.

Bond vs. McNiff.—Motion for allowance granted.

Concklin vs. Crater.—Motion to amend answer granted on payment of plaintiff's costs of October Term, and of opposing motion.

MARINE COURT—CHAMBERS.

By Judge McAdam.

Davis vs. Forbes.—Arrest set aside.

Deering vs. Demerest.—Motion granted.

ANOTHER SOUTHERN LETTER.

A letter from a resident of Huntsville, Ala., to a Northern friend contains the following: "We trust that you will meet the solid South for Tilden with a solid North for Hayes. The argument used to carry the South solid for the Democracy is the shot-gun and pistol logic. I know this is not accredited in the North; or at least, a great many honest people do not believe it; but it is a fact. If you had been in Huntsville on the day of the last election you would have seen enough of shot-gun argument to convince you that it is effective. Before the election the guns and pistols were thoroughly scoured up—not privately, but publicly—so that Republicans could see and understand that the Democracy were prepared for any emergency that might arise. The store-keepers and clerks went to their meals, and returned with their guns on their shoulders; went home at night and returned in the morning, making a display of their firearms. Of course, we understood that it meant business. One of our candidates for the Legislature was shot down on election day, and one man in particular thought the proper way to proceed was to commence and kill and drive out every white Radical in Huntsville, and he openly declared so. The Republicans were not allowed to send a telegram over the wires on election day; even a Deputy United States Marshal could not telegraph to the Marshal, who was in Decatur, twenty-four miles from here. He tried to send a telegram, and it was taken from him and torn to pieces, and the Deputy was very well satisfied when he escaped unhurt."

GENERAL TELEGRAPH NEWS

SONNETS.

I.

Day after day I watch a level shore
That the sea chafes and vexes into strife,
And hear the earth give back a sullen roar
I linger, though the voice of duty cries,
And bids me seek a path I fear to tread,
Lest I should lose the memory of thine eyes.
Oh, love, and walk alone among the dead.
Thou shalt speak for me, love; I turn to thee;
Oh, tell me, shall I follow them that weep,
And toil and know not rest, nor ever see
A sunny heaven, smiling on their sleep;
Or shall I tarry here? On me doth fall
A sudden light! I stay; it is thy call!

II.

Is this the truth, and is it thou dost stand
Between my work and me, to turn away
My steps when I would seek the prom'sed land,
And hold me back from hope and bid me stay
To listen ever to the moaning sound
Of restless waves that break upon the shore,
And waken dreary echoes all around?
Dost thou desire that I shall never more
The golden morn remember, never find
The peace of evening and the sunset glow?
Is it thy will that all the past I bind
Around a heavy heart, that beateth now
With stormy throbs, because that past is near,
But thou, the light of life, thou art not here?

III.

My spirit hovers round thy happy home,
And clings to every dear familiar nook,
And wanders where thy feet have loved to roam,
Dost thou not hear the passionate sob and cry?
Dost thou not heed the anguish of my lot,
Or see the strife when I am forced to fly
From thee to those sad realms where thou art not?
To them a stern fate points, and then I gaze
On thee, and through the dark of cruel death
And silence of thy grave, I find the days,
When all my life was thine, and every breath
Of aspiration raised my soul to thee;
But now I weep; and thou, oh dost thou see?

IV.

I passed a night of anguish and of fear
Upon the lake that laves that silent land
Where rest the spirits blest. Oh, will they hear
My cry, or come to seek me on the strand?
So deep and sweet their sleep, they heed no moan,
Watching the loved and lost. At last alone,
Apart I see thee. Peace within those eyes,
Where late the eager spirit seemed to chafe,
Peace reigns instead of sad solicitude;
Unto thy faithful heart. The daylight rude
Has shattered my fond dream; but ever more
I watch and wait for thee upon the shore.

V.

I think, when I look back from some high sphere
On the dim narrow path my feet have trod—
While I have struggled upward, to the clear
Serene beatitude, the peace of God—
I shall not heed the summer charm, the song
Of wood-birds piping through the long sweet day,
The murmur of the limpid stream along
The meadows, or the glad young flowers of May.
Stronger than action, deeper than all thought,
And full and true and sweeter than the tone
Of any music that my heart hath caught
Will be the memory of thy love. Alone
The beauteous earth, oh love, is dear to me,
Because it leads me on to death and thee.

VI.

Bethink thee, oh my heart, if it be well,
That beauty, when it maketh thee rejoice,
Recalls one vision only. Canst thou tell
Why sweetest sounds seem echoes of one voice?
And wilt thou linger with the past alone,
The dead and past and gone? Thou dost not hear
The cry of pain; thou dost not heed the moan
Of them that work and die, that weep and fear!
Ah, yes, my heart makes answer, but I see
A hope for all; I know there is no wrong,
No sorrow here for any, or for me,
That is as great as love, or is as strong.
Oh, love, I fear not. Where thou art, I'm brave;
I dare to follow thee, even to the grave.

VII.

A lonely bird that's prisoned in its cage,
And hangs amid a city's noise and strife,
With such hard fate doth ceaseless warfare wage—
Will not forego the tenderness of life,
The melody of love; but with spread wings
It seems to see again the happy nest,
The mate that broods and listens; and it sings
With joy that looks as great as if the west
Was all aflame, and golden lights did play
Beneath the leaves, and fleck the banks, and chase
The ripples of the stream, and every day
Brought new delight, and love, and lover's grace.
That song of love, or hope, or memory,
I too can sing when my heart aches for thee.

VIII.

I follow thee as doth the patient earth
The star she loves. I follow, oh, my love!
But never find thee! Well I know the worth
Of words and looks of thine, for high above
All hope I treasure memory. Ah, yes!
But still I move, and still my life must flow
Part from thine. Long Winter days confess
Thine absence, and the Summer nights I know,
With all their beauty are but dark and sad.
The sanguine Spring still says that thou art near,
But day has sped; darkness again is here;
I do but follow thee alone, forlorn,
Although I find thee at the break of morn.

IX.

Yes, love, thou art the one star that I seek.
I follow thee afar, alone, and yet
I never lose thee. Hast thou seen how weak
The earth is and how poor, that thou hast met
The bare cold mountains with thy sunny rays,
And called forth even there a happy flower,
That lives through frosty nights and wintry days
To blossom in thy sight for one short hour?
I bless thee for the darkness and the light;
For full of thee are darkness, grief, and pain.
I bless thee for the day and for the night,
And for the heavy loss that is my gain.
I follow, for 'tis thou that leadest me,
Even through the dark I follow. Thou dost see.

X.

Am I so far from thee, or all too near?
Lo! when I say my life is spent, and thou
Art absent, whispers tell me thou art here.
The gentle touch of unseen hands even now
Doth draw me close; even now I hear thee chide
With tender words the wrong of my despair;
I see how thin the veil that seems to hide
Thy form, to cloud and darken all the air,
And blot the past. I see that all my life
Is shared with thee forever. Now I know
That thou art with me, so at last the strife
Is ended, and with it my bitter woe.
But do thou teach me patience, love, I pray;
I pray thee make me patient day by day.

XI.

Methinks that thou hast led me to a vast
And populous region! All around I see
Thick gathered forms, like those that in the past
And in my dreams were wont to follow thee.
Fall jubilant; then myriad colors start,
And wake, and leap forth out of death and night.
Thus with a sudden flash comes to my heart
The sure belief that where thou art is light.
Where'er thy noble spirit wanders, there

XII.

I stand alone upon a mountain height
Into the tender blue and golden light
Of evening. Dark and stormy was the day;
But now I see the restless torrents find
Their peace in yon still lake; I see the snow
Lie soft upon the hills. And now the wind
That did in desolate places moan and blow,
The dreadful precipice and forests dark,
Are void of terror. For from land and sea
They are thy messengers, sent forth to mark
Thy path and guide me on my way to thee.
I linger not, but through the dark I come,
Through dark and daylight unto thee, my home.

FATALITY.

"But, Chevalier, do consider—"

"But, Baron, I have considered, and nothing you can say or do will shake my resolution. This is Tuesday. I give you till Thursday noon—not an hour beyond. If you are unwilling, or unable—no matter which—to settle with me then, you know the consequences, and you will have to take them. Surely, it is easy enough for you to get the money from your uncle, who is worth millions; or, if he prove obdurate, why not address yourself to the Prince? I know that he has helped you before, and he will help you again."

"My uncle! You do not know the stern old man. When he cleared me the last time he made me take a solemn oath that I would keep henceforth within my very handsome allowance, and he swore that if I broke my oath he would cast me off for evermore, even though I am all the kith and kin he has in the world. The Prince! How could I dare to face him with another application for help to discharge a gambling debt, after having pledged my word of honor to him that I would never again touch dice, card, or cue?"

"Well, Baron, that is your lookout. I can only repeat I must have my money by Thursday noon, or—you know how you are likely to fare. Why not raise the money from the Jews? With your brilliant expectations, surely there ought to be no difficulty. A paltry ten thousand florins; pooh!"

"So I will, Chevalier; I will raise the money from the Jews, at whatever sacrifice. Only you must give me time. One brief fortnight is all I ask—"

"I cannot do it."

"One week, then. I swear to you, Chevalier—I give you my sacred word of honor—in eight days from this you shall be paid."

"You swear! You give your word of honor! What, think you, is the value of your oath and of your word of honor? You have broken the one to your uncle, the other to the Prince, and you expect me to trust in either? No. I must be in Paris next Monday, and I want to leave here on Thursday. You must make up your mind—either the one thing or the other. If you do not satisfy my claim at noon on Thursday, I post you as a defaulter, as one who, under the shield of high birth and supposed great wealth, stakes his credit and honor against hard cash, and when the cards and the dice fall against him, would pay the debt of honor contracted by him with idle promises to settle at some future time—promises which he means never to keep, most likely."

"Liar! base liar and slanderer!" shouted the Baron, the fair color of his face turned to ashen gray, and his blue eyes flashing with uncontrollable fury. "You shall bitterly atone for this insult. Take that!" and with his delicate white hand he struck the Chevalier a heavy blow straight in the face.

The swarthy complexion of the man thus assaulted grew a shade deeper and darker, and his evil black eyes shone with intenser malignity. He seemed to gather himself up for a deadly spring upon the Baron; but this first impulse was suppressed on the instant. He stood motionless for the space of a few seconds, then, with apparent calm, he took out his handkerchief, and coolly wiped the spurting blood off his face.

"Meseems, Sir Baron," he cried, with sneering irony, "you fancy you have felicitously discovered a new way of paying debts of honor. Pity only that there is a fatal flaw in your most ingenious device. I will not fight you before you have paid me, you see. So your crafty calculation comes to naught."

"Be it so, Sir," he said, calmly. "Come here on Thursday, and you shall be paid. You had better provide yourself with a second meanwhile. We shall fight after."

"Yes, be it so," he muttered; "his money first, his life after. Coarse German brute, to dare to strike me! Not that, only that the fire is burning my nails, it might have been as well not to drive him to desperation. But that cursed affair at Berlin has completely upset me. I somehow feel as if the bloodhounds were on my track, and my only safety lay in immediate flight to Paris. I dare not stay here, and I must gather every sou I can lay hands on. As for this German clown, I'll spit or shoot him like a dog before I go, or my trusty right hand must indeed have lost its cunning."

The Chevalier St. Hilaire belonged to a collateral branch of the ancient Lenoncourt family. He had in early life squandered a rich inheritance left him by his mother, only daughter and sole heiress of Admiral Kerouart, a Breton nobleman, who had amassed great wealth by successful privateering in the wars between France and Great Britain. Of expensive tastes and prodigal habits, and utterly unprincipled and unscrupulous, the Chevalier had, when his estates and money were gone, sold himself to the vile camarilla clique surrounding Marie Antoinette. A few years later he had gone over to the winning side, and had served Robespierre, Barras, and Fouché, in succession. He was still in the pay of the French Police, though he trusted chiefly to cards and dice to supply him with the means of living to his liking. His age was about fifty.

Baron Walter was a young man of twenty-four, descended from an ancient patrician family of Frankfort-on-the-Main, which had been ennobled by the German Emperor about a century back. He was the last of his race, and had only one relative surviving on the mother's side, an uncle, to wit, Councillor Müller, a very wealthy old bachelor. The young Baron was handsome and accomplished, and of most engaging manners. Unhappily, self-indulgence, self-conceit, and weakness formed the chief ingredients of his character. He was one of those neutral beings who, lacking alike exalted virtues and notable vices, are for that reason the most susceptible of yielding to the opportunity or force of circumstances, even to the committal of crime. More unhappily still, he was an ingrained gamester. He had gambled away his patrimony, and his uncle, who allowed him the very handsome sum of ten thousand florins a year, had more than once paid his debts. So had also the then Grand Duke of Frankfort, Charles Theodor, (Dalberg,) Prince Primate and President of the Rhenan Confederation, who had made him his first chamberlain, and with whom he was a great favorite.

He had recently had recourse to both these generous friends and protectors to free him from a load of rashly-incurred debts, and he had pledged his oath and his word of honor that he would henceforth reform. Nay, the very day before our story commences, he had obtained from his uncle ten thousand florins, to take up an often-renewed bill given by him to one Lazarus Levi, then a rather well-known denizen of the Jewish quarter in Frankfort. He was aware that the uncle had taken care to inform Lazarus Levi that the Baron would settle with him on the day the bill would fall due, (Wednesday,) and to request notice of the settlement to be forwarded to him; and he knew his uncle's sternness and firmness of character too well to dare to turn to other uses the money intrusted to him for this specific purpose.

Some days before the opening of our story, the Baron had lost to the Chevalier St. Hilaire some five thousand florins in cash, and ten thousand on his written promise to pay immediately when called on. This in brief explanation of the scene with which our story opens.

Late in the evening of the same day Lazarus Levi sat in the innermost sanctum of his house, in the Jewish quarter, about three doors from the dwelling of the great Meyer Anselm Rothschild. It was a short time before the social and political emancipation of the Frankfort Jews, decreed by the noble and enlightened Dalberg.

In the free imperial City of Frankfort the Jews had had a specially hard life of it, and it continued still the habit with them to live apparently in misery and squalor in the wretched Jewish quarter. But, although the outside and the outer rooms of the houses looked wretched enough, there was to be found in not a few of them an inner part handsomely and even luxuriantly appointed in every respect, where the family really lived. It was so in Lazarus Levi's dwelling.

It was in a richly-furnished apartment, then, that Lazarus Levi sat at supper with his wife and his two grown-up daughters. To look at the old man in splendid Oriental attire, his fingers bedizened with diamonds and rubies and sapphires and emeralds and costly pearls, (a weakness indulged in to excess by most Orientals,) no one, surely, not intimately acquainted with the man, could possibly have taken him for the grimy-faced, dirty-handed old Jew, in ragged gaberdine and greasy headgear, universally known in Frankfort and for many miles around as Lazarus Levi, money agent and diamond broker; for, of course, he professed to be too poor to have money of his own to lend, or to own precious stones.

He had been telling his wife and daughter that he intended to go to Mayence next morning, a neighbor of his, one Aaron Veit, having proposed to take him there in his trap; that he expected to do a good stroke of business in precious stones offered for sale there; and that he would set out on his walk back early in the afternoon, so as to reach home before nightfall, (it was in the month of July;) and his wife was just enjoining upon him to order a butt of wine of their old friend, the landlord of the Golden Lamb, at Mayence, when the servant of the family, old Rachel, entered the room to inform her master that a gentleman was waiting outside the street-door—for, without her master's orders, she would admit no one into the house—who had told her that he must see Mr. Levi that very night.

After a few moments' reflection the old man rapidly stripped off his rings, divested himself of his splendid upper attire, cast off his satin slippers, and, taking the oil-lamp out of Rachel's hand, proceeded to the outer room, where he expeditiously put on his old shoes, his ragged gaberdine, and his greasy cap. He then went to the door, opened the little window in the centre, and threw the light of the lamp on the face of his visitor.

He found, to his very great amazement, that it was Baron Walter who had risked himself thus late at night into the Jewish quarter. He cautiously and noiselessly undid the bolt, and admitted the Christian nobleman to the wretched room in which he generally transacted business with customers who called upon him.

The Baron clearly had an important object in view; he was charming in his manner to the Jew. With condescending affability he gave the old man a friendly pat on the back, (with an inward shudder at the contact of his aristocratic hand with the Jew's dirty, greasy vestment.) "Ah, Lazarus, my good friend," he said, in a jovial tone, "you did not expect to see me to-night, I wager. I come on business, old man; to put a chance in your way to make a thousand florins. What think you of that?"

The old Jew darted a swift, sharp glance at the young man's face, in which he at once detected, beneath the assumed mask of jauntiness and mirth, unmistakable traces of deep anxiety and care. "The gracious Sir Baron," he said, in a slow, hesitating way, "is very good and very kind to think of befriending poor old Lazarus, who will never live to be able to do anything in return for the gracious Sir Baron's great goodness to him."

"Now drop that, Lazarus, I say. You know that's a crammer," said the Baron, giving the old man a friendly poke under the ribs. "The fact is, old man, I want you to renew my bill, which falls due to-morrow, for another two months, and I'll sign this new bill for eleven thousand florins instead of ten thousand. There, you old cormorant, there is an offer for you! But you must, of course, hand me the old document, and tell my uncle that I have paid you the money. What say you?"

"What can I say, most gracious Sir Baron? All I can say is that I cannot do it. You should know that I have got no moneys of my own. I am only the poor agent of Meyer Anselm, who has advanced the money to you through me, and has intrusted your bill to me simply for collection. He knows that your gracious Sir Uncle, the great Councillor Müller, has given you the money to take up the bill, and he expects me to pay it over to him on Friday morning, as I am obliged to-morrow to go to Mayence, and, having to walk all the way back, shall not be home in time to see him at night. Meyer Anselm is a good friend to me; I and my family live by him. But he is a strict man, and a man of business, and if he is not paid his money on Friday morning, he will go to your gracious Sir Uncle to get his money there, as your gracious Sir Uncle has promised him."

"Nonsense, Lazarus; you know that you can do this for me," said the poor Baron, his voice trembling with ill-suppressed emotion and anxiety. "Look here, I will make the interest two thousand florins, instead of one thousand—nay, I'll make it three thousand; only let me keep this money two months longer—I shall have plenty of money then."

is so good to me! But how can I? oblige the gracious Sir Baron, who "Would I not do anything to It is Meyer Anselm's moneys, which must be paid him on Friday. Next week perhaps Meyer Anselm may consent to advance the money again to the gracious Sir Baron; but nothing can be done till then."

"Listen to me, Lazarus," said the Baron desperately. "I must keep this money; I cannot part with it to-morrow. Do not tell me you cannot do this for me. I know that old Rothschild has nothing to do with the matter. It is your own money that you have lent me. If you let me keep it, I will sign you an undertaking to pay you thirty thousand florins at my uncle's death. You know the old man is above seventy."

The old Jew pondered deeply for some time. The offer was a most tempting one. But he had in his pocket Councillor Müller's letter, in which he was plainly told that, in the event of the money not being paid by the Baron, he, the Councillor, would discharge the debt upon immediate application to him; but that he would under no circumstances and on no consideration ever again be answerable for any debt whatever contracted by his nephew, whom he was determined to cast off utterly and disinherit if after this he should go on drawing bills or contracting debts. And Lazarus knew both the Councillor and the Baron too well to have any doubt but that this was most likely to be the ultimate upshot of the matter.

So, having duly weighed in his mind the chances in favor of and against the Baron's proposal, he resolved to have nothing to do with it—at least not just then. "The gracious Sir Baron," he said at last, with sharp decision, "must pardon me if I am forced to decline his gracious offer. I tell the gracious Sir Baron once more that I am but a poor agent in all loan transactions, and the gracious Sir Baron may ask Meyer Anselm, it he will not believe me. But I will talk to Meyer Anselm about the matter. I doubt not he will do it; I cannot, by the Taousef Jontof! which the gracious Sir Baron knows is a most solemn asseveration for a Jew to make."

After this the Baron felt that it would be useless to pursue the subject further. He was even on the point of handing the amount of the bill at once over to Lazarus Levi; but he suddenly changed his mind.

"Well, then, Lazarus," he said, with assumed indifference, "it must even be as you will have it. You must try to raise the money for me next week. As you are going to Mayence to-morrow, you may call at my place in going, and bring the bill with you. I will pay you in notes, so that you will have no heavy load to carry along with you on your journey. Good night."

With much bowing and scraping, and many hollow asseverations of his willingness to do anything in his power to serve the gracious Sir Baron, the Jew let out his visitor, who rapidly got away from the Jewish quarter to the respectable part of the grand ducal city.

Early next morning Aaron Veit's trap drew up to the door of Baron Walter's villa, outside the city, on the road to Mayence. Old Lazarus, having got down, was speedily ushered into the Baron's reception-room, where he was soon joined by the master of the place. Before handing the notes to his Jew creditor, in exchange for the bill, Baron Walter made one last desperate effort to induce the old man to let him keep the money. He offered him a post-orbit for one hundred thousand florins. It was in vain. The dazzling offer, instead of alluring the Jew, as the Baron clearly had expected, tended only to make the Hebrew still more cautious. He firmly declined again, telling the Baron, by way of consolation, that he had every reason to believe Meyer Anselm would do it for him next week. So the Baron handed the money over at last, with a deep sigh, looking fixedly at Lazarus, saying, with curious abruptness and in somewhat sharp tones, "There, take your money; and may you not have reason to repent your morning's work before the day is out!"

Lazarus Levi paid little heed to this outburst of angry feeling. He climbed up again into the trap, rejoicing that he had got his ten thousand florins safe in his pocket, and he and his friend were soon rolling on the road to Mayence.

About an hour after, Baron Walter left his villa upon horseback. He rode into the city, where he called upon one of his intimates, a gentleman in the Grand Duke's service, with whom he took counsel about next day's hostile meeting with the Chevalier St. Hilaire. He then rode off in the direction of Hanau.

In the large guest-room of the Golden Lamb at Mayence sat two travelers, looking like journeymen craftsmen, with their knapsacks deposited on the ground near them. They were discussing with evident relish a magnum of Rhenish wine, which the host had served to them along with a huge omelet and a copious salad. The one was a handsome, olive-complexioned, dark-eyed man of about forty, clearly either an Italian or a Spaniard; the other was a fair-faced, fair-haired, blue-eyed, unmistakable son of the great German Fatherland, which at that time, however, was simply a geographical and ethnical expression. To judge by the eagerness and gladsomeness of their conversation, and the many handshakings across the table, it was clear that they were old friends who had accidentally met here after a long separation.

They were conversing in a language evidently unknown to the inmates of the room. As mine host, however, was casting from time to time an intelligent glance in their direction, he perhaps understood what they were saying, though it certainly did not seem to interest him much.

Besides, the host's attention was soon altogether taken off the two strangers by the entrance of Lazarus Levi, whom Boniface heartily welcomed to his house; Master Ephraim Troll, the host of the Golden Lamb, being, though a very good Christian, a most intimate friend of the money-agent and his family.

A succulent dinner was soon placed before old Lazarus, who did full justice to it, and to the bottle of Rhenish out of the landlord's own special bin, which the two set about discussing with a hearty will.

So much good cheer opened the Jew's heart, and made him forget his habitual caution, to the extent even that he openly displayed to his friend a magnificent set of jewels which he told Master Troll he had just purchased of a Mayence dealer in precious stones, and had hopes of selling again at a fair profit to the wife of a distinguished patrician of Frankfort, to whom he intended to show them next morning, as he should only be back there late in the evening, having to walk all the way.

The glittering baubles in the Jew's hands attracted of course the attention of the other parties in the room, more particularly, it seemed, of the two travellers.

"Holy Virgin!" said the dark man in Spanish to his fair-faced companion; "just look at that, Carlos! What a sad pity that such splendid gems should be in the hands of an unbelieving Jew! Why, they would make both of us rich, and I might go on with you to your village, and you might afterward come back with me to Spain, where we might purchase an estate with the money these things would bring."

"True, Manuel, my friend," replied the other in the same language, laughing; "true for you. If one might only chance to meet yon unbelieving Jew, as you call him, alone somewhere in a dark wood, and give him a gentle tap on the head with a persuader like mine there"—pointing to a fresh-cut bough of ash, rudely lopped and fashioned into a stick, which was lying across one of the knapsacks—"one might have the things for the mere taking."

Just then Master Ephraim Troll, who had lent a most attentive ear to the above interchange of sentiments anent the Jew and his sparkling baubles, was called to the other end of the room, where a guest wished to settle with him.

He was detained some time. When he came back to the table at which Lazarus was seated, the two travelers had risen, and got ready to leave; they paid their score and took their departure.

When they were gone, Lazarus Levi rose also, to set out on his journey home; but mine host would not hear of it. He insisted on their cracking another half-bottle together in his own private snuggery, to which he led the way, after instructing a drawer to replace him in the guest-room.

When they were comfortably seated there, Master Troll addressed his visitor:

"Friend Lazarus," he said, with great seriousness, "do you know that you have been most imprudent? What on earth could possess you to exhibit that set of precious stones in a public room? Those two chaps you saw seated at the next table spotted them at once; and if you only could have understood what they were saying about them and about you, you would feel the reverse of easy, I know. Though to look at those men one would hardly believe that either of them would be likely to commit a crime; but, then, temptation is a sad thing. You know I have lived ten years in Spain, so I understand the language. Well, they were talking in Spanish; they clearly had no notion that anybody in the room could understand them. They had heard you say that you intended to walk back to Frankfort this afternoon. You know about half way the road leads through a dense wood, where it is often very lonely. Now, from what I overheard these chaps say to one another, I am afraid they may intend to lie in wait for you there, to strip you of your property. So I think the best you can do, friend Lazarus is to stay here to-night, and go back to Frankfort to-morrow morning in Aaron Veit's trap."

Lazarus Levi was very much frightened by this information; but, as he told the host, he must be back in Frankfort that night. For himself personally he had no great fear; all that these men were likely to do, after all, was to stop him; but then, he certainly would not much relish having his pockets full of valuables to be stripped of them. So he proposed to leave his jewelry and his pocket-book, containing ten thousand florins in notes, and even his purse with a few florins in small change, with his excellent and most trusty friend, Ephraim Troll, keeping absolutely nothing upon him but a knife and a lucky kreuzer (a German farthing.) If he were stopped then, he need simply let his assailants search him, and they would soon permit him to continue his journey.

As no persuasion could induce the Jew to postpone his return to Frankfort till next day, Master Troll consented to take the whole of his valuable property into his safekeeping, and after an hour or so Lazarus Levi took his departure.

Late at night Baron Walter returned to his villa. If the valet who rushed out to receive his master could have seen his face, he would have been frightened at the haggard, scared-like look it wore.

"Sad news, gracious Sir," said the valet, while helping the Baron to dismount, "very sad news. The gracious Sir had only left a few minutes when a messenger came to bring the shocking news that your gracious uncle had just expired—"

"My uncle dead!" cried the Baron, in a choked voice, "this morning! and the messenger here a few minutes after I was gone! O great God!" and he fell down in a fainting-fit.

"How dearly the gracious Sir Baron loved his poor uncle!" said the valet to himself as he endeavoured to raise the insensible body from the ground.

With the assistance of other servants, the Baron was got into the house, and placed on a sofa. Cold water was sprinkled in his face, and smelling-salts put to his nostrils. He revived; he cast an intensely anxious and fearful look all around him; his face was deadly pale and looked shockingly distorted in the uncertain glare of the wax candles. "A few minutes! Only a few minutes! Dead! dead!" he muttered despairingly; then he shuddered and shivered as with an ague-fit. Gradually he calmed down a little, and asked the servants for more detailed information.

They repeated to him that he had barely ridden off in the morning when a messenger had brought the sad news of his uncle's sudden death. The Councillor had been struck down by a fit of apoplexy. His servants had at once dispatched a messenger to announce the melancholy event to the nephew, and to request his presence at his late uncle's, now his own, house. He had in vain been sought for all day in every possible place and direction.

Notwithstanding the lateness of the hour, the Baron resolved to go that very night to his late uncle's mansion in the city. He accordingly set out upon horseback, attended by his valet. He found the household still up. The body of his uncle had already been laid out in the principal bedroom. The Councillor's old confidential valet handed to the Baron the keys of the private desk in his dead master's study. The Baron had the wax candles lighted in the study, where, after sending the servants away, he shut himself up for the night.

Next day at noon the Chevalier St. Hilaire presented himself at the Baron's villa in company with a French officer, whom he had brought with him from Mayence, to act as his second in the proposed duel.

The Baron, who looked deadly pale, and seemed suddenly to have grown twenty years older in a single night, received his visitors with stately distant politeness. He handed the chevalier ten thousand florins in notes, receiving in exchange his own promise to pay. The Baron's intended second having also arrived at the villa, accompanied by a surgeon, the five gentlemen mounted their horses and rode off to beyond Sachsenhausen, where they soon found a convenient spot.

The Baron's second, seeing how fearfully his principal seemed affected by his uncle's sudden death, would have taken upon himself to appeal to the chevalier's witness for a postponement of the duel to some other day—after the funeral—but the Baron prevented him, sternly insisting upon fighting then and there. The chevalier, who, as the party insulted, claimed the choice of weapons, decided in favor of the small sword, as the Baron's agitation must place the latter at a disadvantage in a sword encounter with a cool, collected, and skillful antagonist.

The preliminaries having been duly arranged, and the ground measured off, the word "Allez" was just going to be given, when the clatter of rapidly approaching horses' hoofs was heard, and an instant after three mounted gendarmes—a Lieutenant and two Brigadiers—came dashing on to the ground. The two Brigadiers jumped from their horses, and, at a sign from the Lieutenant, threw themselves upon the Chevalier St. Hilaire, who stood rooted to the spot, bereft seemingly of all power of resistance.

"Baron Walter, and you, gentlemen, put up your swords! This duel cannot take place!" shouted the Lieutenant.

"Why not?" cried the Baron, who seemed desperately bent upon fighting the Chevalier. "Surely the Prince cannot mean to cover me with ignominy by such ill-judged interference in this matter!" For he believed Charles Theodor had sent the gendarmes to stop the duel, of which he had most likely been informed by his [the Baron's] second.

"Ay," replied the Lieutenant, "simply because a man of honor cannot fight a detected cheat—one who uses packed and prepared cards and cogged dice to rob the unwary—aye, worse even than that—a murderer!"

"A mur-d-der-r-er," stammered the Baron through his ashy, trembling lips. "Great God! a mur-de-rer!" Then he continued in a burst of agonized passion, "Oh, that I had but known this one day sooner! One day!—ay, a few minutes—and between that lies Heaven or hell!"

"Of course, your money will be returned to you, Baron, as yon murderous caitiff has clearly robbed you of it," said the Lieutenant, who really believed somehow that the Baron was bewailing the misfortune of not having known the true character of the Chevalier in time to keep his money in his pocket.

"How completely the death of his uncle and this discovery seemes to have unhinged him!" said the Baron's second compassionately. "We had better return to Frankfort at once."

It was quite true. The Chevalier St. Hilaire had a short time before this stabbed to the heart a Colonel attached to the French Embassy at Berlin, who had detected him playing with cogged dice. The murdered man had been found, with a set of these firmly clinched in his right hand, and a torn-off coat-button in his left. The clue thus afforded had been sufficient to enable the Police to trace the murderer to Frankfort; here a perquisition at his chambers in the hotel where he had taken up his residence had supplied damning proofs of his guilt. The result we have seen.

That very day all Frankfort was dreadfully agitated by the report of a cowardly murder perpetrated within a few miles of the gates of the city. The murdered body of old Lazarus Levi, the money-agent and diamond-broker, had been found in a wood about eight English miles from Frankfort; and the murderer, it was added, had been taken quite near it, and almost red-handed. He was now lodged in the city jail. It appears he was one Karl Posselt, of Höchst, a tailor by trade, who, after some ten years' wandering in foreign parts, had just been on the point of reaching home on his return, when a sudden temptation had led him to commit the fearful crime of murder. Lazarus Levi had foolishly displayed a valuable set of diamonds at an inn in Mayence, in presence of the man Posselt and a companion of his, a Spaniard, who, however, had made his escape, and had not yet been captured. There could be no doubt that the two men must have waylaid the old man on the road through the wood, about half way between Mayence and Frankfort. The unhappy Jew had actually been warned of his danger by Ephraim Troll, the host of the Golden Lamb at Mayence, who had overheard the two plotting the assault upon their victim. But he had thought it would be sufficient to leave his valuables behind him. There could be no doubt, however, that the two ruffians, enraged most likely by their disappointment, had killed the poor old man by a blow on the head with a cudgel. The latter had indeed been found quite near the spot of the murder, and where the one murderer had been taken while endeavoring to effect his escape. It had been amply proved already, by the evidence of Troll and several of his guests and servants, that the prisoner brought this cudgel with him to the inn, and had left with it. Besides, Lazarus Levi's knife, with the letters "L. L." engraved on the blade, and the lucky kreuzer which the old Jew was known to have always in his pocket, had both been found upon the accused. So there could be no doubt of the wretch's guilt; yet the brazen-faced villain had the almost inconceivable hardihood to protest his innocence in the face of all these damning proofs of his guilt.

So it was generally reported among the good Frankforters; and for once there appeared really to be very little exaggeration in the popular rumor. The dead body of Lazarus Levi had been found by the gendarmes in the wood, a few yards from the road through it. Curiously enough, the attention of the gendarmes had been directed to the spot by seeing a man suddenly rush from the wood and run across the road to the other side, where he had then been stopped on suspicious of having committed some offense or other. He had told the gendarmes, in fearful agitation, that the body of a man was lying there in the wood, and that he had been running across to a pond on the other side to get some water, with a view of trying to revive him. This desperate attempt at explaining his presence near the murdered man had not imposed, of course, upon the gendarmes, who had taken the suspected murderer at once into custody. The Jew's knife and lucky kreuzer had been found upon him.

When brought before the magistrate charged with the investigation of the crime committed, the man Posselt protested his entire innocence. He stated that he had been away from his native place, Höchst, some ten years, in which he had been wandering through France and Spain, working at his trade in the larger cities and towns. On the morning of the murder he had arrived at Mayence, on his way home. In Mayence he had come unexpectedly upon an old friend of his, a Spaniard, one Manuel Fordati, whom he had known a few years before at Seville, and who had told him that he was then on his way back to Spain. They had entered the Golden Lamb inn to have something to eat and a bottle of wine together. He must admit the truth of Ephraim Troll's statement about the very foolish remark he [the accused] had made to his companion when the unhappy deceased had displayed his rich jewelry. But the landlord ought to have heard also that Manuel Fordati had reproved him [Posselt] there and then for his frivolity, and that he [the accused] had thereupon told his companion that he had only been joking, and that he would be the last man to think of committing a crime even for ten times the worth of Lazarus Levi's jewels. (Troll denied having heard the accused express himself to that effect; but he admitted that he had just then been called to the other end of the room.)

He and his companion, Posselt continued, had then left the Golden Lamb, Fordati going along with him to Castel, where they had finally taken leave of one another, he [Posselt] giving Fordati, by way of a token of friendly remembrance, his stick, which he had cut off an ash-tree only the day before. (This would account for the fact that, when arrested, he had no longer in his possession the stick he had had with him on leaving the Golden Lamb.) He had then gone on his way by himself. Shortly after he found a knife in the middle of the road which he had of course put into his pocket. A little further on he found a kreuzer, which he had also pocketed. Near the spot of the crime his attention had been drawn to the trampled-down grass and broken brushwood by the side of the road skirting the wood. He had thought a struggle must have taken place there, and following up the trace he had come upon the body of the murdered man. Thinking it might be only a swoon, he had rushed to the road to get some water from a pond which he knew to be on the other side. He had then unfortunately been taken prisoner by the gendarmes.

This might look a plausible tale enough, the magistrate told the accused; only it required so many improbable assumptions to make it tally somehow with the ascertained facts of the case; and the evidence pointed all the other way. The stick which had been found in the road near the scene of the murder, and of which the top knob corresponded accurately with the mark of the blow inflicted upon the ill-fated Jew, just behind the right ear, was identified by Troll and the other witnesses as being in every part and respect absolutely like the one seen, and remarked by them at the time, in the guest-room of the Golden Lamb; and Ephraim Troll swore once more most positively that the accused had actually pointed to this identical stick, then lying across his knapsack on the ground, when he had been explaining to his companion how a tap on the head with such a persuader as that would surely suffice to make Lazarus Levi part with his baubles.

So it went hard with the tailor. All his solemn asseverations of innocence were disbelieved, and his persistence in his system of absolute denial of his guilt, which was, as one of the Judges very properly observed, as clear as the sun at noon-day, made the magistrates rather wroth at last. It is most annoying, of course, when a thing has once been established in one's mind by a train of acute and perfectly logical reasoning, to have a fellow go on pertinaciously contradicting one to one's face, saying it's all a grievous mistake and a deplorable blunder. There was this great consolation for the magistrates, that the proverbial vox populi, vox Dei, went along with them unanimously, even the parents and relatives of the wretched accused, including his sweetheart, to whom he was to have been married on his return, giving him up with one accord as a thoroughly bad egg, and declining to hold any communication whatever with the murderous villian, who had brought such dire shame and disgrace upon the family.

The Jewish community in Frankfort felt, of course, intensely interested in the matter; and their head spokesman at the time, old Meyer Anselm Rothschild, had several audiences of the Prince, upon whom he urged the necessity of doing prompt and severe justice in the matter, were it only to show the mob that a Jew's life was now as much protected in Frankfort as a Christian's.

There was one solitary exception to the universal outcry against the abhorred tailor—the Baron Walter. This young nobleman, who seemed to be unable to recover from the shock of his uncle's sudden death, must take it into his foolish head, forsooth, to set his own individual opinion against the mature deliberate judgment of every one, from Charles Theodor down to the smallest Frankfort street boy. The poor Baron's reasoning faculties must have been sadly impaired, indeed, that he could go about maintaining, as he did, that the prisoner's statement might be true after all, and that there was no actual proof, but that "somebody else" might have committed the crime. Of course no one listened to this opinion of the Baron's, which clearly was solely and entirely based upon a false and most reprehensible sentiment of spurious compassion for an atrocious criminal.

Charles Theodor, upon whom his first chamberlain urged again and again his very singular view of the accused's possible innocence, remonstrated mildly with him at first; but when the Baron persisted, forgetting himself at last to such an extent that he actually ventured to remind the Prince how, after all, Lazarus Levi had been only an old Jew, Charles Theodor knitted his brow ominously, and severely reproved his favorite for such a horrid remark, which the Prince Primate said would have been barely excusable even in the darkest period of the Middle Ages, when the unhappy Hebrews were considered to be out of the pale and the protection of the law, and might be massacred with impunity.

"To show you, Baron Walter," continued Charles Theodor, "how your most reprehensive remark must shock me, learn that, by the wish and upon the recommendation of the Emperor Napoleon, and obeying the urgent dictate of my own heart, I have even this day signed a decree, which will be publicly promulgated in the course of the next few days, granting the absolute social and political emancipation of the Jews in the Grand Duchy, and giving to every Hebrew subject of mine the same rights, liberties, and privileges which have up to this been enjoyed exclusively by my Christian subjects. As regards the atrocious murderer of Lazarus Levi, he was condemned this morning, and the sentence shall be carried into execution one fortnight from this day, on my princely word. So let me warn you, Baron, to cease your unbecoming importunities."

Upon this the poor Baron was forced to desist, of course, but Charles Theodor's severe remarks had evidently cut him to the quick. He placed the resignation of his office of first chamberlain in the Prince's hands. Heartily tired of his once favorite's folly, the Prince accepted the resignation tendered.

After this the Baron must have gone clean mad, for it was reported that he had actually tried to bribe the jailer, by the offer of a large sum of money, to let his prisoner escape. The Prince's patience was completely exhausted now. He banished Baron Walter from his dominions. Two days after the Baron's forced departure from Frankfort the murderer of Lazarus Levi was done duly to death, amid the loud and deep execration of an infallible public, in which even the Protestant minister (the murderer was a Lutheran,) who had done his best to prepare Posselt for death, joined to the fullest and heartiest extent, roused, quite naturally, to holy wrath by the perverse pertinacity with which the hardened criminal persisted in proclaiming his innocence even on the scaffold. With that strange self-arrogation of absolute power of binding or loosing, free forgiveness of sins or eternal condemnation, in which the clergy of most churches and sects like so dearly to indulge, the pious man, exasperated beyond his power of endurance, bade the unhappy wretch just about to pass into eternity to abandon all hope that the Almighty could ever forgive him.

Five years had passed away since the execution of Karl Posselt for the murder of Lazarus Levi—five eventful years. The somewhat substantial phantasmagoria conjured up by the great Corsican adventurer had faded away, and old Europe was old Europe once more—with a very considerable difference, of course, which, however, it is not our business here to delineate or dwell upon.

Bonaparte, whilom Emperor of the French, King of Italy, Protector of the Rhenan Confederation, &c., and well-nigh master of the world, had entered upon his six years' agony on the St. Helena rock, and ingenious geneologists had ceased essaying to trace his descent back to Constantine the Great through a supposititious Kalomeros family that was said to have fled to Italy from Constantinople in 1452, when the last Paleologue was somehow in the same most unenviable position as the second Abdul Hamid finds himself in at this present day.

The Grand Duchy of Frankfort had also gone the way of all the ephemeral erections of the "Man of Destiny." Frankfort had recovered once more the style, title, and prestige of a free imperial city, and had exchanged her sham position in the defunct sham Confederation of the Rhine for an equally sham position in the rotten-born sham Confederation of the States of Germany.

The sentence of banishment pronounced by Charles Theodor Dalberg against the Baron Walter had, of course, lapsed with the Grand Duchy, and the Baron was at perfect liberty to return to his native city.

He came back, after an absence of five years, perfectly restored, to all outward appearance at least, to health and strength, physical and moral. The murder of the old Jew and the execution of the truculent tailor had been swept off men's memories by the impetuous current of events; and the Frankforters really took so very little interest in that defunct affair, that they would not even trouble to remember Baron Walter's once notorious hare-brained efforts to rescue the atrocious criminal from his richly-deserved fate.

Still to some very few of them, who would occasionally just allude to the affair in a merely cursory way, the Baron would confess, with a smile of pity at his own past folly, that he was perfectly cured now of all doubt or uncertainty on the point of Posselt's guilt, and that he only marveled how he could ever have been brought to espouse the cause of such a monstrous villain.

Baron Walter had traveled much and in many parts, and he had had ample occasion and many opportunities of observing and studying the institutions of many lands. He was a man of high birth and immense wealth. It was quite natural, therefore, that his fellow-citizens should essay to secure his vast experience for the benefit of their beloved city. But, strange to say, the baron refused steadily to accept civic office and civic honor of any kind. He told his friends in a playful way that he was the idlest beggar alive, and that the merest shadow of the least possible work or responsibility was enough to frighten his indolent mind out of all propriety.

So, after a time, they ceased their importunities to force office upon him; they desisted the more readily as they found him fully up to the mark in the fulfillment of his social obligations; he acted as the most princely Amphitryon that Frankfort had ever been able to boast of. He was, indeed, the most charming host that ever entertained guests, and at the many banquets, which he gave with truly profuse liberality, he was the gayest of the gay, albeit those who lived more in his intimacy would occasionally detect a sudden sharp spasm of pain flitting over his smiling features, and darkening the sunny expression of his face. However, this excited but little remark; as it was well known how fine-strung was the Baron's nervous organization, and how fearfully the death of his uncle had affected and shaken him at the time.

That such a splendid catch in the matrimonial fishpond as this Frankfort Crœsus should set all match-making mothers and all marriageable young ladies of the place angling and netting was only quite natural; but the great fish steadfastly declined nibbling at the most tempting baits, and gave the most alluring silk nets a wide berth. When driven into a corner by some more than ordinarily enterprising and determined matron or maiden, he would jocularly declare that he was born a bachelor and meant to die a bachelor, and that his love and admiration of the sex was catholic, embracing the entire female community, so that he could never bring himself to make an invidious distinction in favor of any one individual member of it.

Ten more years passed away thus. Nemo mortalium ante mortem felix, which is intended to mean here, freely translated, that the oldest and wiliest bachelor, so long as there is breath in his body, is never quite proof against the snares and pitfalls laid and spread for him by the fair sex, and may find himself matrimonially noosed before he even dreams of it.

So also here.

A patrician of Frankfort, who had lived some twenty-five years in London, and had married there, returned about this time to his native city a widower, accompanied by his only daughter and heiress, a bewitching young maiden of eighteen, to whom the Baron Walter was introduced at a ball given by the Austrian Consul General.

Before the Baron had been an hour under the magic charm of this young lady's marvelous beauty and brilliant conversation, he felt that he had at last met his fate. From real, rooted disinclination to the married state, he struggled hard against it, however, even to the extent of going away from Frankfort for a time to avoid meeting his enslaver. All in vain. He felt so irresistibly attracted to her that he had to come back. The young lady, on her part, being the reverse of indifferent to the highborn, handsome, rich, and accomplished man, it came naturally to pass that six months after their first meeting they gave a most gorgeous marriage festival and banquet to an extensive circle of friends in Frankfort.

The young couple lived happily together apparently for several years. The Baron continued to keep open house, and the Baroness proved a most charming hostess. There seemed really to be no cloud in the bright sky of these favorites of Fortune, except, perhaps, that their marriage remained childless. But in the intimacy of their inner life all was not so lightsome as it looked to outward seeming. The Baroness had soon discovered, to her great grief that her husband had occasionally dark fits of deep melancholy, when he was morose, taciturn, and dissatisfied with every body and everything around him, and apt to fly into angry passion without the least apparent cause. He was also unhappily subject to periodical visitations of distressing nightmares, when he would desperately struggle in his troubled sleep with imaginary foes. "Help, help!" he would cry in a half-choked voice. "Dead, dead! Oh, no, not dead—not dead! Great God, surely not dead! Oh, fatality, fatality! Hold, hold! do not kill him, he did not do it! Look here, here! Guilt, guilt; the guilt of blood! Can you not see it? Oh, the agony of this! Rich! respected! murderer! twofold murderer! Let him go, I say! Here, here! Let me live! It was not I; it was fate, fate, inexorable fate! Dead, dead! He, too, poor fellow! innocent, innocent! and I—O my God!" So he would go on raving, to his wife's intensest horror and distress.

To his wife's eager and solicitous questions he would return abrupt, half-angry answers, begging her not to trouble herself about him; he had been several years in America, he would say, among lawless men, where he had been forced to witness a deal of violence and bloodshed, which would occasionally return to his memory in his dreams. With this explanation the Baroness had to rest satisfied perforce. So the years rolled on. The poor wife, who truly loved her husband, became more and more convinced that there must be some very heavy trouble weighing on his mind, and that the mere reminiscence of horrors he might have witnessed in America would not account for his evident acute sufferings under the horrible oppression of these distressing fits and nightmares.

In one of these latter it happened that the unhappy Baron supplemented his habitual broken and incoherent exclamations with a few sentences of such strange pregnant import and meaning, that his wife resolved to fathom the mystery at any cost.

These sentences were: "Good God! to have laid the guilt of murder on my soul for a kreuzer! I did all I could to save him. It was not to be. They would have killed me instead, and I was not fit to die. Oh, the agony I have suffered—the agony I suffer!"

Ce que femme veut—what a woman has once fully made up her mind to, she generally accomplishes.

Besides, his latest fits had so completely prostrated the Baron in body and mind, and the strange directness of the involuntary revelations made by him in his troubled sleep had upset his mental balance so completely, that when his wife passionately entreated him to make her a sharer in his sorrows, whatever they might be, and solemnly swore to him to keep inviolate any secret he might confide to her, he gave way altogether, after an ineffectual struggle to persist in his old asseverations.

He poured into his wife's startled, though already more than half-prepared ears a fearful tale of crime, of which we can here only give a brief outline.

When Lazarus Levi had peremptorily refused to let him keep the money he so absolutely required to save his position and honor from the blow threatened by the Chevalier St. Hilaire, he had for an instant almost decided to pay the money over at once, and let matters take their course. Then a sudden thought had crossed his mind—not a murderous thought precisely in its first conception, yet a thought of rapine and violence. He might make himself master again of the ten thousand florins to be paid to the Jew on the morrow, by waylaying him on his way home at a convenient spot, and dealing him a blow just sufficient to stun him. His honor saved, his position secured, how easy would it be for him afterward to recoup the old Israelite, and to reward him for his sufferings. Thus he had reasoned, and had resolved to act accordingly. He had a small uninhabited house on the road to Hanau, with stables attached. Hither he had ridden on the morning of the day of the murder; here he had disguised himself, and then ridden to the wood, through which part of the road lay, leading from Mayence to Frankfort. Here he had tied up his horse, and cut a stout stick from an ash-tree. He had awaited the Jew's coming, hidden behind the trees. He had seen him approach at last, and heard him lament to himself the loss of his knife through a hole in his pocket. He had then crept cautiously after him, and taken his opportunity to deal him a smart blow behind the right ear—alas, a mortal blow! The poor old man had fallen down without uttering a sound. He had dragged him some ten yards into the wood, when he had, to his horror, discovered that the man was dead. This fearful discovery had completely unnerved him at first; but, after a brief time, the instinct of self-preservation had restored him to his senses and to a correct appreciation of the fearful danger of his position. He had rapidly searched the body for the pocket-book with the ten thousand florins, and he had found nothing beyond Lazarus Levi's lucky kreuzer. In a fit of frenzy he had rushed with this into the road, and thrown it from him with a fearful imprecation. He had then once more recovered his senses, and made his way back to where he had left his horse. He returned to his house on the road to Hanau, destroyed his disguise, and had then finally ridden back to his villa, where, ere even he had dismounted, he had learned that he was the possessor of millions, and that had he but kept at home a few minutes longer in the morning, his soul would not now be stained with the fearful guilt of murder.

Amid torrents of scalding tears, and with convulsive sobs, he told his pitying wife how he had suffered that night, and again next day, when he learned that it was a common cheat and a murderer who had contributed so much to drive him to the perpetration of a fearful crime. But all this suffering even had been as nothing compared with the excruciating agony of his mind when he had come to know that an innocent man had been taken up for his crime, and that a fatal concatenation of accidental circumstances—each of them trifling in itself taken singly, but all of them taken together in their formidable enchainment, with the logical inferences deducible from them, pointing irresistibly to only one possible conclusion—seemed to fix the guilt upon that innocent man. He had then done all he could, consistently with his own safety, to rescue the unhappy man Posselt from his fearful doom; but he had, with vile cowardice, shrunk from the last effective resource, and had allowed the innocent to suffer; thus incurring a twofold guilt of murder. He had traveled over many lands, in search of repose for his troubled mind and guilty conscience, but nowhere had he found it. His days had been days of bitter self-reproach; his nights, nights of agony; his sleep and his dreams, horrible struggles with the dread imaginings of his guilt-burdened soul. He had never touched cards, cue, or dice since; and he had passionately striven to make some slight atonement for his fearful guilt by doing good with his immense wealth; but, alas, there was a curse upon his crime-stained hand, and no good crop would ever spring from its sowings.

The poor wife was most sadly and grievously affected by this fearful confession of guilt; but, with woman's true heart and rich loving nature, she strove to console and comfort the unhappy man, who, indeed, seemed to feel much easier in his mind after having thus unburdened it to his wife.

Nay, his periodical fits appeared after this for a time to grow less frequent and less violent; and wife and husband would actually indulge in a hopeful belief that the poor penitent might in time regain some share of tranquillity of mind and comparative happiness.

But these hopeful symptoms were unhappily deceptive. The Baron had a relapse into a succession of fierce fits. The very thing which had at first seemed to afford such great relief to his overburdened mind—the confession of his crime to his wife—clearly caused him now the intensest anxiety and fear, lest his guilty secret should be betrayed by her to others, and he should, after all these years of fearful suffering, be made to expiate his murderous deed on the scaffold.

One day, when the fit was upon him, and his temper fiercer and more unbearable than ever, he found fault without the least cause with everybody who came in his way; and when his valet ventured to remonstrate against some most unjust imputation, he flew into a fierce passion and lashed the man with his riding-whip. The Baroness succeeded at last in calming him a little, and leading him out into the garden. Here he soon relapsed, however, into his quarrelsome humor. His wife, urged beyond her power of endurance, told him at last that she could bear no longer with these mad outbreaks, and was moving away from him, when he rushed upon her in an uncontrollable fit of frenzy, shouting at the top of his voice, "No, you shall not go, madam! You shall not leave me, that you may tell it was I who killed Lazarus Levi!"

The words had hardly fallen from his frenzied lips when a change came over him—one of those sudden revulsions that are occasionally observed in certain mental disorders. Every drop of blood seemed to recede from his flushed face, leaving it of a deadly pallid hue. "Fatality! Fatality!" he muttered despairingly, and fell to the ground in a heavy fainting-fit.

It was long ere he recovered consciousness. His wife was alone with him, having sent the servants from the room. The fit was over, and he was in the full possession of his senses, but appalled beyond measure at the momentous perilousness of his involuntary ravings. His wife, faithful and true to him in his dire affliction, and assuming now at last what her indulgent affection for him had up to this last sad climax kept overmuch out of play—the natural ascendency of a strong mind and will over the weak and vacillating purposes of a debilitated intellect—urged upon him with resolute decision the imperative necessity of an immediate absolute change of scene and surroundings. She insisted that they should leave Frankfort at once, to travel in France, Italy, Spain, and other lands. She endeavored to cheer the unhappy man by expressing a confident hope that constant change and incessant roaming from place to place would be sure to speedily restore his mind to its proper tone and original vigor. Her loving earnestness succeeded in making him take a more cheerful view of things. He readily subscribed to all she proposed, and it was agreed between them that they should take a long and lasting leave of Frankfort on the morrow; but that morrow never dawned for him.

Husband and wife were just in the midst of an eager discussion of their future plans when a gentleman from the city was announced, who wished to see the Baron Walter. It was Dr. Korner, the then Attorney General of the free City of Frankfort.

The wretched valet had unhappily overheard the Baron's raving utterances, and, smarting under the sense of the gross wrong done him, and the pain and contumely of the lashing inflicted upon him by his master, had at once proceeded to town to denounce the Baron to the authorities upon his own confession.

Now, though the magistrates did not feel disposed to attach very great importance to this denunciation, yet they could not well afford to ignore and disregard it altogether. They contented themselves, however, with dispatching the Attorney General to the Baron's villa to ask that gentleman for an explanation.

The Baron received his unexpected visitor most courteously, and strange to say perhaps, remained perfectly cool and collected to all outward seeming when the nature of the Attorney General's errand was explained to him. He told the high law-officer, in reply to his demand, that he was very grieved to say that he was suffering from occasional fits of mental affection. He had, many years past, taken a very vivid interest in Posselt's trial for the murder of Lazarus Levi, as he had at the time believed in the innocence of the accused. He had since then thoroughly changed his opinion upon that point; but the affair had made so powerful an impression upon his mind that he was even then still occasionally subject to hallucinations in connection with it. He expressed his great regret that the magistrates should even for an instant have given room to the notion that there could possibly be anything serious in the matter; and he proposed to attend the Attorney General then and there to town, to repeat his statement in person to the law authorities.

As the official had come on horseback, the Baron ordered his own horse to be saddled at once, and proceeded to his room to dress.

With foreboding fear the Baroness rushed up stairs to her husband's room. She found him lying on the ground insensible. She was a woman of strong nerve. She did not faint then, but called for help.

The Baron Walter was dead. The fearful excitement of the day had brought on a fit of apoplexy—such at least was the verdict of the medical experts called to examine into the case.

When the widowed Baroness took her husband's rings off his dead fingers, her special attention was attracted to the seal-ring. She detected that the large and heavy cameo opened to the touch of a secret spring. There was a small cavity underneath, empty now, but which had evidently contained some liquid. The faint odor exhaled from it affected her nearly to the loss of consciousness. However, the medical experts had certified that the Baron Walter had died of apoplexy, and there the matter rested.

The magistrates gladly received and accepted the deceased's statement to the Attorney General. It would certainly have been quite against all sound principles of law to have had to take judicial cognizance of the "ravings of a madman," which might in its logical consequences have necessitated the revision of Posselt's trial, compelling that most infallible of all goddesses—Themis—to make the humiliating confession of another judicial murder.—Tinsley's Magazine.

INSTANCES OF RESISTANCE TO MORAL COERCION.—Number one: Dagobert, I believe—I will not be certain of the name—was on the point of being baptized. His spiritual adviser had told him that unless he submitted to the rite salvation was impossible. Ready to step into the font—the ceremony differed from ours—the convert paused and put the following question: "You tell me that there is no road to heaven except by baptism. Where are all my ancestors gone?" "To hell, undoubtedly," was the reply. "I'll go there too; I prefer being uncomfortable among friends to being comfortable among strangers." Number two, which brings us to the death-bed of Machiavelli. The great Italian sophist was dying, surrounded by a host of ecclesiastical dignitaries. Falling asleep for a few moments, he had a vision in which he saw a group of persons, wretched, starving, miserably clad, uttering lamentable cries for bread. "Who are these men?" asked he of one of the priests, explaining the conditions under which he had seen them. "These are the future inmates of paradise," was the answer, which was clenched by "Beati pauperes, quoniam ipsorum est regnum cœlorum." Once more the patient falls asleep, and again a group, this time composed of men of grave demeanor and dignified bearing, passes before him. In their midst he recognizes Plato, Plutarch, Tacitus, and a host of other worthies, discussing momentous and important questions. "Whither are these great men bound?" is his second query on awakening. "They are the reproved. Sapientia hujus sæculi inimica est Dei," is the reply. And now the choice is given to him with whom he will cast in his lot. "I prefer to be in hell with these eminent men, to devise in their society about the affairs of State, than in heaven with this other lot of dirty vagabonds, who flaunt their rags, idiotcy, and ignorance."—Tinsley's Magazine.

SCOTCH HEATHER.—The "brown heath" was Scott's favorite plant, and naturally occurs again and again in the Ettrick Shepherd's songs, perhaps never more beautifully than in his exquisite poem to the Skylark—

"Then when the gloaming comes,
Low in the heather blooms,
Sweet will thy welcome and bed of love be!"

In prose no one has emphasized its cheerful appearance and fitness to the localities it chooses better than Mr. Ruskin, and certainly no one ever drew it with more exact delineation of every curve and grace. When roaming over a highland corrie, however, or marking the sunlight fall on the granite blocks of Dartmoor, all but swallowed, as they are in Summer, by the purple ocean of heather that surges in upon their desolation, the traveler is apt to forget that there are more than one species of heather in the kingdom. There are seven (or, omitting Calluna, six) even in England, while the whole family boasts some four hundred species, to say nothing of the innumerable hybrids and varieties which our gardens produce. Every one knows the common ling or heather, (Calluna,) which is the most widely distributed of the family, ranging, as it does, from Labrador to the Azores, and spreading all along the western coast of Europe from the Atlantic-washed side of Africa, which is the original home of the race. The Scotch heather proper (Erica cinerea) is somewhat thicker and taller than this last, with reddish-purple flowers which delight bees, while its tender shoots are dear to the grouse and blackcock. The cross-leaved heath (E. tetralix) once seen is never forgotten. Fairies might have modeled it in wax, as rising four or five inches from the ground, it hangs its delicately-tinted, rose-flushed flowers over some boggy spot where the cotton-grass flutters in the wind and the plover whistles against the bleating snipe, hence known in Scotland as the "heather-bleat." Whoever has penetrated to the angry coast of the Lizard, either to see its curious churches or to gather its characteristic plants, must have recognized the Cornish heath (E. vagans) as soon as he set foot upon the magnesian limestone, while the ciliated heath occurs in isolated spots in the Cornish peninsula, and Mackay's and the Mediterranean heath are only to be found in the south-western districts of Ireland, being in truth outliers from the flora of the Spanish Peninsula on the Continent. All these heaths are fond of lonely, wind-smitten localities, tenderly flinging their red and purple jewels over nature's desolations, and as the long Summer days die out, rustling their sere and withered flowers (which remain on the plant even when dead, and form the chief characteristic of the family in a botanist's eyes) among snow and wet, determined to do their best to cheer the waste places of the earth. The Autumnal holiday-maker never fails to greet the heath as the symbol of all that is free and pleasurable in out-door life, while to the inmates of the Scotch shieling heather stands in much the same relation for its economic uses as does the bamboo to the Gond or Malay. Even the gipsy and the tramp have reason to bless heather, as it helps them to a livelihood by making brooms, if they only can obtain, or take, right of common where it grows. And to many a mountain child the purple hillside is the only flower garden he knows. But what a garden! reaching from horizon to horizon, itself the best of bedding plants, requiring no care or expenditure, the greener after the worst of storms, when August's sun blazes most fiercely only more purple and luxuriant, the home of all that is elevated and purifying in heart and taste. For "it is not the written poetry which affects us most, but the unwritten poetry of our own youth, and mine is all bound up with heather and fern, and streams flowing under the shade of alders."—Cornhill Magazine.

HOPE'S VICTORY.

Dark clouds had spread across the sky
As I roamed o'er the old-loved ways,
And through the trees the breezes sighed,
While sunbeams hid their golden rays.
"Oh, all is dark and sad around,
And in my heart no light is found;
No more will brightness o'er me spread;
For joy is gone, and hope is dead!"

E'en as I spake the sun shone forth
One heavenly smile from out the sky,
That shed a balm within my breast,
And from my heart sad thoughts did fly.
"Oh, in the gloom that gathers round,
Let trust within the heart be found;
Then, when the sunbeams gild the lea,
Sweet Hope will gain a victory!"

STAGE MACHINERY.—A stage proves to be a very different thing from what the popular eye, gazing from pit or boxes, presumes it to be. A great arch, a sloping floor, pierced here and there with traps, cellars below, regions above, grooves at each side, in which scenes glide forward or back, rollers stretching across, on which the "cloths" behind are rolled up—such is the popular ideal. But the stage of one of the "grand" houses offers a very different spectacle. Their is neither floor nor ceiling proper; but above there is a number of light galleries running round in tiers, while instead of a floor or stage, properly so called, there is a vast expanse of open gratings, or cage work, one below the other, the bars of which are parallel with the seats of a pit. The whole, therefore, is one "clear" from top to bottom, resembling one of those great engine-houses which have iron galleries and flying bridges all round. A large stage looks imposing enough from the boxes; but few, perhaps, are aware that below it, in a grand opera-house, there is a space of about the same height as the stage; and above, more than twice that extent. Thus the space devoted to performance is really no more than a seventh or eighth part of the unseen regions above, below, and around it. The stage and the floors below (in a large theatre there are often four) thus appear like a series of gridirons one beneath the other. This has been found a necessary arrangement, owing to the great scenes stretching the whole width of the stage that must ascend or descend, and have a clear passage. As these openings may be required at any part of the stage, the only mode is to make the entire stage an open frame, covered with panels, which can be drawn away. A "trap" can thus be opened at any spot, as one of these panels containing the trap and its machinery can be inserted. Few persons are aware of what is the traditional and established engine of motion in all the great theatres, or how it is that, in some ambitious transformation scene, a huge iron frame, laden with fifty or sixty figures, can be raised aloft. The agency of windlasses and such mechanical powers would entail a vast expenditure of human strength, which, indeed, it would be found impossible to concentrate at a fixed point. The motive power behind the scenes is wonderfully simple, and even scientific, and has been in use without change for more than a century and a half. It consists in a permanent arrangement of great balance weights always ready mounted, and with which the object to be raised can be readily connected. A child could raise a ton weight to a particular height if the cord passing over a pulley be balanced by another ton weight. Roof and basement, aloft and below, are filled with enormous rollers, each furnished with wheels something like that of a ship's rudder. To these are attached a series of concentric drums, much like the cone-shaped wheel upon which a watch-chain is wound, for the purpose of allowing cords to be wound upon them. The balance-weights are hung in grooves next the walls; while the cords attached to them run up to the roof, pass through pulleys, and are then brought down to the drums, to which they are attached. When some slowly-evolving transformation is in progress, to be crowned by the ascent of some glorified frame stretching the whole width of the stage, on which a number of ladies are bestowed, its ascent is thus contrived. The weight of the machine and its burden is roughly found; it is then attached to the counterpoises, the ropes in their course being made to pass over the drums of the windlass. The men who lower or raise it have therefore only a few pounds weight to deal with, and hence that smooth, even motion always to be seen in stage changes. In fact, the counterpoises being slightly heavier raise the machine itself, and have only to be controlled or checked by the men at the drum. So, too, is the heavy drop scene made to ascend or descend, and with such smooth motion, that it can be made slow or rapid; so figures ascend through trapdoors. Even the great chandelier that lights the hall is thus balanced.—New Quarterly Magazine.

JAPANESE THEATRES AND TEA-HOUSES.—Old Japan, as far as costume and social observances are concerned, may be compared with revolutionary Japan at the theatres, where are played interminable historic dramas, wholly based on the old state of things. Nothing has been changed in the Japanese theatre, except here and there the hours; most of the theatres at the capital, and all those in the interior, play from 9 A. M. until dark. The theatres of the treaty ports now play from 5 P. M. to 1 A. M., so that at Tokio one is able to attend the theatre at most hours of the day and night. There the two-sworded Samurai still walk the stage, and Tycoon's soldiers still wear their hideous masks, and Daimios in magnificent trousers, preceded and followed by their banners and processions of retainers, still force the people to prostrate themselves in the dust. In contrast to the conservatism of the theatres, the critical modern spirit is shown in the tea-houses which stand near them. There a common caricature sheet upon the walls, which dates from just before the revolution, represents a Daimio's procession of insects. The praying mantis, the locust, the grasshopper, and the wasp are brought into requisition, given two swords apiece, and made to bear heraldic banners of cornflower, poppy, and convolvulus. They imitate the swaggering walk and arms akimbo of the Samurai, and escort a feeble cricket carried in a cage. This is the Daimio, before whom a humble cockroach, who figures the people of Japan, reverently hammers his head upon the ground as he beholds him pass. Those Japanese who best knew their countrymen before the revolution will tell you that there has always been a want of respect, other than enforced respect, among the people. Their attitude toward the Mikado seems to be the only exception to their general want of veneration, which is accompanied by a total absence of religious fanaticism, and, I think must be added, of religious reverence. The only temple in Japan inside which I ever saw a crowd, unless there was a wrestling performance going on within the walls, was that of Asaksa, in the capital. This temple is the centre of a sort of fair, or, as the whole of Tokio resembles the fair of St. Cloud more than it does anything else in Europe, the centre of a fair within a fair—the wax-work show and big drum portion of the fair. The temple of Asaksa is entirely surrounded by peep-shows and shooting-galleries, and is always crowded, but more I think by sight-seeing country people out of curiosity, than by the people of the capital from religious motives. The Loo Choo Envoys were there at the time of my visit—tall, bearded, solemn men, who seemed much struck by finding the place of honor in the temple occupied by a gigantic looking-glass. The mirror may properly find a place in either Buddhist or Shintoo Temple. The doctrine of Pure Shintoo informs us that the Sun Goddess was enticed out of her dark cave by a looking-glass; but in Buddhism the looking-glass symbolizes the mirror of the soul, and the worshipers are supposed to repair to it as to a confessional. The young ladies with painted lips, and light blue or crimson satin obis, who eye themselves approvingly in the great mirror at Asaksa, perhaps think that it has other objects—at all events, there is nothing in the temple that "draws" so well. In a ghastly representation of the Buddhist hell, which is moved by clock-work and forms one of the most popular peep-shows outside the temple, the mirror also figures, and on it their crimes are shown to the dead as they enter hell. As I have named this show, I may add that, if it was regarded seriously by the people, it would be evidence of the existence of a degrading superstition. It represents green devils with red tongues, and red devils with green tongues, pounding people in mortars, boiling them in oil, and frying them upon gridirons. In one corner an assistant devil is engaged in tying the legs and arms of men together, and another, who stands by with a plumb-line and crayon, marks a black line down the middle of their backs for the guidance of a third, who saws them deliberately in half. As is seen, however, by the attitude of the spectators, the representation is regarded by the Japanese as a mere joke.—Fortnightly Review.

MODERN STAGE EFFECTS.—All the great triumphs of modern stage effect date from the introduction of a strong light. With gas it was found that a more gaudy display of colors could be effected, but the application of the lime-light really threw open the realms of glittering fairy-land to the scenic artist. This lime-light, in truth, has begotten the whole series of shows, the attraction of which, under the names of pièces à femme, "feeries," burlesques, &c., consisted in making bands of nude or semi-nude women do duty as scenery. The human figure under the dull light of oil lamps offered but an earthy spectacle; under the dazzling blaze of the new illumination it became a show worthy of the pagan Eleusinia. A new wealth of materials then entered into the domain of the scenic artist—metals, crystal, glass, foil, which, under a less ardent light, had little effect. With such a medium of illumination, the temptation to dazzle the vulgar was irresistible. How impossible it was in old days to contrive such effects may be conceived from Garrick's attempts at spectacular when, with the aid of the best effect artists and Loutherbourg's brush, the utmost he could produce were some atmospheric changes, contrived with screens of colored silk working in front of oil lamps. Within the memory of the present generation, common tin, or even pasteboard covered with foil, was the invariable armor worn by the warrior of the stage. But a Birmingham—or French, as some say—manufacturer contrived a white metal resembling silver of the most dazzling brilliancy, which retained its sheen and was not costly. On the instant every theatre arrayed their bands of ladies in full suits of the new material, and at Christmas nothing was so popular as whole armies of these creatures going through evolutions. One of these sumptuous spectacles in Paris has often cost eight or ten thousand pounds. There, too, has been brought to perfection the art of dressing human figures in the shapes of insects and animals. Revolting as were such displays—glorified bees, beetles, and even horses, being personified by bands of ladies—these did not, as it were, become the insect or animal, but suggested human beings changed into such creatures, or endowed with the properties such might be supposed to have; and this, so far as it went, was true theatrical art. With such floods of light, marvels of sunset and sunrise and all these unnatural and unmeaning splendors which make up the glories of a spectacular play can be contrived. The representation of a conflagration on the stage, now so familiar, has been brought almost to perfection. So lately as thirty or forty years ago a stage fire was symbolized rather than represented, a few blazing cressets being waved to and fro inside the building that was being consumed. In truth, there was no desire to bring such an exhibition before the audience, as it had no connection with—nay, rather interrupted—the dramatic action. The building, if anything turned on the incident, could be as effectively consumed out of sight of the audience, just as Medea could put her offspring to death in private. But now the glaring embers are seen, the walls crack with the heat, the charred rafters tumble down with a crash, the flames roar and blaze, the air is charged with a crimson glow; in fact, it is impossible to distinguish the mimic from the real conflagration, so perfect is the imitation. It is to be noted that the success of such representations is to be set down to a true principle of scenic illusion, not to the pure reproductive imitation of a fire. A real fire, were such a thing producible on the stage, would have but a poor scenic result. The effect of the fire was really produced by means almost opposed to those present in the reality. The art consisted in discovering what, under the conditions of the stage, would have the same appearance. In a piece by Victor Sejour, entitled "La Madame des Roses," there was shown a spacious hall in a palace, with a terrace and staircase at the back, which were consumed in the flames. The effect of the servants and others flying through the flames to make their escape, of the falling rafters, the sparks, the lurid red which filled the whole scene, was so complete that the spectators rose from their seats in alarm. Nothing was more simple than the agency employed. The ordinary lime-light, turned on to the full, suffused the stage with a flood of light, and seen through crimson glasses imparted a fierce glow of the same tint. Any vapor of the whitest kind moving in such a medium would at once give the notion of volumes of lurid smoke. Accordingly, a few braziers filled with a powder known as "lycopodium," are placed at the wings, each fitted with a sort of forge bellows, each blast producing a sheet of flame and smoke. The lights in front being lowered, rows of little jets, duly screened, are made to follow the lines of the beams, rafters, &c., and thus make these edges stand out against the fierce blaze. The view, therefore, from behind, has thus an almost prosy and orderly aspect; but the effect is complete. There is all the literal form and surface, as it were, of fire, without the material of fire.—New Quarterly Magazine.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS IN WEST AFRICA.—It is now nearly four hundred years since the first attempt was made to introduce Christianity into the western portion of Africa. The summary of Christian missions on this coast may be given in a few words. The Roman Catholics come first. In 1481 the King of Portugal sent ten ships with 500 soldiers, 100 laborers, and a proper complement of priests as missionaries to Elmina. The Romish missions thus founded lingered on for a period of 241 years, till at last, in 1723, that of the Capuchins at Sierra Leone was given up and they disappeared altogether from West Africa. They had made no impression, except upon their immediate dependents; and what impression they made on them was soon totally obliterated. Protestant missionary attempts were commenced by the Moravians in 1736, 140 years ago, and continued till 1770. Five attempts cost eleven lives without visible results. The Wesleyans follow next. In the minutes of the conference of 1792 we first find Africa on the list of the Wesleyan missionary stations, Sierra Leone being the part occupied. In the minutes for 1796 we find the names of A. Murdoch and W. Patten set down as missionaries to the Foulah country, in Africa, to which service they were solemnly set apart by conference. The Church Missionary Society sent out its first missionaries in 1804. They established and attempted to maintain ten stations among the aborigines, but they could make no progress owing to the hostility of the natives, who preferred the slave-traders to them. The missionaries were forced to take refuge in Sierra Leone, the only place where at that time they could labor with safety and hope. The Basle Missionary Society—one of the most successful on the coast—had their attention directed to Western Africa as early as 1826. But it was not until 1828 that their first company of missionaries reached Christianborg, near Akra, the place which the Moravians had attempted to occupy more than thirty years previously. The United Presbyterian Synod of Scotland commenced a mission on the Old Calabar River in the Gulf of Benin, in April, 1846. Five denominations of American Christians—Baptists, Methodists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Lutherans—are represented on the coast—in Liberia, at Lagos, the Island of Coresco, and Gaboon. The first American Mission was established on the coast in 1822. Now, what has been the outcome of these missionary operations? The results thus far achieved are in many respects highly interesting and important. At the European settlements established at various points along the coast from Senegal to Loanda, and at the purely native stations, occupied by the Niger [native] missionaries, the Scotch missionaries, and the American missionaries, some thousands of natives, having been brought under the immediate influence of Christian teaching, have professed Christianity, and, at the European settlements, have adopted European dress and habits. Numerous churches have been organized and are under a native ministry, and thousands of children are gathered into schools under Christian teachers.—Fraser's Magazine.

TO PYRAMID PEAK AND BACK.

THE CAÑONS OF THE LITTLE TRUCKEE AND AMERICAN RIVERS—A DIFFICULT TRAIL—AN INSTANCE OF CALIFORNIAN HOSPITALITY—A DAIRY RANCH IN THE SIERRAS—ASCENT OF THE PEAK—ALONG THE WESTERN SHORE OF LAKE TAHOE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TAHOE CITY, Cal., Thursday, Oct. 26, 1876.

I did not leave myself space in my last letter to describe our journey to Pyramid Peak, which occupied a week, and led us into a most beautiful country, the chief characteristics of which are the pines and the cañons. The road, beginning at Rowland's, extends over the level plateau called Lake Valley, and after threading its sinuous way through the twilight colonnades of pines and firs—which grow at regular intervals with smooth interstices between—it crosses a low divide, and lets us into the Valley of the Little Truckee; the Little Truckee being a mild-mannered stream, that ends its course of twenty miles or so in Lake Tahoe. A wall of granite mountains flanks the valley on each side, and the only outlet is to the north, from which direction we enter. It is not difficult to understand how, in the early days of emigration to California, bands of travelers, descending into such a prison as this, lost heart, and became convinced that further progress was impossible. Any one who knows the far West, knows how deceptive distances are there; how easy it seems to cross a divide, and how laborious and hazardous it proves, even with a path already made; how when the summit of the one ridge in view at the outset is gained, another, rockier and harder yet, looms up with renewed threats of peril. Very few sections west of the 100th meridian are now unexplored, and good roads and open trails are being multiplied every year; but the pioneers had to depend on their own judgment and endurance, usually unassisted with compass or sextant, and were exceptionally fortunate when they had for guidance the tracks of Indians or buffalo, which were then, as they are still, the safest and shortest routes over the mountains. A level stretch of dusty, decomposed granite gave our mules breath for the hard pull up the road that has been cut in zig-zag furrows across the face of the western mountains. The switches by which the turns in the road are made are so sudden and frequent that the forward mules in the pack train often appeared to be going in an opposite direction and over the heads of those in the rear, and the breadth of the road decreases so much in some places that passing wagons almost crowded our over-loaded animals over the precipice. But a mule has tenacity of foothold where a fly can scarcely cling, and an equipoise of nerve and brain that the dizziest height cannot disturb—a fixed eye for depths between which and eternity there is not a breath. If, indeed, the road verges on an abyss, so much the greater is the mule's satisfaction, and he will purposely walk on the very verge, apparently deriving from his risky performance a gratification akin to that which the heroine of the modern Gallic drama finds in walking near an abyss of another kind.

The outlook expanded as each of the successive terraces was reached, and when we attained the top a wide area of land and water was disclosed to our gaze. There seemed to be nearly as much water as land. The view of Lake Tahoe from this eminence left none of the many indentations of the shore hidden, and the beautiful oval of water, glistening as though it had drained the Sierras of all the silver in their veins, appeared considerably larger than it had done at any other point occupied. It may have been here that the Indians caught that glimpse of it which found response in the exclamation, "Tahoe!"—big water; but that is a matter of speculation involving the authenticity of the legend itself. The far-off mountains seemed to be tinged with a bluish purple; those in the "middle distance"—to borrow an expression from art—were a less charming gray, and those in the immediate neighborhood were an unlovely gray dappled with heavy green, this being the true aspect of all on close inspection, and the former effects being the peculiar gradations of the atmosphere. The Valley of the Little Truckee lay directly below, calm and smiling, as befitted the valley of so mild-mannered a stream. A bend to the west now brought us into a heavily-wooded cañon, embattled by pines on both sides, with a light green thread of deciduous shrubs running between and concealing the south fork of the American River, which in this neighborhood is a mere brooklet. It was Lieut. Macomb's intention to camp for the night at Echo Lake, which is another of the many picturesque sheets of water embosomed in the Sierras, and we turned off the road at a dilapidated old ranch, by a trail leading through a dark forest to the lake. But when we arrived there no grass could be found for the mules, and as we do not carry feed, we returned to the road, and went three miles further to Phillips' Ranch, where the animals came in for a well-deserved ration of barley. Water, grass, and wood are the three essentials of our progress, and we have been fortunate this season in having an abundance of excellent water, a surfeit of timber, and occasionally some good grass. No privation equals the want of water. A dry camp, even when it is known that a spring or stream will surely be reached on the following day, takes all the spirits out of the men, as neither scarcity of food nor intensity of cold ever does. This I learned in the hard experience of Lieut. Wheeler's campaign in New-Mexico last year, when for weeks together nothing resembling water nearer than a mixture of soil and moisture was seen in our camp, and when neither thirst could be completely quenched, nor the heated head and face cooled by bathing. The camp toilet depends on an ample supply of water, and only those who have made long marches in the dust can fully appreciate the benefit of a sponge or conceive the delights of a tooth-brush. Besides the absence of grass, there was another objection to Echo Lake. Between its rippling surface and the peaks around it, there was nothing but an acute declivity of rock and forest, not a hundred square yards of honest foothold, and no advance in any direction was possible without extreme delay and danger. The country was impracticable to the pack-train, and that means that the pines and brush were packed as densely as feathers in a bed, and that the rock was but a very few inches out of the perpendicular. That it was, however, may be realized when I come to describe a trail on the west side of Lake Tahoe that was entirely practicable.

The owner of the ranch near which we pitched out tents is engaged in raising Angora goats, an occupation quite extensively followed in parts of California, and one that is attracting further investments each year. The native stock is being much improved by the introduction of finely-graded imported breeds, and the clippings are exported to the East, where they are manufactured into dress goods. Opposite Strawberry Station—five miles below Phillipos—the road skirts a majestic cliff of granite that measures about 1,000 feet from base to summit, without a ledge wider than a few feet in its precipitous front. A mass of débris is scattered along the bottom, and some tremendous bowlders detached from it encroach upon the road. It disgusts one to be told on inquiring at the ranch that this noble old rock is called Lover's Leap—a name of such feeble sentiment and extensive application that we wonder when Americans will learn to be sensible in their geographical nomenclature. High peaks of unsympathetic gray granite hedged us in on every side, and between them and above them was our objective point, Pyramid Peak, which, were mountaineering halt as easy as it seems from a distance, might have been reached in an hour, but which involved a roundabout journey of eighteen miles. We attempted a short cut, and were driven back by a barricade of young oaks, through which we could not force the pack mules. The shafts of the pines in this neighborhood, and at a few other places in California and Nevada, are overgrown with a wonderfully light green moss, which is made up of fine, curly threads, and is spread irregularly over the dark brown bark, sometimes in rings, sometimes in patches, and oftener in broad bands drawn down one side of the tree like driven snow. This dainty emerald web is unsparing in its favor, and grows as greenly and as vigorously on the fallen and dismembered logs as on the hearty, balsamic trees in the prime of life; and though it is as dry as tinder, it keeps its charming freshness of color long after it is detached from the bark. Some that I carried in my warm coat pocket for two weeks was as fresh at the end of that time as it was when I gathered it. The trees themselves are creditable specimens of their family; many of them are from five to eight feet in diameter, and they are marshaled in thickset ranks where the soil is scarcely deep enough for their tenacious and far-spreading roots. A few miles from Strawberry we passed the ashes of the old San Francisco House, that formerly was one of the best-known hostelries on the Placerville route, and we turned off on to the Georgetown trail. The best basis for operations in ascending Pyramid Peak is a dairy ranch, occupied by Mr. Sawyer, in a valley at the foot of the mountain. We met a produce wagon on the road, and the driver, who proved to be Mr. Sawyer, on learning our destination, sent one of his relatives back with us to show us the way. I suppose that Californians are among the most generous and hospitable people in the world. The genial nature of their climate and the fertility of their soil makes them so, but as we belong to a Government party, and are therefore regarded as legitimate objects of spoliation, we are not usually benefited by these traits, and are sometimes charged more for barley, hay, butter, and milk than would be asked from others. Now, however, let me give you an instance of the extent to which Californians can go. Mr. Sawyer's representative not only went eleven miles out of his way to show us ours, but when we reached the ranch, and during the two days we remained there, all the fresh milk and butter our hungry mess could consume was sent to our camp, and when we went away several pounds of butter was put into the packs. More than this. Twenty-one mules were pastured without charge, and, to cap the climax, our last supper near the ranch was made memorable by a dish of New-England doughnuts sent to us with Mrs. Sawyer's compliments. Those doughnuts are remembered with gratitude by every member of our party.

The ranch is situated in a well-watered valley in the very heart of the California sierras and at the very base of Pyramid Peak. The cattle, of which there are 400, range over nearly one hundred thousand acres, and could not feed upon less. About one hundred and sixty pounds of butter is made daily, this quantity finding a market in Virginia City at forty cents a pound. All these figures will astonish an Eastern farmer. One hundred thousand acres as a range for 400 cattle will seem far in excess of any necessity, and the idea of forty cents a pound for butter will turn many a dairyman greener than green cheese with envy. But, accepting the statement of Mr. Sawyer's agent, if labor could be had as cheaply in California as it is in New-York the butter could be sold at fifteen cents a pound with greater profit than it is at forty cents. The least efficient hand in the dairy is paid $60 in gold and board per month, and a good milker obtains more. The season lasts from May until November, when the first snow-storm drives all the men and cattle of the establishment to their Winter quarters at Galt, in the Sacramento Valley. The exodus is sudden and never delayed after the first heavy snow-fall. The rancheros wake up in the morning and find the ground covered with white. Past experience has taught the danger of waiting for a return of fair weather, and every man, woman, and boy is mounted and sent off to drive the cattle in. Furniture is packed, and nothing is left but the buildings, which, as Winter tightens his grip on the country, are completely buried in the drift for months together. The snow fell to a depth of twenty-seven feet in many parts of the valley last year, and the whole region from Carson to Placerville is closed to traffic between December and April. On the western side of the mountain, the climate is equable and mild, and the stock is safely harbored there until the Spring. The land at the foot of Pyramid Peak is public property, and might come into the market at any time. Mr. Sawyer having already pre-empted the number of acres to which under the Homestead Laws he is entitled at Galt, and the law forbidding a second pre-emption elsewhere; but there is a good understanding among settlers, well fortified by precedent, that will deter any one from bidding the land in without first indemnifying the present occupant for the improvements he has made on it.

The ascent of the peak was made without much difficulty by nearly all the members of our party, a good trail enabling us to ride our animals within a few hundred feet of the summit. But the trail was of necessity circuitous, and its windings stretched out into a long three miles. At the base the wood is pretty thick, but the ground is sprinkled with slabs and rounded paving-stones of granite, and occasionally an unwieldy boulder, as much as seven feet in diameter, appears wedged in the earth, or nicely balanced on a point, a position into which it has been flung from the main rock by a terrific storm of the past. Patience is encouraged by the exemplification in the wind and water worn rock of the results attained by the steady application of a gentle power. The obdurate granite is seen to be yielding to the incessant and musical trickling of a streamlet less than a foot wide. Vegetation has made a desperate struggle to be even with the mountain and to carry its greenness up to the top, and it has partly succeeded. The pines decrease in size as the trail ascends, but they do not wholly disappear until the last bench in the steep sides of the peak is reached. Here, at a height of over ten thousand feet above the level of the sea, the last and smaller of them are found, dwarfed to the size of a currant bush, apparently gathering sustenance from the pebbles and rock, gnarled like a patriarchal oak and recognizable only by their sombre green, prickly foliage. Before we reached them we passed through alternate groves and clearings, varied with patches of treacherous grass, concealing a dark, spongy bog, and flecked with small fields of hard, glistening snow. The rock crops out with extreme determination and pertinacity, sometimes assuming those strange shapes that make the mountains West a greater curiosity-shop than volcanic Iceland is. And when we attained the timber limit—what then? This: before us was an immense heap of granite blocks, of every conceivable shape and size, tossed together chaotically—apparently loose, but in reality shaken into place so firmly that a man's weight does not upset the lightest of them. Imagine a pile of rocks carelessly massed by working men after a blast in a quarry. Such a pile, multiplied a hundred-fold, was Pyramid Peak as it appeared to us on close acquaintance. Half an hour's climbing brought us to the very summit, where for ten hours Lieut. Macomb and Mr. Carpenter stood in a cold wind and among the drifting clouds, carrying out a part of Lieut. Wheeler's scheme of triangulation. Rough field life blunts one's susceptibilities, and it did not seem particularly hard to me that these two martyrs in the cause of science should be stationed up there without food or fire for so long a time, but if their friends can picture them, a large amount of sympathy may be expended upon them with the fullest justification.

From Pyramid Peak we returned to Lake Tahoe to complete the survey of the western shore, starting from Yank's, or Tallac. "What sort of a trail is it?" we asked some one at the outset. "A good one," was the reply, and so it was—with a few drawbacks. Within the first mile we came upon a swamp, and after that had been passed by the pack-train in safety, our path lay along the high and precipitous bank of the lake. Had the rocks been all we had to complain of, we should have been content, but overlying these was a very dense growth of brush in the form of white-thorn and manzenita, whose meshes knotted themselves about the animals' legs and made foot-hold a double uncertainty. Then, at Emerald Bay, an indenture locked in by the Sierras, the bank became no bank at all, but a sheer cliff with an indescribable network of shrubbery, so dense that no one except a Western path-finder would have believed it to be passable. Oaks, willows, white-thorn, manzenita, and fallen logs were meshed together at the base of the cliff, and we had in turns to force our way through these and wade into the lake. A heavy rain was falling to make matters still more uncomfortable, and what with rain, cloud, and frost, the weather of the past week has been in marked contrast with that described in my last letter.

THE PORT OF NAPLES.

The Neapolitan correspondent of the London Times writes, under date of Oct. 18: "The question has been sometimes asked whether Naples can ever be a commercial centre. A question which implies a doubt is not a little offensive to Southern ears, and a work published by the 'Central Office of Statistics' answers it most satisfactorily. Not only may it become so, but it is already a great commercial centre, and if persevering efforts are crowned with success, and municipal promises are not delusions, the commerce of this port must vastly increase. But to the present. It takes its place now after Genoa. The number of vessels, international and coasting, which entered and left Naples in 1875 amounted to 11,238, with a tonnage of 2,923,922. In comparison with any of our great ports these figures may appear trifling, but compared with what they were only a few years ago, say fifteen years, they will be admitted to be highly satisfactory. In 1861 the amount of tonnage entering and leaving this port was not more than 1,603,835, so that the commercial movement of Naples has nearly doubled in that interval, and this in spite of great drawbacks. The most considerable increase occurred in 1874-5, but the impulse began in 1871, and has never ceased. In that year the tonnage entering and leaving the port of Genoa was not equal to that of Naples for 1875, which may now be ranked, and does actually rank, as the second commercial port in the Kingdom of Italy. As one would be fully prepared to expect, the French flag takes the lead among the international vessels arriving, while the British flag holds the second place, and the Dutch the third; but in fifteen years the foreign flag has increased threefold, while that of Italy is only one-third more than what it was in 1861."

AFFAIRS IN ENGLAND.

GOSSIP FROM THE GREAT METROPOLIS.

THE EFFECTS OF THE EASTERN COMPLICATIONS—A WEEK OF SUSPENSE AND FOOLISH PANIC—FURTHER TROUBLES EXPECTED FROM THE TRADES-UNIONS—COMMEMORATING A STUPID CAVALRY CHARGE—A CANDIDATE FOR THE DISSECTING KNIFE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 21, 1876.

This has been another week of suspense, anxiety, and foolish panic. The minds, as well as nerves, of operators on 'Change seem to be utterly shaken, and there is nothing too wild and improbable for them to believe. After a fit of silly terror, there has come an equally silly reaction of sanguine hope, although, in fact, the dangers of the situation remain exactly as they were. Late on Tuesday evening it was suddenly resolved to hold a Cabinet Council next afternoon, and Ministers were telegraphed for in all directions. It was assumed that some new crisis had occurred, and that the British Government was called upon for a final and decisive ultimatum, as to the nature of which the most extravagant surmises were indulged. It has since been semi-officially stated that the Cabinet is quite united as to the great questions of the day; that it sees no reason to commit itself to any ultimatum, or to summon Parliament before the usual time. Ministers have, therefore, again departed, and it is supposed that they will, for the present, be content to watch events. All this has had a soothing effect on the public mind, and indeed the panic has, without regard to actual circumstances, a natural tendency to exhaust itself. It is a proof of the paralysis of ordinary intelligence which at present prevails in the financial world that comfort is derived from the rumor that the British Government is prepared to occupy Constantinople on the first aggressive movement of Russia. There is now little public oratory about the war, for it is felt that in such a delicate and perilous state of affairs it is hazardous to speak. In an Alpine country a slight reverberation will sometimes bring down an avalanche; and, for the moment, England holds its breath. An article, which carries a certain authority with it, and has evoked much interest, has appeared in the new number of the Quarterly Review, the chief Conservative organ. It has been ascribed to the Marquis of Salisbury, who used to write for this periodical before he took office, but it is really, I believe, from the pen of Sir Henry Rawlinson, whose diplomatic experiences at Constantinople and elsewhere especially qualify him for such a task. The writer of the article, whoever he may be, asks what are British interests and responsibilities in Turkey, and replies thus: "None certainly in her misgovernment. All our interests are the other way. We deliberately, and, as we ourselves know, most sincerely abjure all desire to appropriate her provinces or islands, even those which might be convenient as links with our Eastern Empire. We want a right of way to India via the Suez Canal; but that does not necessarily imply that the Sultan must always rule in Europe or command the Bosphorus. We should be glad of a good road from the Mediterranean to Bagdad; but that would hardly be less likely to be given to us under any possible Government of Syria than it is at present. We may take it for granted that Turkey would be as well governed, as good a customer to us, would pay her debts as punctually, and would be in all respects as useful to us, under almost any other dynasty than that of the Ottomans." At the same time, the writer points out that "to leave Turkey to fall to pieces by natural decay, or to be torn in pieces by hungry neighbors," would "involve an amount of European disturbance such as no one can contemplate without horror, and of which no one can foresee the end." The conclusion is, "Meanwhile, taking a calm retrospect of the whole matter, we believe it will be found when the present excitement has calmed down that, as often happens in the warmest debates, the two parties"—that is, of course, the two parties in this country—"have been advocating the two co-ordinate aspects of that great policy on which the English people have set their hearts, and that the bulk of the nation, and of her leading statesmen, are equally resolved to bring Turkish misrule to an end in Europe, and to stop the march of Russia to Constantinople." The Edinburgh Review, the Whig organ, also has an article on the same subject, giving general support to the Government, and condemning Mr. Gladstone's reckless agitation very severely. Meanwhile, it may be noted that there is great activity in the dock-yards, and that the troops just dispatched to India are directed to call at Gibraltar and Malta "for orders."

It is needless to say that under such distracting conditions as at present exist there is no sign of improvement in commercial and industrial affairs. It may, perhaps, be said that at least they are no worse, for worse they could hardly be. As if, however, foreign embarrassments were not sufficiently injurious to trade, there are indications of a civil strife at home which promises to be very bitter and disastrous. The working classes, or at least some sections of them, seem to think that there is a chance for them to take advantage of the difficulties of their employers, and, at a time when trade is almost wholly paralyzed, are now either demanding an advance of wages, or resisting the reductions which are enforced by the state of the markets. The operative cotton spinners of Lancashire, for instance, insist upon the withdrawal of the Blackburn Standard list, which has regulated the prices paid for spinning in North and North-east Lancashire for nearly a quarter of a century. The Manufacturers' Association has held a meeting, at which resolutions were passed unanimously refusing to listen to a proposal which, if acceded to, would not only involve an advance of wages, but would give the trades-union a control over the wages question of the district, which must of necessity lead to serious and frequent complications and disputes, but offering to arrange for a revisal of the list, with a view to remove any irregularities which may be found in it. The work people, however, seem to be resolute in holding to their demand, and if the existing partial strike becomes general, or if there is a lock-out by the employers, it would affect from seventy to eighty thousand work people, to say nothing of shopkeepers and other dependent industries. In Preston alone 16,750 people will be thrown out of work. This is a town which has never recovered from the shock of a former great strike in 1853-4, which lasted for eight months.

Last year there was a public dinner at the Alexandra Palace to celebrate for the first time the anniversary of the cavalry charge at Balaklava, but it was thought that the heroes rather lent themselves for show purposes, and offense was also given by the exclusion of the Heavy Brigade. It is, however, proposed to repeat the festival this year, and an attempt has been made to make it private and self-supporting, and to include both the Light and Heavy Brigades. The whole affair is rather injudicious, inasmuch as the great charge was a fatal blunder, and, though it showed noble courage, was also an act of wanton stupidity. It is not usual to have this kind of celebrations save in a private way, and there is certainly no ground, but rather the reverse, for making an exception in this case. However, as the persons chiefly concerned cannot agree, they are free to take each their own course, and it seems there are to be two rival dinners.

In another profession a curious dispute lately broke out between two eminent practitioners, which has just been settled. Among the witnesses at the Bravo inquest were Dr. Johnston and Sir W Gull. The former was one of the first doctors called in to see Mr. Bravo after his seizure, and when it was resolved to call in Sir W. Gull, Dr. Johnston accompanied him on the journey, and gave him particulars of the case. Sir William, however, who, ever since he attended the Prince of Wales in his dangerous illness, has rather inclined to assume a prominent position above his fellows, in the course of his testimony spoke as if he were the first to discover that Bravo was suffering from poison, the other doctors thinking it disease. This insinuation was indignantly resented, and the question was taken before the College of Physicians, which has inquired into the matter, and, in substance, censured Sir W. Gull for his presumption. It would appear that he at once jumped to the conclusion of suicide, and it is probable that his influence prevented fuller inquiries being made as to the case in the first instance.

There seems to be a blight on a certain class of public amusements here just now. The Westminster Aquarium is apparently in a state of hopeless internal disorder and insolvency. The Horticultural Garden is avowedly bankrupt, and the Queen's other pet project, the Royal Albert Hall, can hardly pay for putty to keep the rain out. The Crystal Palace is also in a bad way, and the Alexandra Palace has just collapsed under an enforcement of creditors' claims. The skating rinks, which have been absurdly overdone, are also coming into the Bankruptcy Court.

An American lady, Miss Susan Fletcher Smith, has just made a will, assigning her body, after death, to the Royal College of Surgeons, on the ground that it is the duty of every member of the human family to devote the body after death to scientific examination, until the principles of physiological science are thoroughly established. The body is to be completely dissected, and "all possible facilities shall be given for the inspection of such body in its various stages of dissection by any person desiring to inspect it, and more particularly by persons of the female sex. Afterward, the body is to be destroyed in the most economical and expeditious manner possible. But some remnant of it is be preserved in the college as a memorial, and if any of my friends desire to have a piece of the body, they are to have it." Any useful results obtained from the dissection are to be published. This is evidently an imitation of Jeremy Bentham's famous codicil, entitled "Auto Icon," in which he ordered his skeleton to be put together in a seated position, clothed with one of his ordinary suits of black, and the soft parts of his body to be put in bottles and labeled, after the fashion of decanters. Then, "if it should happen that my personal friends or other disciples should be disposed to meet together on some day or days of the year for the purpose of commemorating the founder of the greatest happiness system of morals and legislation, my executors will, from time to time, cause to be conveyed to the room in which they meet the said box, or case, there to be stationed in such part of the room as to the assembled company, may seem meet." The body, in the first instance, can be used as a means of illustrating lectures on anatomy, with the object of dissipating the ignorant terror of dissection, and showing that "the human body, when dissected, instead of being an object of disgust, is as much more beautiful than any other piece of mechanism as it is more curious and wonderful." The body, stuffed, and with a wax face, is now in the custody of London University.

BUSHMAN FOLK-LORE.—The Bushmen have two different myths to account for the origin of the moon; one of these forms an episode in the above story of the Mantis and his pet eland. When the Mantis sprang away from the Suricats in the darkness which he created by piercing the gall-bladder of another eland, he felt inconvenienced by one of his shoes, which he therefore took off and threw into the sky, with the order that it should become the moon. Thus the moon is red, because the shoe of the Mantis was covered with the red dust of Bushmanland, and cold, because it is only leather. In the Bushman astrological lore, however, the moon is looked upon as a man who incurs the wrath of the sun, and is consequently pierced by the knife (i. e. rays) of the latter. This process is repeated until almost the whole of the moon is cut away, and only one little piece is left, which the moon piteously implores the sun to spare for his (the moon's) children. Then this little piece of the moon gradually grows again until it becomes a full moon, when the sun's stabbing and cutting processes recommence. This is a really beautiful myth, and reminds one strongly of the interpretations which Max Müller and his school have put upon some of the old Greek myths. Animals, it will be seen, occupy a very large place in Bushman mythology, and this is not to be wondered at when it is considered how large is the place they fill in the Bushman country, and how important a part they play in the daily life of the people, as in the Indo-European mythologies, many of the stars and constellations are named after certain animals, and some of the astronomical myths are elaborate and beautiful, and sometimes even touching. The sun, they say, is a man, from whose armpit brightness proceeded, and who lived formerly on earth, but only gave light for a space around his house. Some children who belonged to the first Bushmen (who preceded the Flat Bushmen in their country) were therefore sent to throw up the sleeping sun into the sky; since then he shines all over the earth. A myth somewhat similar to this is met among the Australian Aborigines, and there are many points of resemblance between Bushman and Esquimaux mythology. But it would be extremely rash to infer, on this account, that there had been any original connection or communication between these races. Indeed we have hinted that analogies may be found between Bushman and European mythology, and it is not to be wondered at if many points of resemblance be found between mythologies originating quite independently of each other. For have not all uncivilized people the same mythological elements, if we may so call them, to deal with—"the heavens above, the earth beneath, and the water under the earth," with their various denizens? Have they not all pretty much the same kind of struggle for existence, and have they not that most fertile and universal of human characteristics, an irresistible desire to assign a cause to everything that comes within ken? In this last point mythology and science meet, for it is this same universal impulse which animates both—the desire of the human mind to satisfy itself as to the causes of things. The Bushmen account for the origin of the Milky Way by relating how a girl of the ancient race wished for a little light, so that the people might see to return home at night. She, therefore, threw wood-ashes into the sky, which became the Milky Way. This same girl, being vexed with her mother for giving her too little of a certain red edible root, threw up portions of it into the sky, where they became stars. The mention of an "ancient race" in this and other myths is one among other indications that the Bushmen are not genuine South African aborigines, but that they are intruders upon a still older race. Among some of the stars which have been identified with animals in Bushman mythology are the following: The pointers to the Southern Cross are male lions, while the stars Alpha, Beta, and Gamma Crucis are lionesses. The two lions were formerly men and at the same time lions, and one of them became a star because a girl looked at him; the other, apparently out of sympathy, also became a star. They now stand silent, not far from the lionesses, who sit silent. Aldebaran is a male hartebeest, while Alpha Orionis is a female hartebeest. Procyon is a male eland, whose wives are Castor and Pollux. The stars in Orion's sword are male tortoises hung upon a stick, and the three bright stars in Orion's Belt are female tortoises also hung upon a stick. The stars are divided into night stars and dawn stars, and the latter are the subjects of some very fine and complicated mythological conceptions, of which, however, only fragments have as yet been obtained. The planet Jupiter is called the "Dawn's-Heart," while some neighboring star, preceding Jupiter, is the "Dawn's-Heart-Child," Jupiter's daughter. Her relation to her father is somewhat mysterious. He calls her in the myth, "my heart," swallows her, then walks alone as the only Dawn's-Heart Star till she grows up, when he spits her out again. She then herself becomes another female Dawn's-Heart, and spits out another Dawn's-Heart-Child, which follows the male and female Dawn's-Heart. The story proceeds in a very intricate fashion, and many other characters—all animals—are introduced.—Cornhill Magazine.

THE LAST GRAND RALLY.

MASS-MEETING AT COOPER UNION.

THE CLOSING DEMONSTRATION OF THE CAMPAIGN—A LARGE AND ENTHUSIASTIC AUDIENCE—AN ELOQUENT ADDRESS ON THE ISSUES OF THE DAY BY HON. CHAUNCY M. DEPEW—GEN. GEORGE A. SHERIDAN ALSO MAKES A TELLING SPEECH.

The last meeting of the Republican canvass at Cooper Institute last evening, was a fitting termination to the series of spirited gatherings which have filled the hall each week since the commencement of the campaign. If the temper of the audience could be taken as an earnest of the result, it was the eve of a grand Republican victory, for a more enthusiastic assemblage it would have been hard to bring together. Every reference to Tuesday next was hailed with outbursts of applause.

The meeting was called to order by Hon. Alonzo B. Cornell, who named Hon. John D. Lawson as Chairman. An unusually large number of ladies was present, both on the platform and in the audience. Mr. Lawson, after a short address, introduced Hon. Chauncy M. Depew, who spoke for more than an hour, with unusual force and eloquence. The impudent claims of the Democracy to a renewal of the public confidence their dishonesty had repeatedly forfeited, were exposed in their true light, and the lying pretence that the restoration of that party to power would in any way improve the business of the county, was shown to be a thorough-paced and most unmitigated falsehood. It was not likely that a party whose representative administration had stolen $21 on the thousand, against twenty-six cents on the $1,000 under Grant, would accomplish anything in the way of financial "reform," and it was morally certain that if installed in power it would, in other ways, work the country more harm in four years than could be repaired in a generation. The speaker satisfactorily demonstrated that the credit and good government of the country was bound up in the success of the Republican Party, and, in conclusion, assured his hearers that from personal observation he could confidently assert that the Republicans throughout the State were aroused as they never had been before, and would send up to Albany on Tuesday next a majority that not even the ballot-box stuffers of Tilden could overcome. Mr. Depew was listened to throughout with close attention, and heartily applauded. Gen. George A. Sheridan, of Louisiana, followed in a telling address, in which eloquence and humor were almost equally mingled. He explained in the beginning the character of his relationship to Gen. "Phil." Sheridan, and the great "point" which the Democratic papers of the West had made of it, and then proceeded to unmask the "true inwardness" of the "Reform" to which the country had been treated by the Democratic House at the last session of Congress. They were a mysterious lot—these investigators—always getting together in corners, and digging into all sorts of unheard-of places in search of "points." At last they made a "find" in the person of Belknap, but their joy over that discovery had hardly cooled before they found they were going to have a funeral in their own camp—and that George H. Pendleton was to be the corpse. Take them altogether, it was probable that we never should look upon their like again. Gen. Sheridan reviewed the past records of the two families, and closed with a stirring appeal to his auditors to bend all their energies to the great work of placing the Empire State on the side of the Union. Following is a full report of the proceedings:

THE PROCEEDINGS.

The meeting was called to order by Hon. A. B. Cornell, upon whose nomination Hon. J. D. Lawson was chosen Chairman. Mr. Lawson made a short address, after which a long list of Vice Presidents and Secretaries was read and adopted.

Mr. Lawson then introduced, as the first speaker of the evening, Hon. Chauncey M. Depew.

SPEECH OF HON. CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW.

FELLOW CITIZENS: In these closing days of the canvass we meet to review the situation and sum up its results. Every indication of the times, and all currents of popular opinion, tend to show that victory is bound to perch upon the banner of truth and right. The early contests in New-England, with their large and gratifying majorities, have been followed by Colorado, the youngest daughter of the Republic, baptizing herself in the pure waters of Republicanism, while Ohio stood sponsor at her baptism, and for the fourth time evinced her confidence in our nominee for the Presidency. If we have lost the State ticket in Indiana, the gain of four Congressmen shows that the Chairman of the National Democratic Committee miscalculated his necessities when he ordered but seven more mules. * * * I am not one of those who claim that the Republican Party is entirely free from fault; that it is beyond criticism; that all its public men have been pure and honest; but I do say that as between the two organizations, as their case is made up and presented to us this year, the vices of the Democratic Party so far outnumber and hide its virtues that its virtues can only be discovered by a microscope, while the virtues of the Republican Party so far outnumber and outweigh its vices that its vices can only be detected by an investigating committee.

THE TRUE REMEDY FOR HARD TIMES.

There are some things which in this canvass come directly home to every man in the land. We are in a condition of unparalleled business depression, of stagnation in all branches of trade, and of want of employment. How shall all this be remedied and times be made good? By the restoration of public confidence, and by bringing the greenback dollar up to the point where it shall have the ring of the golden coin. Our national debt, represented as it is by bonds, is the basis upon which rests our banking and our business. Had not a great party thrown discredit for years past, and now, upon the good faith of the people in respect to that obligation, our debt would be much less, our credit much better, and trade much more active. That debt represents the shot and the shell, the armies and the navies which saved our institutions. It is a mortgage upon our properties, our consciences, and our affections, and it will be met and paid by this generation and those which come after, every dollar of it.

TRIED BY ITS OWN STANDARD.

The Democratic Party says that prosperity can only be restored by "public economies, official retrenchments, and wise finance." Let us accept the standard, and try these contestants for popular favor by it. The record is made up; for a quarter of a century or more before 1860, the Democratic Party had entire control of the Government; for sixteen years, with a short interruption, since 1860 the Republican Party has had entire control of the Government. Prior to 1860, the Democratic Party, by its extravagance, corruption, and incompetency, lost $9 out of every $1,000 it collected. Since 1860 the Republican Administration out of every thousand dollars collected, has lost only thirty-four cents. Prior to 1860, the Democratic Administration let its expenditures run ahead of its income nearly every year, and had to accumulate debt to make up the deficiency. Since war closed the Republican Administration has lived within its income $60,000,000 a year, and with this saving has paid off nearly eight hundred millions of the national debt. In 1860, though the republic owed but $100,000,000, the Democratic Administration by its corruptions and disloyalty had so affected our national credit that in borrowing $18,000,000 at six per cent. interest, it had to pay a shave of fifteen per cent., and we got only $85 for every $100 bond that we put out. In 1866, when Andrew Johnson was acting with the Democratic Party, another six per cent. loan could only be had at a shave of fifteen per cent., and a loss of $15 on every $100. Last year our credit was so far appreciated that we made a large loan at five per cent. interest, to take up the six per cent. bonds which were falling due, and got the money at par. Within the last three months we have issued bonds bearing four and one-half per cent. interest, to take up more six per cent. interest bearing bonds falling due; and these have been taken at par. And when the news of the Colorado election had been cabled abroad, and with it the assurance that a Republican Administration, representing peace and stability and fidelity to the public credit, was assured for another four years, the Rothschilds telegraphed, "Send us ten millions more of the four and one-half per cent. bonds."

THE DEMOCRACY AND THE GREENBACK.

In addition to the disturbance of our national credit, the Democratic Party has succeeded in unsettling everything by its advocacy of inflation, and the confusion it has created in regard to our currency. Nothing is more extraordinary than the Democrat's present love for the greenback. During the war, language failed him to fitly and fully express for it his hatred and contempt. Now there is not an impecunious Democrat from Maine to Georgia who don't want all the greenbacks he can lay his hands on, and he don't care how he gets them. The greenback dollar was a war necessity, and it served its purpose well. When the Government was spending millions of dollars a day, and had not money enough to meet its wants, it did what you or I would do under similar circumstances—issued its paper promise at what it could get for it; and the rate at which the note sold indicated the measure of confidence the world had in our stability and integrity. In 1863 it would buy only thirty-five cents' worth in gold, and the world went only one-third on our stability and integrity. In 1868 it would buy seventy cents' worth in gold, and the world went two-thirds on our stability and integrity. To-day it will buy ninety-one cents in gold, and the world goes seven-eighths on our stability and integrity. And if Hayes and Wheeler are elected, before 1879 it will buy a hundred cents' worth in gold; and the world will go even on our stability and integrity.

WHY WE SHOULD HAVE A HARD-MONEY CURRENCY.

If we had a hard-money currency common to all civilized nations, there would be no barriers to our exchanges, and artificial disturbances of our commercial relations; and the Government could not make us speculators to-day and paupers to-morrow. It could only stamp upon the metal the printed certificate of its genuineness and value, and there its functions would cease. The immutable laws of trade would govern the rest. We would not need to argue about more or less currency. It would flow in if we had too little, from some country which had too much; and if we had more than we could well and profitably use, it would flow out to some country which had more need of it than we. There are some things which cannot be done with impunity. You cannot violate the laws of nature, or the laws of trade, or the laws of health, without incurring disease, and if the violation is persisted in, death. On the other hand, if Congress can increase or diminish our currency at will, all business is at the whim of the politician, and brains and experience are of little value. There never was a scheme devised by the human mind so well calculated to make the rich richer and the poor poorer, as an irredeemable paper currency. * * * If we had an honest currency to-day, and it was thoroughly understood that Congress could not interfere to appreciate or depreciate its value, there now lie in the banks hundreds of millions of dollars whose owners are afraid to use it, and in the trust companies millions upon millions more which the trust companies do not want, all of which would be brought into active use. The capitalists would understand that only their own brains and the laws of trade would make or unmake their ventures. Money would become active, distrust would disappear, railroads would be constructed where needed, furnaces would be put in blast, mills in motion, and all avenues of employment would be calling for workmen; and good work at fair wages would be so importunate that no man would be without employment, unless he was utterly lazy and worthless.

THE TRUE CAUSES OF THE PANIC OF 1873.

The Democratic Party all over the West and South believe, notwithstanding its disastrous results, in an unlimited paper currency. They claim that the panic of 1873 was caused by contraction, and at no time before 1873 had there been so much currency in use as there was at the time of the panic. The causes which led to it are very plain to thoughtful men. When the Franco-German war closed the French nation, though beaten and suffering from the immense losses of its defeat, and the thousand millions extorted from it by Germany, immediately began in every department to economize, and the government and the people worked harmoniously to this end. The result has been that instead of industrial depression, the French people are prosperous and their war paper is nearly equal to gold. But how was it with us? When the war closed, instead of economizing as individuals and as a people, everywhere and in everything, to repair the loss of six thousand millions of dollars and a million of men, we launched into a wild career of speculation and extravagance. We built railroads where there was not a pound of freight or a passenger to be found; we started blast furnaces where they were not needed; we manufactured more than we could sell; we laid out town lots upon farms which would not be worth more than a hundred dollars an acre for farm purposes for fifty years to come; we gambled in the stocks of paper corporations; we built magnificent palaces in the cities, and splendid villas in the country; we had our yachts and our rare and costly pleasures; we frescoed and we painted, and we laid all climes and all nations under contribution to furnish us with the most gorgeous and expensive fabrics. We had our drags and our six-in-hands, and all the paraphernalia of boundless wealth. We took James Fisk, Jr., as a type and model of how to make money, and how to spend it; and the panic of 1873 was simply the natural collapse of the biggest old-fashioned grand drunk that ever a nation went on. We have been for three years in poverty and distress, trying to get sober; and it Hayes and Wheeler are elected on the 7th day of November, I believe that once again this nation will be a sober people and prepared to do business.

THE RESUMPTION ACT AND MR. TILDEN'S POSITION.

Now, the Republican party, in 1875, passed an act declaring that the Government should resume the payment of its greenbacks in gold on the 1st day of January, 1879, and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to make the necessary preparations to that end. The Democratic party seeks to repeal that act. Gov. Tilden has always been a hard money man. In 1875, when Congress passed this act, for whose repeal he now so loudly clamors, he sent a Message to the Legislature in which he said in substance: This is about the only decent measure I ever knew a Republican Congress to pass; it meets my entire approval, and I want you to indorse it. And by the unanimous action of the Legislature and the Governor, there is written across the back of that Resumption act of 1875, the broad indorsement: New-York State, Excelsior! Samuel J. Tilden, Governor. How he came to surrender is only another instance of ambition undermining principle. Gov. Hendricks sent for him to come to Saratoga, and said to him: you have got to get down off that hard-money hobby of yours, or you can receive no support from the Democratic Party of the West, or the South. He plied him with appeals to his anxiety for the Presidency, and with frequent doses of Congress Water; and Uncle Sammy became the softest of soft money men. But, said Gov. Tilden, I have got to sustain my record and my friends in the Eastern and Middle States, and some method must be devised to accomplish this result. He took a long time to settle it. It seemed as if that letter would never come. His anxious and waiting party became almost hopeless with despair; but it came sooner than those who knew his mental peculiarities well, expected. Mr. Tilden is a shrewd and able lawyer, and there is no man who can get around a sharp corner quicker, or through a small hole easier than he; and his solution of the difficulty was to repeal the day of resumption:—because then, he said, you, Gov. Hendricks, can proclaim all over the West and South that we have taken the date out of the Resumption act; and so the Government will never resume, but there will be unlimited greenbacks forever. And I will say all over the East that it is much easier to resume with the date out of the note, because the date in an obligation to pay is always a hindrance to resumption. And upon these two explanations, the Democratic canvass is being prosecuted all over the land.

UNCLE SAMUEL'S "EXPLANATION" OF HIS FINANCE.

The Western part of this argument, I can thoroughly and easily understand; but the Eastern position passes my comprehension. I have devoted myself with much care and study to try to ascertain how repealing the date will quicken the ability to resume. I have read treatises upon finance, reports of Secretaries of the Treasury, Encyclopedias, but none of them shed light upon the subject. So, finally, I turned to that marvelous compendium of financial wisdom. Uncle Sammy's letter of acceptance, and there I found the conundrum answered. I have read it a great many times, and now I will read it to you. He says, the date being repealed, "How shall the Government make these notes at all times as good as specie? It has to provide in reference to the mass which would be kept in use, by the wants of business, a central reservoir of coin, adapted to the adjustment of the temporary fluctuations of international balances, and as a guarantee against transient drains, artificially created by panic or speculation." That is how it is to be done, and it is as clear as mud. When the average Democrat seeks to understand and explain to his neighbor the mysteries of Uncle Sammy's finance, and appeals to this letter for assistance, he is in the condition of good old Captain Cuttle when he wanted to know if Walter Gay was drowned, and, unable to solve the problem himself, sent for old Jack Bunsby to assist him. And Jack came and sat down at the table, and got outside of a bottle of rum, and smoked a pipe, and then said: "If so be as Walter Gay is dead, then he will not come back no more. If so be as Walter Gay is not dead, then he will. Do I say that he will? No. Why not? Because the bearin's of this observation lie in the application of it. Which way?—Why not?—Wherefore? If so, therefore." We have every day in our streets, upon this subject, the play of "Hamlet." It is Hamlet Tilden and Polonius Democrat. Says Hamlet Tilden: "Do you see yonder cloud? that is almost in shape of a camel." Says Polonius Democrat: "By the mass! and it is like a camel, indeed." Says Hamlet Tilden: "Methinks it is like a weasel." Says Polonius Democrat: "It is backed like a weasel." Says Hamlet Tilden: "Or like a whale." Says Polonius Democrat: "Very like a whale."

THE "SOLID SOUTH"—TWO ILLUSTRATIVE CASES FROM MISSISSIPPI.

The Democratic managers claim that even if they lose all the Northern States except New-York, Connecticut, and New-Jersey, they will elect their ticket, because it will receive the support of a "solid South." Every man who can read knows that the States of South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana are Republican by thousands of majorities. Then how will this ticket receive the vote of the solid South? By intimidation, assassination and murder! A United States Senator, who was a member of the committee which investigated how Mississippi was carried, told me two instances brought out before them which clearly indicate the whole story. One was the election at Aberdeen. The ballot-box was placed in front of the Court-house. On the other side of the court-yard was a cannon; behind it artillerymen; behind them infantry armed with rifles; riding up and down the streets, a company of cavalry. Four or five hundred Republican voters lived on the other side of the river, and voted at the poll. The draw-bridge was raised, and the two fords at which they crossed when the bridge was up, were guarded by armed men. The Republican leader, Capt. Lee, who had been a Captain in the Confederate Army, but accepting the results of the war, had become a Republican, and was Sheriff of the County, locked himself up in jail for fear of assassination; and this town, which is three to one Republican, gave a unanimous Democratic vote. There was a State Senator, of Mississippi, named Caldwell, an educated, intelligent man, living a little way out of the village of Clinton, who came in one night upon business, and one of the clergymen of the place told him there was so much feeling against Republicans that he had better go into the store. Armed men gathered around, and this clergyman said: "You had better go down cellar until the excitement is over." He went down cellar, and some of these people went behind the building, and through a window shot him through the body. In the meantime his brother, also a small farmer, an active Republican, riding into town, was shot dead from his horse. His wife, hearing of the trouble, tried to get into the village, but was kept out by the pickets which had been thrown out. This Senator called out: "Don't leave me here to die like a dog! Some one take me up to the light!" And this same clergyman led him up stairs and was taking him across the street when these armed men gathered about, and saying "dead men tell no tales," riddled him with bullets. That night the bodies were carried to this man's house, and about midnight one of these same companies from Vicksburg, calling themselves Modocs, rode out there and held high carnival until morning, insulting the family and striking these bodies, and calling upon them to rise and defend themselves. There is not one of these men who is not to-day and every day yelling himself hoarse for Tilden, Hendricks, Good Government, and Reform!

PRACTICAL REFORM BY A DEMOCRATIC HOUSE—THE CIVIL SERVICE.

We have had a recent Democratic official exposition of their ideas of practical reform, in the present House of Representatives. No opportunity was ever offered to a party to gain the confidence of the country so great as the Democracy had when it elected a majority of the present Congress. With the distress existing in the country, and which elected it, if that Congress had possessed statesmanship, or capacity for affairs, it would have devised remedies so wise and popular as to have gained the absolute confidence of the country; but instead it has given us the most extraordinary exhibition of imbecility and idiocy our time has afforded. It began with civil service reform. Now, we all want civil service reform. * * * And until we reach that we shall have corruption and extravagance and incompetency through all our public matters. Now, Gov. Hayes has expressed himself decisively in favor of civil service reform; and Gov. Tilden decisively against it. This House of Representatives illustrated Gov. Tilden's ideas. It turned out every employe without regard to his fitness or his services; and if he had lost a leg in the war he had to walk a little faster than the man who had two. And in the places of these Union soldiers and others it put the leanest, lankest, hungriest, longest-haired, and most incompetent set of officials that ever disgraced Washington. At their head was Doorkeeper Fitzhugh, who had been the doorkeeper of the Confederate House of Representatives at Richmond, and was made doorkeeper of the National House of Representatives at Washington; and who as soon as he received his appointment felt as proud as a peacock with a newly painted tail, and strutted up and down Pennsylvania avenue and the halls of the Capitol, with his thumbs in the arm-holes of his vest, and saying to an admiring crowd: "I am a 'big'er' man than old Grant."

SOUTHERN CLAIMS—SUBSERVIENCY OF THE WESTERN DEMOCRACY.

Having thus organized itself, it proceeded to business, and its first business was to do all in its power to depreciate the national credit by repealing the national promise to pay its debts. And then it entered upon the congenial task of depleting the Treasury by the payment of rebel claims. It passed over five hundred thousand dollars of them; it entertained a million and a half more. It wanted to grab out of the Treasury the sixty-eight millions of cotton tax which had been collected—the only war tax ever levied by the Government upon the South, though hundreds of millions had been collected from the North. And not content with this slow procedure, it undertook to accomplish the whole thing by wholesale; and Mr. Wilshire, of Arkansas, introduced a measure that the Secretary of the Treasury should pay on the certificate of the owner, for all stock and personal property lost or destroyed in the South during the rebellion. And Mr. Riddle, of Tennessee, introduced a bill to pay for all land occupied by the Union Army during the same period. Gov. Tilden has written a letter pledging himself not to sign these bills when the Democratic Congress has passed them. Does anybody expect such a pledge from Gov. Hayes? It is not expected or required. Gov. Tilden surrendered, when pressed by Mr. Hendricks at Saratoga, his life-long convictions upon the currency, and retracted his solemn official act of approval of the Resumption act, and is it safe to presume that under the pressure of the men to whom he will owe his election, he will not be equally weak? And in his letter of acceptance he says that "Experience has repeatedly exposed the futility of self-imposed restrictions by candidates or incumbents."

Gov. Seymour, in a recent speech at Utica, advocated the election of Gov. Tilden, because, the Senate being Republican, no harm could result to the country. Mr. Seymour, who is the purest and ablest living Democrat, was alarmed by the action of the Democratic House of Representatives, and had no confidence in an Administration which was wholly Democratic. In this House of Representatives were sixty members from the South, representing eleven millions of people, and one hundred and ten members from the North, representing thirty-three millions of people; and yet in that body, where the committees do most of the legislation, the two-thirds from the North gave two-thirds of the committees, including the best, to the one-third from the South, and gladly and cheerfully said to their Southern brethren: "You lead and we will follow." It was an exhibition of the old "dough-face" practices so familiar before the war, and is an indication full of peril upon this question of Southern claims.

These claims aggregate $2,400,000,000—$400,000,000 more than our national debt. In this Centennial year, when we are having at Philadelphia the grand exhibition of our progress, of our industries, manufactures, and arts; when we are calling upon all nations to come and look at us, and see how great and prosperous we are, it was a peculiar insult for a National Congress to entertain bills which would compel us to pay for the bloody field of Murfreesboro; which would compel us to pay for the tobacco which was trampled down as our boys rushed over the ramparts of Donelson; which would compel us to pay for the cotton bolls that were kicked off as our troops marched into Vicksburg; which would compel us to pay for the fields that were trampled down and the stock that was taken when Sherman cut loose from his base of supplies and lived upon the country, and made his grand march to the sea; which would compel us to pay for the field upon which Lee surrendered his sword to Grant. This is the banquet which the Democratic House of Representatives has prepared, and which it invites the nation to sit down to, and then foot the bill.

GOV. TILDEN AND GOV. MORGAN.

I have only a few words to say in regard to Gov. Tilden, and that only upon his official life and expressions upon public questions—and these things he desires us to study and examine. He has been one year a member of Assembly and one term a Governor. As member of the Legislature he voted 115 times and dodged 1,300 times, and that closes his legislative career. And right here I would remark that at this particular juncture in our own State, with its great commercial and manufacturing interests, it is peculiarly fortunate that we have an opportunity of voting for a gentleman for Governor who, in the management of his own affairs and in the administration of public office, has exhibited those rare qualities which we most need. It is certainly a fortunate circumstance for our Commonwealth that at this time, of all others, we can secure the services of Gov. Morgan.

TILDEN'S FRAUDULENT CLAIMS ON THE STATE TAXATION QUESTION.

Now, then, Gov. Tilden's friends claim that he has reduced taxation, and smashed rings. All over the State are placarded, upon barn-doors and fences and dead walls, the statement that Gov. Tilden has reduced our taxes six millions of dollars. Our taxes are about six million dollars less this year than they were last. That is true. But that Gov. Tilden reduced them—that is a lie. I never see that statement but what I am convinced of the possibility of incongruities living harmoniously together; of fraud and reform trotting in double harness. A Democratic Administration had taken from the sinking fund every dollar of this money, and wrongfully appropriated it. A Republican Administration, discovering this misappropriation, levied a tax and restored the money to the sinking fund; and we do not have to pay it twice. Leaving this sum out, we find that the expenses of Gov. Tilden's Administration have been some half million dollars more than that of his Republican predecessors.

HOW HE SMASHED THE TAMMANY RING AND THE CANAL RING.

But then his friends say he smashed the Tammany Ring and crushed the Canal Ring. There is not a Democratic editor from Maine to Georgia who has any hair left on the top of his head. He has scratched it all off in the wild effort to find words big enough and language strong enough to describe how Gov. Tilden has crushed these various Rings. He pictures our graceful and slender old bachelor Governor as an old Scandinavian God, whose head pierced the clouds, and who swung a hammer with which he crushed mountains at will. Now, when the Tammany Ring had been completely broken, and when its fragments were flying in every direction and could neither be discovered nor caught by a detective, this great champion sprang into the arena and swung his big mace, and shouted, "Show me the Tammany Ring." When, however, some members were caught, and securely held by the police, I will do the Governor the credit that he did pummell them soundly. All that he said about the Canal Ring is true, and it created an excitement far and wide, all over the land. And yet, though he says that $36,000 000 had been stolen from the State, not a member of that organization yet wears the livery of the State, nor has the State Treasury ever seen a dollar of a canal thief's money.

I should think that when Gov. Tilden makes an examination of the situation, and sees piling up around him all these evidences of outrage, terrorism, incompetency, and corruption, and still continues to rise over the mass and stand on tip-toe and squeak "reform!" that he would feel like the hard-shell Baptist minister, who, addressing a wood meeting, happened to stand upon a hill of big black ants, and as he warmed with his subject and stamped about, the ants crawled up his clothes and began to bite; and as he talked, they nipped him; and as he preached, they bit; and finally, unable to resist the agony, he shouted: "My brethering, I can't stand this any longer. The word of the Lord is in my mouth, but the Devil is all over me!"

TILDEN AND HAYES AS PATRIOTS.

In 1860, Gov. Tilden published the ablest argument in behalf of the Calhoun doctrine of State Rights that I have ever read. In it he argued that this Government is not a Federal Union, but a Federative Agency; and that a State can snap the tie of federation as a nation would break a treaty. * * * The President of one of our largest railroad corporations said to me that when Fort Sumter was fired upon, he, being then as now, a Democrat of the Jackson stripe, met with other Democrats of like sentiments to protest against the outrage. They decided to call a public meeting at Union square, and invited the co-operation of all the leading members of the Democratic Party. Some of the committee saw Mr. Belmont, who signed the call. Some of them saw Fernando Wood, then Mayor, who also signed the call. He went to see Mr. Tilden. Mr. Tilden argued with him for hours, that inasmuch as the Government had no constitutional right to coerce a State, he could not sign such a paper. This gentleman said to him, "You are making the mistake of your life, and I will see you again to-morrow morning." In the morning, Mr. Tilden informed him that he was, after mature reflection, the more confirmed in his position: and this gentleman left him, saying, "The day will come, when you will regret this more than any act of your life." That day will be the 7th day of November next!

And when two hundred and fifty thousand men gathered in Union square, the blood coursing through their veins as never before, their hearts beating with the wildest emotions, the very springs of their lives almost suspended and paralyzed by the intensity of the hour, a cool and thoughtful lawyer stood on the outskirts of the crowd, saying to himself: Here are two hundred and fifty thousand fools, who do not understand the Constitution of the United States! And this gentleman, who at this period when South Carolina comes to the front to impress upon our institutions again her ideas, asks the suffrages of the American people for the Presidency of the United States! He was arguing questions of constitutional law at a time when the Republic was in flames, and the people were trying to quench the fire with buckets full of their own blood! He said, in 1861, that the Union soldier was a trespasser. On the doctrine expounded in his letter to William Kent, the Union soldier was a trespasser; because if the Government had no constitutional right to suppress a rebellion, then the soldier was in the Southern States without the color of authority.

When Samuel J. Tilden was arguing that this Republic was a federated agency, Rutherford B. Hayes was offering his life to prove it to be a federal Union! When Samuel J. Tilden was proving the Union soldier to be a trespasser, Rutherford B. Hayes was trespassing wherever an enemy of his country could be found! When Samuel J. Tilden, as a member of the National Democratic Convention at Chicago, was declaring the war a failure, Rutherford B. Hayes lay upon his back, shot almost to death with wounds, to prove this war an absolute success!

CONCLUSION.

Lieut. Gov. Dorsheimer said in a recent speech that he had searched the annals of the time and he could not ascertain who Gov. Hayes was, whether he was Mr. Hayes, or Lieut. Hayes, or Col. Hayes, or Gen. Hayes. On the day after election Lieut. Gov. Dorsheimer will know him better than he ever did any man in his life! The people of Ohio knew Mr. Hayes before the war as a good citizen and an honest man. The Army knew Gen. Hayes as a brave and capable soldier. The citizens of this State have known Gov. Hayes for three successive terms as an officer who possesses rare executive and administrative ability; and as the light of this canvass is bringing out his opinions and his career, the people of this Republic are discovering that if they would have civil and political liberty all over the land; if they would have the ballot-box free; if they would have an unrestricted expression of private opinion upon public affairs; if they would have prosperity and peace, and employment and wealth, they can secure them only through President Hayes."

Immediately upon the conclusion of Mr. Depew's address, the Chairman introduced Gen. George A. Sheridan, of Louisiana, who spoke as follows:

ADDRESS OF GEN. GEO. A. SHERIDAN.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: I always deem it wise and proper before entering into any discussion of issues involved in the present campaign to say a few words about myself, for two reasons: Firstly, because it is due to the ladies and gentlemen who gather to listen to me; and, secondly, because by doing so I save Democratic reporters and editors vast trouble in trying to cipher out who I am, where I come from, and where I expect to go to. I have been canvassing the States of Indiana and Ohio for sixty days, and the Democratic press of those States has said that I was tramping about their territory claiming to be Phil Sheridan, or a brother of Phil. Sheridan, or at least a cousin of Phil Sheridan. But I am not Phil Sheridan. You New-Yorkers can see that for yourselves; neither am I his brother, nor his cousin, nor his aunt, nor his mother-in-law. I had some relations with Phil in the Army. I served in the same brigade with him, and I have a distinct recollection of having been court-martialed by him four times. I was born in Massachusetts—I couldn't help that—and when a young man, I obeyed the advice of a prominent citizen of New-York, and went West. I entered the Army from Chicago, and served through the war as best I could. At the close of the war I carpet-bagged it into Louisiana. I am here to do what I can for the election of Hayes and Wheeler, and after the 7th of November—upon which day they will be elected—I am going back to Louisiana in the full conviction that there, as well as here, men will be able to stand up and speak and vote as they like. The Democratic Party tells us that we must not discuss the past. They don't want their past discussed, and God knows I don't blame them. But if we don't discuss their past, what shall we discuss? They have no present, and they won't have any future. The records of the two parties are before the nations, and from them we have the right to judge which will best carry into effect the wishes of the people. The Democrats say, "Let the dead past bury its dead." I'm in favor of that, but I want a clean funeral. [Applause.] The Democrats have not a good memory of past events, but they have got a splendid "forgetory." Gen. Sheridan went on from this point to discuss the Tilden cry for reform. He said that the cry for reform was based upon Democratic misstatements of facts. There was a great difference between Democrats and figures. It was just this—that figures won't lie. There was nothing, the speaker said, in the acts of the recent House of Representatives, nothing in the actions of the Democrats of the county at the time the "tidal" wave swept over the country to show that they were in for honest government and the enforcement of the legal rights of all men. Of nearly every man who was elected to Congress by the Democrats during their recent popularity it could be said that his chief recommendation to Democratic voters was his disloyalty to the Union during the late war. Gen. Sheridan next took up the Southern question. "I am a carpet-bagger," he said. "I went to Louisiana ten years ago without a cent and I haven't got a cent now. Now, I want to ask what law have I violated in going to Louisiana? Did I violate any national law? Did I violate any statute of Louisiana? No, gentlemen. We own Louisiana by three titles. We bought it and paid for it. That's title number one. We purchased it by the war and wrote the deed in letters of blood, and that is title number two. And we owned it in the first place by good rights. So then, when we go down there from the North, we are just following up our own land. I have been asked if a loyal man can go down there and live there quietly. Yes, I say he can go to some sections and live quietly enough, so quietly that nobody will have anything whatever to do with him. He can have just what society he takes with him, and no more. But there are broad sections in Louisiana where, if the best man in New-York puts in an appearance, with the knowledge on the part of the people that he is a Republican, believing in the preservation of the rights of all men irrespective of color, they'll either drive him out of the country or bury him there. And there is no man from Louisiana who would stand here to contradict what I say, for they know I can point to hundreds of graves in Louisiana of men who met their deaths simply because they were Republicans. The black men of the South make an appeal to us which we cannot resist. They tell us of the services they rendered us in the war, in their prayers, in the relief they gave to Union soldiers escaping from rebel prisons, in the share they took on the battle-fields side by side with the men of New-England, the West, and the Middle States. There was a time when we did not look at the color of these men as we do now. I don't know how you feel, but if a colored man was as willing to give his life in the same cause for which I fought, he is good enough to stand up at the ballot-box. The Republican Party has pledged itself to bring about a day when, irrespective of race, color, or creed, men can go to the ballot-box and vote as it pleases them, when there shall be free speech and untrammeled ballot; and I tell you to-night we will have that day, or by the Living God we will make this continent reel as it never reeled before. [Applause.] It is a strange thing to me that the United States has not the right to protect its citizens. If a foreign power should infringe upon the rights of an American citizen, and refuse to grant redress, we would cross over into its territory with our armies and demand it. But a State line, something "you can't see," something that exists only in imagination, is a barrier and a shield to prevent the Government from protecting the citizens of that State against the tyranny of men against whom the State Government is powerless. We buried that doctrine once—will bury it again on the 7th of November, and with it the Democratic Party, that dug it up. [Applause.] And now a word about Mr. Tilden. I never saw him but once. That was at Saratoga. I never want to see him again. He didn't look as if there was much reform in him. He reminded me of a sick man in New-Orleans who was told that he must either drink a quart of catnip tea or die. "I guess I'll have to die, Doctor," he said. "How so?" inquired the Doctor. "Why because my capacity is only one pint." I always think of that man when I hear of the great things Tilden is going to do in reforming the country. He hasn't capacity for so much reform.

Gen. Sheridan closed, after speaking over an hour, with a comparison between the rival candidates. In his peroration he sketched the conduct of Gen. Hayes at one of the battles of the war, leading his command into the very cannon's mouth, and pictured Tilden at this time staying at home and declaring the war an outrage, and the boys in blue who were waging it as trespassers, liable to arrest and trial before any Justice of the Peace.

FOREIGN BUSINESS AFFAIRS.

FLUCTUATIONS ON THE STOCK EXCHANGE—MINCING LANE MARKETS—SPECIE FOR THIS CITY.

LONDON, Nov. 4.—There has been much fluctuation on the Stock Exchange during the week, which, in the early part, was of an unfavorable tendency, in consequence of Eastern affairs. The announcement of the conclusion of an armistice produced a great improvement. Since Thursday an important advance in prices has occurred, and the majority of stocks attained their best point for some weeks. Argentines and Buenos Ayres have gained 9 to 12; Uruguays, 6; Egypts, 3 to 4½; Hungarian, 2 to 4½; Russian, 3; Turkish, ½ to 4½; Austrian, 2½; French, 1¾ to 2, and Italian, 2½. The continental Bourses during the last three days have also been very buoyant. English railways have generally tended upward, though the advance is immaterial. To-day there has been a slight relapse all around, without assignable cause, except the discontinuance of purchases by speculators to cover outstanding contracts.

The Mincing lane markets have been only slightly affected by Eastern affairs. Large transactions in loaf sugar have caused a further advance of 6d. to 9d. per hundred weight, and West Indies is held for a greater rise. Refined, including foreign loaves, has sold higher. The stock of raw sugar has again decreased. Plantation Ceylon Coffee still tends upwards, and at the public sales realized two shillings per hundred weight above last week's rates. Low descriptions are dull. Tea is depressed. The stock is large. Fair Congous sold in buyer's favor. Rice is held for higher prices. Saltpetre is a trifle cheaper.

The sum of $860,000 in specie was withdrawn from the Bank of England yesterday for shipment to New-York.

SUICIDE AT HIGH BRIDGE.

A SUITOR AT LAW, BECOMING DISCOURAGED, SHOOTS HIMSELF—THE DECEASED A RESIDENT OF CHICAGO.

Yesterday afternoon while Patrolman Simmons, of the mounted force, was on duty near the junction of Sedgwick and Jerome avenues, High Bridge Ville, he was startled by the report of a pistol, and turning round saw a man a short distance off fall to the ground. The officer rode to the spot and found the stranger lying dead on the ground, having shot himself through the head with a single-barreled pistol, which was found lying beside him. The deceased appeared to be about sixty years of age, had gray hair and whiskers and was respectably attired. The body was removed to the Morrisania Police Station, and on being searched a paper was found in his hat on which was written in pencil that the writer had killed himself because one William B. Ogden had kept him out of his money, and also a memorandum of a law-suit, entitled "William Hildebrandt vs. William B. Ogden," for the recovery of $2,000. From Mr. Ogden, who has an office at No. 214 Broadway, and who lives at High Bridge, it was learned that the deceased was William Hildebrandt, of Chicago, and that there was a suit pending between them. The remains of the deceased were removed to the Morgue, and Coroner Ellinger will hold an inquest in the case.

In consequence of this, Mr. Heckson, general manager of the road in Canada, has tendered his resignation. A circular has been published, and also letters and telegrams from Messrs. Mackenzie, Newmarch, and Hodgson, relative to the affairs of the Grand Trunk Road. Mr. Potter defends his conduct and indulges in accusations against his colleagues in the board.

THE BROCK MURDER CASE CLOSED.

The trial of Oschwald and Regan, at Newark, charged with the murder of Police Officer Brock, on the morning of Aug. 3, was concluded yesterday, as far as the court is concerned. Attorney General Vanatta summed the case up for the prosecution yesterday morning. Judge Depue charged the jurors at considerable length. He carefully reviewed the evidence, paying particular attention to the evidence by which the prisoners attempted to establish an alibi, a plea which he cautioned the jurors to be careful in accepting. The case was given to the jurors at about 4 o'clock. At a late hour no verdict had been reached.

THE SCARCITY OF WATER.

President Smith, of the Board of Police, yesterday received a letter from Mr. Allan Campbell, Commissioner of Public Works, in relation to the failing water supply and the danger there exists of a water famine in this City. The aid of the Police is invited to put a stop to the reckless waste of the precious Croton, and Mr. Campbell requests that the Police be instructed to take vigorous measures to that end. In pursuance of this request, Suptendent Walling was directed to assemble the Captains at Head-quarters this morning and give them the necessary authority to effect the purpose intended.

HE DOES NOT VOTE FOR A PERJURER.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In your paper of yesterday I find my name signed to an address in favor of Tilden and Hendricks. I signed no such paper, and no one was authorized to sign for me. JOHN BONNER.

Victor Bullock, a child, aged about three years, and residing with its parents at No. 188 Remsen street, found a glass containing morphine in a closet, and swallowed its contents, dying soon after. The mother it appears used the drug for neuralgia, and carelessly left it within the reach of the child.

The Herkimer Street Baptist Church, Brooklyn, having been enlarged and improved will re-open to-day. Rev. Dr. Hague, of Boston, will preach at 10:30 A. M.; Rev. Dr. Fulton at 3 P. M., and Rev. Halsey W. Knapp at 7:30 P. M. There will also be preaching on Monday evening by Rev. George H. Hepworth, and on Tuesday evening by Rev. R. S. McArthur.

Henry S. Elmore, a resident of the Sixth District of the Twentieth Ward, who had not resided there thirty days when he attempted to register, was instructed by the Registers to return on the last day of registration. He was prevented from doing so, and yesterday Justice Gilbert, in the Supreme Court granted an application for a mandamus against the Board of Registry compelling them to register his name.

While John Gardiner, a ship-carpenter, aged fifty years, residing at No. 403 Van Brunt street, was crossing the street near his residence last night, he was tripped up by the drag-rope of a fire-engine, which was one of the features of the Democratic procession, and sustained a fracture of his right leg. He was conveyed to the Eleventh Precinct Station-house, and after being attended by Police Surgeon Sheridan, was taken to his home by his friends.

On Friday morning last, Mr. Peter Hartman, with his entire family, left his residence at No. 134 Johnson street, and went to the Centennial at Philadelphia. Upon returning at 11 o'clock in the evening of the same day, he discovered that thieves had effected an entrance to the house and had thoroughly ransacked it from top to bottom. After destroying a large amount of property, they carried off about seven hundred and fifty dollars worth of jewelry and clothing, and packed up a large quantity in readiness for removal, but did not return. A large Newfoundland dog that was left in the house was found in the hallway with his leg broken.

THE PEOPLE AGAINST JARVIS LORD.

ALBANY, Nov. 4.—Justice Osborn to-day, on the application of the Attorney General, Mr. Greenville Tremain opposing, directed the entry of an order that a special jury be struck for the trial of the case of the People against Jarvis Lord and John Leahy, and that the Clerk of Albany County deliver to the Sheriff a list of the jurors required by law immediately after their names are ascertained. The order also provides that the jurors contained on such list be summoned by the Sheriff to attend an adjourned Circuit to be held at some time hereafter, the date of which is not designated. The affidavit of Deputy Attorney General E. W. Paige, upon which the order was granted, alleges that this is one of the suits to recover damages, the result of the conspiracy against the State known as the Stanwix Hall conspiracy; that the parties concerned therein were large contractors, politicians of note, and possessed of great power and influence, and the intricate character of the evidence to be taken requires a special jury. This is the case that has been pending on the calendar of the present Circuit, and which the counsel for the defense, Messrs. Peckham and Tremaine, have been pressing to trial.

A FIGHT BETWEEN FATHER AND SON.

At Stapleton, Staten Island, on Friday night, John Lynch and his son, aged twenty-two, got into a dispute about some domestic matter, when the parent seized an iron bar and a china cup and struck the son three times over the head, inflicting dangerous if not mortal wounds. The Police, being called by Mrs. Lynch, hastened to the scene of violence, where they found young Lynch in a shocking condition, his head bruised badly, and the walls and floor of the house stained with blood. Dr. Lea, who was summoned to attend the wounded man, says he is in a very precarious condition. The elder Lynch was arrested yesterday and sent to jail.

SUICIDE ON A FERRY-BOAT.

The Jersey City ferry-boat D. S. Gregory had just left her slip at the foot of Desbrosses street last night at 10 o'clock, when two gentlemen standing on the prow of the boat noticed a young girl acting in a singular manner. When their backs were turned she mounted the guard-rail, and jumped into the water. She twice rose to the surface and called for assistance. The boat was stopped and an effort was made to rescue her, but, before she could be reached, she had sunk for the last time. She is described as having been neatly dressed, and to have been about seventeen or eighteen years of age.

SERIOUS STABBING AFFRAY.

A DRUNKEN GARDENER ATTACKS A PARTY OF GERMANS IN NEWARK—TWO MEN FATALLY AND TWO SERIOUSLY INJURED.

On Friday evening, while several members of the "Schalk Guard," a political organization of Newark, N. J., were drinking in a saloon kept by George Hart, at the corner of Hamburg place and Barbara street, a man named George Steckert entered the saloon in an intoxicated condition, and after drinking several glasses of beer, for which he refused to pay, grew riotous upon the refusal of the barkeeper to supply him with more liquor. Two nephews of the proprietor of the place, who were drinking beer with the members of the "Schalk Guard" in an adjoining room, came out on hearing the disturbance, and assisted Mr. Hart in ejecting Steckert from the saloon. Finding himself shut out, the drunken ruffian pounded at the door, and kept up an unearthly din for some time. Finally Charles Weber and Louis Overie, of the Guards, left the saloon with the intention of going home. On reaching the pavement they were assaulted by Steckert, who was in a state of frenzy, and before they could defend themselves they were both stabbed several times. Weber was cut between the two lower ribs on the right side, and from one of the wounds his right lung protruded. Overie escaped with two flesh wounds in the back. The wounded men called for assistance, and, in response, the entire party in the saloon rushed out and attempted to disarm the assassin. Steckert struck out with his knife in every direction, and succeeded in stabbing Jacob Masson on the inner side of the left leg, a long ugly gash in the right hip, and in the left shoulder. Philip Masson, a brother of the wounded man, in endeavoring to save the life of the latter, had his right wrist nearly severed by a blow from the murderer's knife. The remainder of the party then commenced a united assault upon Steckert with their torches, and would probably have killed him, but for the appearance of Officer Koerner, who by a well-directed blow with his club knocked the infuriated murderer down, and secured him. Drs. Osborne and Bleyle were summoned to attend the wounded men. Weber's wounds were pronounced serious, and probably fatal. He is a mason by occupation, has a large family, and resides at No. 155 Hamburg place. Masson's injuries are also regarded by the physicians as being fatal. From a wound in his stomach the intestines protruded, and other wounds, previously mentioned, are likely to cause his death. He is twenty-nine years of age, and a trunk-maker by occupation, residing at No. 29 Main street. He has a wife and three children. Steckert has hitherto borne a good reputation, and claims that he acted in self-defense. He was so badly under the influence of liquor, however, as to be unconscious of what he was about. He is a gardener by trade. A dissolute character, named Frank McGovern, who had been seen with Steckert during the evening, was locked up as a participant in the bloody affray.

THE GAME OF POLO.

FINE SPORT ON THE CLUB GROUNDS—THE PRIZES CARRIED OFF BY MR. BENNETT'S SIDE.

The second game of the Fall series of the Westchester Polo Club took place on the club grounds at Jerome Park yesterday afternoon. The prizes contested for consisted of six saddles and bridles, presented by the President of the club, Mr. J. G. Bennett. At 4 P. M. sides were chosen as follows:

Captain.	Captain.
J. G. Bennett,	Col. W. Jay,
H. Robbins,	F. Griswold,
Herman Oelrichs,	W. Thorne,
J. B. Matt,	Harry Oelrichs,
O. Iselin,	J. W. Balfour.
Color—Yellow and blue.	Color—Blue and white.

First Game.—Play commenced at 4:15 P. M. Mr. Griswold was the first to get the ball, and he drove it, with a well-directed blow, half-way across the ground, where it was stopped by Mr. Iselin. After a very sharp struggle, and some fine play on both sides, Mr. Bennett's side succeeded in driving the ball through the goal, and scored the first victory. Time—5 m.

Second Game.—Mr. Griswold got the ball first again, and struck it hard, straight for the goal. Mr. Bennett stopped it, however, and drove it into the enemies' ranks, where W. Thorne by a fine stroke drove it back again. Mr. Bennett sent the ball spinning across the grounds and between the goals, thus winning the second game. Time, ten minutes.

Third Game.—This was a very exciting and well-played inning. Mr. Oelrichs got at the ball first, and carried it cleverly past Mr. Griswold, who came toward him at a very hot pace, but made a bad miss. J. B. Mott followed the ball to the centre of the grounds, where he obtained possession of it, and, after a short struggle, Mr. Bennett, by a well-directed blow, knocked the ball out of bounds. The umpire threw it in, and then ensued a most exciting struggle for its possession by both sides. The ball was driven across the field again and again by Mr. Bennett, and was as often returned by Col. Jay, who greatly distinguished himself in this inning by his fine playing and riding. After a hard contest, Col. Jay drove the ball between the goals and won the first game for his side. Time—15m.

Fourth Game.—Bennett got the ball first, and by a terrific stroke of the mallet sent it clear across the grounds to within a few feet of the goal, Mr. Iselin, who was goal-keeper, sent it back, and a scrimmage followed, during which the ball was knocked out of bounds. Time was here called by the umpire, as the club was playing according to the Hurlingham rules, which allowed the players a rest of fifteen minutes after each half-hours' play. Play was resumed at 5 P. M. J. B. Mott got at the ball first and struck it out of bounds. After it was thrown in, Mr. Bennett again distinguished himself by a master over-hand stroke, sending the ball flying half-way over the field, where it was stopped by Mr. Thorne in fine style, who sent it back again into the enemies' ground. Herman Oelrichs then showed his skill with the mallet by driving the ball from the lower end of the field to within a foot or two of Col. Jay's goal, where J. W. Balfour drove it out of bounds. When it was thrown in, Bennett, by a good stroke, drove it home and won the fourth game and the third for his side. Time—30m.

Fifth Game.—Griswold got at the base first, but made a very bad miss, and in the struggle that followed Herman Oelrichs was seen to fall from his horse, but before the lady spectators had recovered from the fright his fall had caused them, he was up and had his horse by the bridle. A broken stirrup-strap was the cause of his falling. He was not hurt in the least, and mounting a fresh pony was soon as active as ever. It had now grown so dark that the players were hardly distinguishable, and the game was therefore called at 5:30 P. M., which left Mr. Bennett's side the winner of the prize by two games. At the beginning of the match the attendance was very slim, but after the Jerome races were over the coaches of Messrs. Jerome, Bronson, Havemeyer, Whiting, Bennett and Jay drove into the club grounds, and were followed by a large number of equipages of all kinds. About five hundred people witnessed the match, and appeared well satisfied with the result. Mr. Bennett proved himself to be the most expert horseman and the best player on the field yesterday. Mr. Griswold and Mr. Balfour are greatly improving, and with a little more practice will be hard men to contend against. A dinner was served to the friends and members of the club in the club-rooms, and after the presentation of the trophies won, the guests departed in the "coaches" for the City.

FATAL RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 4.—A collision occurred this morning on the Louisville, Lexington and Cincinnati Short-Line Railroad, near Peewee Valley, between a wild engine and an express train bound south, killing Ginther, the engineer of the wild engine. There were no passengers killed. The engineer, and Moss Brashear, the fireman, of the train coming from Cincinnati, were also killed. James Loman, the express messenger, suffered a fracture of the left leg. James Boyd, fireman with Ginther, was seriously wounded about the head. No passengers were injured, their coaches not suffering in the least. The Short-line Company dispatched physicians to the scene of the accident, and endeavored in every way to alleviate the sufferings of the men before their death. Ginther had instructions to lay at Anchorage, below Pewee Valley, if he arrived there at 10 o'clock. His engine reached Anchorage at 9:58, and, supposing the road would be his until 10 o'clock, he endeavored to proceed on to Beards Station, six miles above. Had he laid over at Pewee Valley, the station between Anchorage and Beards, the accident would have been avoided.

THE YELLOW FEVER IN GEORGIA.

SAVANNAH, Nov. 4.—The total interments yesterday were fourteen, of which seven were from yellow fever. Five of the burials were colored persons. The weather is very warm. Henry E. Backus, formerly of the firm of W. H. Woods & Co., died yesterday.

A RAILROAD TRAIN WRECKED.

WHEELING, Nov. 4.—Nine cars and a locomotive were precipitated through a bridge, a distance of thirty feet, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, two miles east of Moundsville. The engineer, Wash Hamilton, was killed, and an unknown man on the engine was seriously injured.

This morning THE DAILY TIMES consists of TWELVE PAGES. Every news-dealer is bound to deliver the paper in its complete form, and any failure to do so should be reported at the publication office.

Secretary MORRILL'S speech on the financial issue, yesterday, attracted an immense assemblage of our solid business men, who gave it the indorsement which enthusiastic applause indicates. The speech itself is printed on our tenth page, and will well repay careful perusal. Mr. MORRILL'S official position forbade any specific reference to the controverted statements with regard to the effect of Democratic victory on the funding operations of the Syndicate. He spoke, however, with the fullness of knowledge and the earnestness of conviction as to the results already attained by the Republican administration of the finances, and as to the certainty of resumption which attends a continuance of the Republican policy. And he exhibited in vivid contrast the hostile course of the Democratic Party on matters directly affecting the public faith, and the opposition the party has displayed to practical measures leading to specie payments. He insisted that the public credit has already been restored, as the money markets of the world now testify; and that the question between the parties' is, whether the credit shall be maintained, as it will be in the event of Republican success, or impaired, as it must be, if the Democrats are invested with power.

If Mr. HEWITT is not gone clean daft under the labor of the canvass, he will be very much ashamed of the foolish circular he issued last evening, when he comes to see it in print. Why should he publish his anxiety regarding what TWEED may say? He assumes that it is well known that TILDEN broke up the Tammany Ring. In that case the public will know that Mr. TILDEN need not be afraid of the Boss. Mr. HEWITT led Mr. TILDEN into the fatal blunder of exposing his concern regarding the Southern claims, and so giving them an importance which no one else could have given them. The circular in regard to TWEED is of the same rash character. If Mr. HEWITT had not been very badly frightened, he would never have issued it, and he certainly would not have descended to retailing the silly inventions of the bureau about a confession "in type," and the delay which the Franklin is "said" to be undergoing. When the campaign is over, and Mr. HEWITT sits down in cool blood to reflect on the services he has rendered his friend, from the time when he called attention to his relations to TWEED by his wild speech in the House up to this last crazy exploit, we are afraid that he will not feel as comfortable as he might have done if he had remained in the private circles he is better fitted to adorn.

We have already called attention to the confusion which might ensue from the unsettled condition of the law regulating the counting of the Electoral votes. This confusion can only be avoided by the utmost fairness and calmness in the treatment of the question. By a dispatch which we publish this morning, it will be seen that the representatives from West Virginia at least are in no mood to give the matter any such treatment. Col. FAULKNER, of that State, has openly declared that, if South Carolina is carried for HAYES and WHEELER, he will die before consenting to the counting of her votes. Should Mr. FAULKNER raise this question in the House during the counting, there is now no means of deciding it. There is, however, one conclusive method of deciding the question, and that is to give HAYES and WHEELER a majority in New-York which the Democrats will not care to kick against.

In another column will be found an address to manufacturers, mechanics, and workmen, signed by a large number of the very best manufacturers in this City. It puts some very pertinent questions as to the consequences of Mr. TILDEN'S election (especially as to his promise to veto the Southern claims. Suppose he should change his mind? Suppose that he could not resist his party? Suppose he should die? To which we would add: Suppose the claims were simply referred to the courts, with a provision practically abolishing the distinction between loyal and disloyal claimants? Suppose the theory was adopted by Congress that the Confederates were all made loyal in the eye of the law by ANDREW JOHNSON'S pardons? Neither of these arrangements would necessarily encounter Mr. TILDEN'S veto. And finally, suppose Mr. TILDEN to be merely a trickster and a demagogue, whose promise is not worth the paper it is written on, when it comes in conflict with his ambition?

"A claimant and a voter" (the emphasis is his) sends us a letter from Aiken, S. C. He says: "If you think you will gain Southern votes for the Republican candidates by doing so, you are making very unprofitable use of time, ink, and paper, in denouncing Hon. SAMUEL J. TILDEN, for being the leader of the only party that will help the down-trodden South. The Republican Party, in power, has liberated our slaves. This, with the war, has impoverished us, and we ask you to make reparation. Had THE TIMES building been injured by the Hell Gate explosion, would you not have called on the Government for damages? It would have been a just claim, and would be paid, and so are our claims just, and must be paid. The Republican Party will not do it. We are justifiable in voting for those who will. The South is "solid" for TILDEN, HENDRICKS, and Reform, and, thank God, we are better able to command the vote of the South than we were four years ago. It will not be our fault if SAMUEL J. TILDEN, the champion of reform, is not our next President." We can only say that we had no hope of getting Southern votes by exposing the danger of Mr. TILDEN'S election; but perhaps the above ingenuous testimony from a Southern source may let in light on the minds of some Northern voters.

A gentleman by the name of MACY is announced as an independent candidate for Congress in the Third (Brooklyn) District. We know of no reason why a Republican should vote for him. He is put forward, we believe, with some pretensions to be a "Reform" candidate, but he can hardly dispute that character with Mr. CHITTENDEN, the Republican candidate, since the lattor is of spotless character, a warm friend of civil service reform, a consistent advocate of specie resumption, and a representative of the best elements in the party. Mr. CHITTENDEN'S attorney, moreover, in a letter to the Brooklyn Union, discloses a curious fact regarding Mr. MACY'S personal relation to Mr. CHITTENDEN, it appearing that MACY is the attorney for one ELLSWORTH, who is engaged in a black-mailing suit against Mr. CHITTENDEN, which the latter has failed to get brought to trial.

THE TWO CANDIDATES.

Certain points of contrast in the character and record of the two Presidential candidates have been effectively presented by Mr. EVARTS, and other speakers. Mr. DORSHEIMER, in his superserviceable zeal, has ventured more than once to speak contemptuously of Gov. HAYES' military career. "As a soldier," says the Tilden man-of-all-work, "he achieved no distinction." If this means that Mr. HAYES emerged from the war with some smaller glory than that of Major General, it is, of course, true. There were heroes in the conflict who never rose to the dignity of epaulettes; and it is no reflection on Mr. HAYES' courage or skill that the limit of his promotion was a Brigadier Generalship. He earned the honor honestly and wore it modestly, caring more for duty than for distinction, and prizing the devotion and love of his men even higher than the praise of his commanders. A less self-sufficient man than Mr. DORSHEIMER, however, would see the damage done to the Democratic candidate by the comparison which suggests itself when HAYES as a soldier is mentioned. At the very time the latter was qualifying himself by drill and study for service in the field, Mr. TILDEN was writing letters upholding the principle on which the rebels relied for justification. When Mr. TILDEN was standing aloof from the Union movement, and giving as much indirect aid and comfort to the enemy as he dared to do without peril to his precious life, Mr. HAYES, with his regiment, was marching into West Virginia, to begin active service by helping to drive out FLOYD and his rebel army. HAYES lay wounded on the battle-field of South Mountain about simultaneously with TILDEN'S plotting in New-York in the interest of the enemy. Again, HAYES had been wounded three times, and still was under fire, when TILDEN and his copperheads were formally declaring the war a failure, and asking the North to elect McCLELLAN to end it. Pick out any eventful date in the long record of the war, and it will be found that HAYES was gallantly risking his life for the country, while TILDEN was safely picking flaws in the war policy of the Government, and disputing on constitutional grounds the authority by which war was waged. The whole story is so humiliating and discreditable to TILDEN, so honorable to HAYES, that we wonder at the fatuity which impels Mr. DORSHEIMER to speak of military science, or of Mr. HAYES in connection with it.

There are other aspects in which comparison may be instituted with equal advantage to the Republican candidate. Take, for example, the different methods by which the two men were nominated. TILDEN nominated himself, or, to state the case more precisely, his nomination was the result of his own persistent efforts. He was not simply a candidate; he was a candidate who intrigued, and spent money, and subsidized newspapers, and sent round agents, and retained delegates to force his nomination upon the convention. His plan was predicated upon his ability to control the convention. Nothing was left to its judgment, nothing to its disinterested preference. It was to be captured; that was the idea with which Mr. TILDEN'S managers began their work at St. Louis. The organization they manipulated had this end in view, and nothing else. Delegates who went thither with the supposition that deliberation would be had, and that the nomination would follow a frank consideration of qualifications urged in behalf of the various candidates, discovered that everything had been arranged in advance—not in obedience to some hearty, popular impulse favorable to TILDEN, but by TILDEN'S agents, by a free use of the money with which he had supplied them. How much he paid this man or that—what consideration had been promised in this quarter, and what in the other—we have no means of determining. The essential fact is that TILDEN spent money freely to secure the presence of delegations pledged to his support, and that his nomination was the result of influences which were as degrading to himself as to the persons through whom he operated. What, meanwhile, had been the experience of Mr. HAYES? We cannot correctly say that he had not been named as a candidate prior to the assembling of the Cincinnati Convention. He had, indeed, been talked of as combining fitness with availability. His merits had been recognized by the Reform element in the Republican Party as qualifying him for the high position which others were striving to attain. He had, too, a small body of earnest friends in his own State, whose experience had familiarized them with his sterling character and his administrative abilities. But, in the sense in which candidacy implies pretensions presented in his own behalf, he was not a candidate. He had not taken one step, nor said one word, nor given one dollar, to bring about his nomination. He was not privy to any effort in that direction on the part of his friends. The nomination was, to him, a surprise. It was unsolicited and undesired. The difference between the courses of the two candidates in this respect is, therefore, the difference between an unscrupulous pursuit of a nomination and the modest acceptance of a nomination which came unbidden.

The same difference of character and conduct has been apparent at every stage of the canvass. Mr. HAYES' letter of acceptance was prompt, unequivocal, and more pronounced in two or three important particulars than the platform on which he had been nominated. No desire to temporize, to win favor at the cost of principle, could be traced in any line of the document. It was outspoken on the financial question, outspoken on the Southern question, outspoken beyond the utterances of any other public man on the question of civil service reform. Mr. TILDEN, on the contrary, dallied and delayed until the disgust excited by his evident disingenuousness became irrepressible even among his supporters. For weeks he was engaged in the attempt to reconcile his hard-money professions with the soft-money predilections of the party behind him. The consequence is apparent in his letter, which, on the financial question, is a surrender to the inflationists and repudiators. The letter, in fact, is destitute of conviction and consistency. It is the plea of a man who has a certain part to play, and plays it in a perfunctory manner. The contrast becomes more striking when the subsequent courses of the two men are noted. Mr. TILDEN, having worked for his nomination, now wants to secure the election. He has taken the management of the Democratic canvass into his own hands, and has given himself up to it. Although still Governor of this State, and required by the duties of his office to be at Albany, he has abandoned his post of duty and has taken charge of his bureau and committee-rooms in this City. Here he remains week after week, leaving the Governorship practically vacant, and devoting to the furtherance of his own ends, the time and energy which the State pays him to employ in its service. His State officers neglect their duties in the same way. They are employed here, there, and everywhere, save at Albany, where they should be, and always doing the work of their master, the Democratic candidate. So he exemplifies his theory of civil service reform: Now in managing a party convention, the salaried officers of the State forsaking their departments to obey his orders at Saratoga; now, in sending forth, through his officials and his bureau, lying dispatches to the country press; in concocting frauds to overcome majorities of honest voters; and in getting up bogus lists of supporters among business men. In this way Mr. TILDEN, by the infamous methods he is employing in the canvass, eclipses the infamy which attached to his nomination. The shamelessness with which he intrigued and bribed to obtain the nomination is surpassed by the indecency of his active participation in the tricks and falsehoods of the campaign. And all the time Mr. HAYES is quietly discharging the duties of his office as Governor of Ohio. He accepted the nomination because it was put upon him. He wrote a letter of acceptance because a statement of his views was due to the party that had nominated him and to the country. There Mr. HAYES' electioneering ended. He remains at Columbus minding his official business. The State officials under him are not used as lackeys, running his errands hither and thither, nor as party hacks, giving effect to his commands in the direction of the canvass. The Presidential nomination sought him, and he will be carried to the White House by the force of popular confidence, made all the stronger by his non-participation in the struggle for party victory.

IS IT SAFE?

When an independent thinker and refined scholar like President WOOLSEY comes out of his retirement and puts the question earnestly to his fellow-citizens, in regard to electing a Democratic National Administration, "Is it safe?" we may be sure there are strong reasons for all prudent persons to ask the same question. The Republican Party may have committed many blunders; it may contain men, often in high position, whom no sound reformer can approve; its past policy may not meet our full ideal of statesmanship; but is it safe to put the other party into office?

This is not an ordinary question between "the ins and the outs." We have but lately passed through a tremendous and passionate struggle for the very life of the Republic and for the freedom of a whole race of men. The scars of war are in every household, and the losses from it are weighing on the means of every tax-payer. The very prostration of the industries of the country is one of the fruits of the rebellion. To call upon the North now to forget all this desperate coutest, to wipe out Andersonville graves and the Libby Prison, to act as if five hundred thousand of our youth had not perished of wounds and sickness, in hospitals and on battle-fields, only to make the ideas and principles of the North prevail, is a height of generosity or of weakness never called for or expected before from a people victorious in civil war.

If Mr. TILDEN should by evil chance be elected President, and a "solid South" govern the Union, some Republican might say at his inauguration, as MOREAU said at the crowning of NAPOLEON, "The only thing wanting to the ceremonial is the presence of the million of men who said that this might not be." Our Republican orators do not wish to shake "the bloody shirt," but they recall, and do not intend that the people shall forget, that it was through the generosity of the Republican Party that the South possesses now the weapons with which it is stabbing the Republic. No people in history ever so soon allowed equal rights to those who had purposed treason against the very existence of the State. These rights, with the wounds yet fresh from the civil war, they would use against the loyal North.

The North can forgive; they have shown themselves only too ready to forgive; they receive their old enemies again into political fellowship; but can they be expected to place the helm of the ship of state in their hands again? Is it safe to have at Washington, at the head of affairs, men who but recently would have swept this Republic from the ranks of great nations; who aimed at a slave republic of the most barbarous type, and who are utterly separated from the ideas and principles which guide Northern society? Such questions are not, as sometimes charged, put merely to arouse the old passions of the war, but they are legitimate and reasonable queries, bearing on matters of public policy. Such conservative minds as Dr. WOOLSEY'S are struck by them, as sound and statesmanlike points to put.

Shall a victorious party in a civil war risk anything it has gained by terrific sacrifices, merely for a sentiment or from indifference? One would think from the talk of the Democratic press that most nations who had suffered from civil wars, immediately pardoned their rebels, restored them to civil rights, and in much less time than eleven years, everything was peaceful and serene again. The loyal North is held up as an unequaled instance of barbarism and stupidity in dealing with insurgent populations. But the truth is, there is no record in history one-tenth part so humane, so moderate, and so successful, as that of the Republican Party in its management of a large population, lately so embittered and hostile, and of a question so delicate and difficult as that of emancipation. We can see many mistakes in this policy, because we are so near; many blunders, no doubt, have been made; it would be more than human to escape them. But history will pass a very different verdict on the policy of this great party from what even its friends do now.

As a picture in contrast, look at the dealings in other countries with rebellion or emancipation and the results of civil contests. In England, the passions of the Wars of the Roses raged for hundreds of years; the hatreds from the Revolution against CHARLES II. did not die for nearly a century. In both England and France, confiscations, banishment, and death were the customary penalties to the leaders of the unsuccessful party in civil war, and sometimes banishment to large masses of its followers. In Ireland, the fires of hate and revenge have burned for centuries against the victor, and only lately have equal rights been allowed the conquered. In Austria, the Government did not fairly pardon the rebellion of Hungary for twenty years, and only after the most severe penalties. In the matter of emancipation, England left a disordered state of production and of society for years in Jamaica and other islands, from which even yet they have scarcely recovered.

Let our Democratic objectors look now at the South and the success of Republican policy. The negro has labored productively as well as he did under slavery, and has produced some of the largest crops of cotton ever known; he is growing provident and increasing in means; he is interested in education and is advancing in civilization. Not a rebel has been banished or executed; scarce any property has been confiscated; the recent enemies are permitted to vote equally with us, and in eleven years the rebels against the Union are seen repossessing the government of their own States, and in danger of ruling the Republic. This does not look like cruel policy, or very unsuccessful management. There has certainly no such generosity been recorded in history. To carry this generosity further may well be questioned as to its "safety."

THE ILIAD OF THE NEEDLE.

"The Song of the Shirt" is sadly familiar to every reader of English; but what may be called the Iliad of the needle has never been written, (so far as we know,) even in the plainest prose. It is a genuine Iliad, for it is full of labors, anxieties and woes, though it includes far more time than HOMER'S poem. By such title we mean the endless work that women in moderate circumstances perform in preparing their daily raiment. Those who have sufficient means to employ modistes can occupy their days and nights in selecting, purchasing, giving orders, trying, on and disporting themselves in the finest fabrics and the latest styles. But they who are without the means—and these are the great majority—feel obliged to do their own sewing, which actually is never finished, and never finishable. They have their Spring sewing, their Summer sewing, their Autumn sewing, their Winter sewing, their irregular sewing, their extraordinary sewing, and their sewing between whiles. It is not all gowns, of course, although the creation of a gown, in these days, is a mighty and incalculable work; but underwear, making sheets, pillow-cases, tablecloths, curtains, darning, mending, stitching, hemming, basting, over-and-over, running, felling, and much else besides. It is all the labor of the needle, a labor that amounts to toil of the severest sort, for it is monotonous, continuous, confining, wearing, and interminable.

It was thought, when the sewing-machine was invented, that the day of woman's emancipation was at hand. Since then there have been innumerable improvements on the original, and at present they pretend to do everything of which the needle is capable, and to do it better than by hand Is the woman emancipated? Not a whit. She is more enslaved than ever. The machine has enabled her to elaborate her designs; has appealed to her ingenuity; has stimulated her ambition for nicety; has completed, in short, her subjugation. She is the real sewing-machine, patented by Nature, upon which no improvement can be made, and whom, unhappily, no mere material machine can ever relieve. There is no power in mechanical invention, we are persuaded, to alleviate woman's sewing state. Whatever human ingenuity may achieve, she will still be directing the needle, and be absorbed in its use. It seems to be her fate, and must be, unless she can command money, a certain supply of which renders her superior to her fate. Comparatively few women are placed in positions where they can sew vicariously; and hence they should not look forward—as in truth they do not—to an altered condition. In woman's science of (limited) navigation, there is no variation of the needle. The needle is the imp, which, under ordinary circumstances, she can not exorcise or destroy.

Men are inclined to think that a woman is so fond of sewing that she sews from choice; that it is her true vocation, and that she would be unhappy out of it. She may like sewing at first, and in moderation, but the wildest passion for the needle may be abated by plying it uninterruptedly for years, from the 1st of January to the 31st of December, just as boarding-house victims, infatuated with hash, have lived to see the day when their infatuation showed symptoms of mitigation. If a woman does not enjoy sewing, inquires man, why does she sew? Her answer is, because she cannot help it. Usually she is unable to afford modistes, or even to keep a seamstress in the house; the sewing is necessary, and she undertakes it, without daring to hope for its achievement. "How can it take her so long," the man asks; "Why doesn't she finish it, and get it out of the way?" Again she replies, "Why, indeed?" and adds, "Men never can understand women's work," and it is utterly useless to attempt to explain.

They can understand, however, if they use their eyes, that sewing is as endless as the labor of Sisyphus; that it is ever going on; that it is always about; that it appears to accumulate rather than to diminish. Cut, cut, cut; baste, baste, baste; stitch, stitch, stitch, from morning till night, week in and week out; in Summer and Winter, in youth, maturity, and old age.

Who says women are not patient, industrious, persevering, and totally unlike our sex? What man could or would endure such an unbroken round of tedious, tiresome occupation? It is a tread-mill life, a perpetual monotony, an eternal grind. It is not the making (women say) so much as the unmaking and remaking of clothes, particularly gowns. They get too small, or out of fashion; they show wear, or become soiled, and, as economy is obligatory, need re-creation. That, even if the money were at hand, can hardly be intrusted to a seamstress. She has not the patience nor the ingenuity, the will nor the diligence, for making-over, which, hence, necessarily devolves for complete success upon those to whom the impaired garments belong. What a task, as we have heard it described, is this making-over! It is more trouble than the original construction of half a dozen gowns. Here it is too short; there it is too long; it needs a piece at one end, and there is too much stuff at the other; on the left an insertion is required, on the right a retrenchment; here it crinkles; there it rumples; here it pulls apart; there it doesn't match.

We are entirely sure that if it is so much trouble to describe the process, the execution of the process must be arduous indeed. We can sympathize with women in all the annoyances, nervous disorders, and mental and bodily fatigue to which the imp of the needle subjects them. It were to be wished that every one of them might inherit a gold mine, so that they could have their sewing done by well-paid professionals, who would undertake it with alacrity, and finish it with satisfaction. There are vast advantages in being a man, and one of them is enjoying an immunity from the needle. Nothing that man is called upon to do begins to compare with the ceaseless sewing of women. We have heard men ask why women have not discovered, carved, and written, like NEWTON, ANGELO, and SHAKESPEARE. The reason, very plainly, is that women have been more laboriously employed; they have been busy with their eternal sewing.

RETAIL PRICES OF BEEF.

In no country in the world is the meat-consuming class so large as in these United States. In no city in the Union is the consumption of meat so large as here in New-York. There are few families so poor but eat meat twice a day. While the price of coal, clothing, cotton goods, and all textile fabrics in every-day use has greatly diminished, meat, which with us is as much the staff of life as bread, is still retailed at exorbitant prices to rich and poor. Probably few of our readers are familiar with the details of the immense business in our live stock markets, which are called upon daily to provide meat for over a million of people. But nearly all are, to their great sorrow, only too familiar with the fact that average cuts of prime beef are now retailed at from twenty to thirty cents per pound, prices varying according to rents, locality, &c. These prices are out of all proportion to the present market value of other necessaries of life—they are a severe tax and a grievous burden on both rich and poor, and cannot be justified on any known theory involving a fair profit, as we shall presently show. The large wholesale butchers in this City have their slaughtering establishments on the East River front, running all the way from Fortieth to about Forty-seventh street. They buy cattle on the foot at the Sixtieth Street Yards, and sell it dressed to the retail butchers who come in direct contact with the consumer. It is very difficult to accurately estimate the profit of the wholesaler, but we may say roughly that cattle bought on the foot at eight cents per pound would be sold to retailers, dressed, at ten cents per pound, and lower-priced cattle in the same ratio. The increase from ten to fifteen, twenty, and thirty cents per pound, prices now exacted from consumers, represents the profit of the retail butcher.

During the past month there has been at Sixtieth street a heavy run of cattle, much in excess of the actual wants of butchers, even after deducting large daily shipments of carcases to Europe. The average price per pound on the foot has ranged under nine cents. Most of the wholesalers' purchases of cattle on the foot are based on a system of shrinkage by which the net weight of the meat when dressed is as nearly as possible reached. Thus, a wholesale butcher will buy a bunch of say twenty head of cattle on the foot at $9 a hundred, or nine cents a pound, shrink them 42 pounds to the 100 and pay for 58 pounds at nine cents per pound, the 58 pounds representing the exact weight of the meat when dressed. Sometimes, in dressing, the shrinkage is less than the percentage agreed on, which diminution is so much pure gain to the wholesaler; sometimes the shrinkage is greater, when he loses to the extent of such excess. The shrinkage on live weight is from thirty-two to forty-two pounds to the hundred. A very considerable item of profit to wholesalers buying live weight is the sale of hides and tallow. It will thus be seen that cattle, after arriving at the Sixtieth Street Yards, go through the hands of two middlemen—the wholesaler and the retailer—before reaching the consumer. Our readers may form some idea of the gains of retail butchers when we state that of late rough Texan cattle have been selling in the Sixtieth Street Yards at three and one-half cents per pound, live weight, "little Cherokees" at six cents, and "hard natives" at seven cents. Prime cuts of beef now selling at from twenty to thirty cents, were sold in this City at twelve and a half cents per pound before the war.

This question of cheap meat should be agitated—should be kept constantly before the people—till prices of meat are brought down to the relative level of other commodities which enter into the daily necessary supplies of every family in this City. The retail butchers, like the coal dealers, have on hand a stock of admirable reasons why they cannot afford to lower their prices—they will not yield an inch till they are forced to do so. No amount of argument based on facts and figures, no amount of piteous appeal from the deserving and hard working poor, will cause them to abate one iota from their demands. We suggest the establishment of co-operative butcher shops, where both rich and poor could furnish themselves as nearly at cost as possible. The more expensive cuts would thus find an outlet, while the poor man could lay in his supplies at one-half of what he now has to pay.

With the assistance of an active, honest young man, brought up to the butchers' trade, a few citizens meeting together could almost immediately organize and put into operation a co-operative establishment of this kind. It would not only give them cheap beef, but, if we are not much mistaken, pay seven per cent. dividends after the first year. They would begin by buying from wholesalers and retailing not only to members of the "Co-operative Butchers' Association," but likewise at a slightly advanced rate to the public at large, which would soon flock in to take advantage of lower prices.

If American beef can be sent from here to England—a distance of three thousand miles—and retailed in the London market for nine pence, say seventeen cents per pound, surely it should not sell here for from twenty to thirty cents per pound. And be it remembered, only the very choicest Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, and Missouri cattle are used for export; the common sort, more especially rough Texans, being excluded. This promising addition to our export trade is comparatively new, constantly growing, and is likely soon to attain vast proportions. It has already attained an average of about one hundred carcases a day—roughly estimated at $75 per carcase—making a total daily export amounting in value to $7,500. Is it not a monstrous anomaly that American beef should be retailed in London at lower rates than are charged for it here? All cotton goods show a great advance and decline from the beginning of the war down to the present time. New-York Mills, which sold for twelve and a half cents in 1861, and are offered for the same price per yard to-day, were advanced to eighty cents at one time during the war. Wamsutta goods, which sold for twelve cents a yard in 1861, were advanced to seventy cents in war times, and are now offered at the old price. Printed cotton goods or calicoes are selling to-day in the lower standard grades at a reduction from the prices of 1860. Merrimacks, which sold for ten and twelve cents a yard in 1860, and twenty-eight and thirty cents during the war, are now offered retail at six and a quarter cents a yard. Garner's sell to-day at six and a quarter cents a yard, the same price as in 1861, and so on throughout the whole catalogue.

Prime cuts of beef sold before the war for twelve and a half cents per pound. To-day they are selling at from twenty to thirty cents per pound in this market.

NOTES OF THE CAMPAIGN.

Major William H. Corsa has been nominated for the Assembly by the Republicans of the Ninth District. This district belongs to the Republicans; it has been represented by Republicans, and it ought to continue to be. Major Corsa should receive the cordial support of his party. He is personally popular; and his record, known to all his constituency, entitles him to a solid majority over his Democratic opponent.

The contest two days hence is for the control of a continent. Is it not of sufficient importance, then, to justify every earnest patriot in devoting the few remaining days of the canvass to the service of the Republic? If New-York should go for Tilden by a trifling majority, and thus decide the fate of the Union, there is not a Republican in the State but would reproach himself and regret in extremest mortification that he did not put forth the effort necessary to have changed the result. That Republican, or that business man, can hardly claim to be influential, who cannot influence one vote. And yet if one-fourth of the Republicans of New-York should bring to the polls one voter in addition to those that have voted with us heretofore, the majority for Hayes and Morgan would be enormous. We want two days of hard work.

Mr. Samuel Engel has been nominated for the Assembly by the Republicans of the Eighth District. He is of German parentage, was born and bred in the Tenth Ward, and has been in the grocery business the past twenty years. Although never holding any office, he has always been an active supporter of the Republican Party, and one of the most popular young men among the Germans, who constitute the largest voting element in the district. His opponent in the race is the notorious Martin Nachtmann, an old political hack and one of the Directors of the Amsterdam Bank, which was organized during the Tweed régime, and which suspended about two months ago, after swindling so many of the poor, hard-working Germans of that neighborhood. Between such a man as Nachtmann and an honest tradesman who has been identified with and has the interest of his district at heart, there should be no hesitation on the part of the voters of the Eighth Assembly District in casting their votes for Samuel Engel.

Those who believe that Gov. Tilden's promises to veto Southern claims put that matter at rest, may be reminded of this little bit of modern history: Among the seven or eight canal contracts which Gov. Tilden specially denounced in his canal Messages as fraudulent was that of Willard Johnson, for the West Troy lock. At the same session a bill passed the Legislature granting Johnson $55,000 on his work, certificates for which sum had already been made out to him. Did the Governor veto this bill? Not at all. Johnson had sold his certificates to Delos DeWolf, banker, of Oswego. DeWolf controlled and does control the Democratic Party in Oswego County, and a good war beyond it. He had an interview with Gov. Tilden, showed how he would lose his money if the bill were vetoed, and the Willard Johnson bill was allowed to become a law without the Executive signature. This, be it remembered, was done in the very heat of the clamor about canal reform, and in the same session that the Governor had officially condemned Johnson's contract as one of the worst specimens of the frauds of canal contractors.

It was to be expected that the Republicans of the Seventh District would renominate for the Assembly their able representative, Dr. Isaac I. Hayes, of Arctic exploration fame. It seems superfluous to say anything of Dr. Hayes. He gained his first legislative experience in the last Assembly, and he left it with the conviction forced upon everybody that if he came back another year he would be one of the ablest leaders on the floor of the House. As it was, he, with two or three other gentlemen, stood head and shoulders above the mass of members, and was only lacking in familiarity with parliamentary usages to place him on an equal footing with the oldest members. When roused by the discussion of some subject in which he felt a special interest, he could astonish the house by brilliant and forcible eloquence and a breadth of thought not usually displayed in Assembly debates. Toward the close of the session he showed qualities unsuspected by most of his associates, in a capacity for unremitting labor and sleepless vigilance and a tenacity of purpose which overcame every obstacle.

The citizens of Troy were made to learn what Gov. Tilden's reform pretensions amount to. Two bills passed the last Legislature for making some very needed reforms in the municipal government of that city. One of them passed both House and Senate unanimously, and while the bill was pending the Governor was consulted about it, and several amendments and alterations he suggested were made to it. The other passed without opposition on the floor, though the men who were threatened by it made some attempt to defeat it in committee. No one except these people supposed there would be any trouble with the bills in the Executive Chamber, and the astonishment of the respectable citizens of Troy may be imagined when they heard that the Governor had played one of his favorite tricks upon them. He had not vetoed the bills, but had allowed them to fall by the expiration of the constitutional limitations. The matter was explained when it was seen that the politician who wanted the bills to fail were working like beavers to send a Tilden delegation to St. Louis.

Mr. George W. Betts has been renominated for the Assembly in the Fifth District. This is one of the four renegades who sold out their party last session in the matter of the Ogden charter. Mr. Betts, however, unlike his companions, seemed thoroughly ashamed of the part he played in that affair and of the position it placed him in. He attempted an apologetic explanation, and voted honestly for the remainder of the session. He appeared really desirous of standing well in the opinion of his fellow-members, and not destitute of good impulses. If elected this time he has the opportunity of redeeming the errors of the past. He is understood to be comfortably situated pecuniarily, and above the necessity of seeking office for its emoluments. Mr. Betts will find that it pays best in the long run to vote squarely and honestly, with his party if he can, and if he cannot, to stand up boldly and state his reasons to the best of his ability for not doing so. Possibly he went to Albany with the impression that it was the accepted rule for every member to sell his vote when he had the chance, and that no one stood the worse in the estimation of his fellow-members for doing so. The experience of last session must have convinced him of his error, and if he is wise he will profit by it.

J. C. Julius Langbein, the Republican nominee for member of Assembly for the Twenty-first District, is a young man of much promise, who, as a soldier and as a lawyer, has already made his mark. At the breaking out of the war he enlisted as a drummer-boy in one of the regiments earliest to enter the field, "the Hawkins Zouaves, Ninth New-York Volunteers." He was a great favorite with both officers and soldiers, was in every battle in which the regiment took part, and was specially petted by Gen. Burnside, the corps commander. At Roanoke Island he was in the van of the charge upon the rebel earth-works, and at the battle of Antietam he had charge of and rode Major Kimball's horse, and although told to keep in the rear the little drummer-boy was found upon the bridge with the horse shot dead under him. When the regiment returned, after the expiration of its time of service, he entered the law office of his brother. He with his brother wrote the work on the law and practice of the District Courts, was engaged in a great many cases of note, and had the confidence of the Judges of our court, lawyers, and litigants to such an extent that he has been appointed Administrator with the will annexed, Executor and Receiver of Estates, and Guardian and Trustee for infants. He has much executive ability, and with his business knowledge and familiarity with governmental affairs, he will make a most able representative.

We desire to call attention to five official acts of Gov. Tilden, and to ask if any one can reconcile them with such a sincere desire for reform as the Governor professes to entertain. 1. He vetoed the Convict Labor bill when some noisy trades-union leaders were clamoring against labor in our prisons. 2. He did not veto, but allowed to become a law, the bill to pay Willard Johnson $55,000 on his contract, after denouncing Johnson's contract as one of the ten especially fraudulent ones. 3. He shelved two bills which the Legislature had unanimously passed at the instance of the respectable citizens of Troy, these bills being designed to abolish some very glaring abuses in the management of the Poor-house and the Justices' Court there. The most astounding thing about this was that while the bills were pending the Governor had been consulted about them, and some alterations and amendments were made in accordance with his suggestions. The ring of politicians who were opposed to the bills subsequently worked up a Tilden delegation to go to St. Louis. 4. He vetoed the Brooklyn Charities bill, a measure of much-needed reform which John C. Jacobs, Chairman of the Democratic State Convention and Assistant Chairman at St. Louis, exhausted all his energy and talent in the Legislature in a vain attempt to defeat. 5. He has not appointed to a single office in his gift, nor have the Canal Board, which he controls, any man who had not first qualified himself for the office by working for Mr. Tilden's political preferment.

A printed circular is floating about the State which seems by the date upon it, to emanate from "Rooms Committee of True Reform," whatever that may be, and is signed by one Willis Graham, a gentleman we have never had the pleasure of hearing of before. The object of the signer, and of the "True Reform" party he represents, if he does represent a party, is to defeat the proposed Canal and Prison amendments to the State Constitution, which will be voted upon at the next election. Mr. Graham says there is a "pressing necessity" for their defeat, and gives several reasons why they should be defeated. He sees frightful evils following from their adoption. But in the first place he says: "In the flurry which followed the reform movement these amendments were rushed through the Legislature with no fair discussion of their merits, although they had once before been defeated

"when a full discussion of them was bad." This is about as flat-footed a falsehood as one may easily come across, even in a Presidential campaign. Let Mr. Graham go to Auburn, and ask a certain estimable gentleman there named George L. Post, if he thinks the Prison amendment went through without discussion, and whether he did not get enough of the discussion before it did get through! Mr. Graham's principal reason why the amendments ought to be defeated seems to be that "they restrict the elective franchise of the people by cutting off six officers." Evidently the country is in danger, and Mr. Willis Graham, from "Rooms Committee of True Reform," is the man to sound the note of warning to a slumbering nation. But—horrid thought! Perhaps Mr. Willis Graham is himself one of the six officers the people are to be deprived of the inestimable privilege of voting for! Who knows? As previously stated, we have never heard of the gentleman before. No wonder he sees that the amendments "are Autocratic and Subversive of the Rights of the People."

THE MANUFACTURERS' ADDRESS.

THE DANGER TO BOTH CAPITAL AND LABOR—THE ONLY SAFETY LIES IN THE ELECTION OF HAYES.

To the Manufacturers, Mechanics, and Workingmen of New-York:

An alarm has been sounded by our most thoughtful capitalists, bankers, and merchants, who believe the country to be in peril, as regards the honor, the faith, the debt, and the integrity of the nation. And these dangers, at their request, have been exhibited by Mr. Evarts. Such questions touch alike all classes of citizens; for a political revolution that threatens American capital, threatens equally the interests and the savings of American labor.

The "Solid South," which now controls the House of Representatives, aided by a party in the North which abetted its efforts at secession, is expecting, through your blindness or indifference to the real issue, to redeem at the polls the cause lost on the battle-field. It hopes to control, not simply the section which they called the Southern Confederacy, but the North, East, and West of the Republic.

Is it wise or safe to run any risk on such an issue? Can we do it when we remember what we owe to our dead heroes? Can we, with good faith, leave the loyal citizens of the South, and the emancipated slaves, to the power which made the rebellion?

Can we with honor surrender the army and navy of the United States, officers and men, to the control of the power which they conquered on land and sea?

Can we with reason or safety submit ourselves and our children to be taxed by that power for the losses and damages it suffered in its fierce attempt to destroy the Republic?

The present national debt, although it has been reduced six hundred and fifty millions since the war, still weighs heavily on our citizens. But the Southern claims already filed in the House of Representatives amount to a yet larger sum. And one general bill, directing compensation to be allowed to all citizens for the use and occupation of their property during the war by the United States Army, and apart thereof, might alone suffice to bankrupt the nation.

It is true that Mr. Tilden attempts to calm the fears of the country on this point when he says:

"I shall deem it my duty to veto every bill providing for the assumption or payment of any such debts, losses, damages, or claims."

But when the question is of doubling the national debt, in order to reimburse the South for her attempt to destroy the Republic, is it prudent and safe to let that question rest upon the promise of one man?

Mark the danger:

1. Mr. Tilden may, perhaps, change his mind, for he said of Mr. Lincoln in October, 1860:

"Our only hope must be that, as President, he will abandon the creed, the principles, and the PLEDGES on which he has been elected."

2. Perhaps the Solid South might object to Mr. Tilden's exercise of his veto. Has a Democratic President ever vetoed the policy of his party?

3. Even should Mr. Tilden refuse the South and, unfortunately, die, is it even pretended that Mr. Hendricks would also veto?

The crisis is grave and the time is short! Use diligently the few days or hours that may remain, and so wisely act that the opening century may find the Republic continuing in the charge of the men who have held, with Gen. Jackson, that our Union must be preserved; and not of those who hold, with Buchanan and Tilden, that it may be helplessly dissolved. Let the country rest in the hands of those who were faithful to it in its hour of trial, who maintained its integrity and its honor. Let it not pass to those of whom James T. Brady spoke when he said at Tammany Hall, on the 8th of January, 1866, that in its conduct during the war the Democratic Party "had proved false to the instincts, traditions, teachings, and doctrines of its faith."

POLITICAL NOTES.

The Republicans of the Tenth Congressional District of Missouri promised to elect their candidate to Congress. This would be another gain.

The Saratogian wonders why the Democrats of its district should run for Congress a man who has registered himself as a resident and voter in this City.

The pools on the election sold in Boston on Thursday evening stood thus: Hayes, $100, $50, $50, $50; Tilden, $88, $45, $44, $43. Tilden to carry New-York, Connecticut, New-Jersey, and Indiana, $50: that he will not, $50.

The Belfast (Me.) Age, of the 2d inst., says: "Several of our prominent Democrats have left this week for the Centennial, and will be in New-York Tuesday to do what they can to help Tilden—so it is said. One or two of them have bets on the State."

Mr. R. H. Dana says: "There were a great many Democrats in the Northern Army, but they were called 'War Democrats.' Did anybody ever ear of a 'War Republican?' The former needed the distinction, because a Democrat per se meant a man opposed to the war."

Hon. Richard H. Dana, Jr., addressed a Republican meeting in Cambridge, Mass., on Thursday evening. Mr. Charles W. Eliot presided, and among the gentlemen upon the platform were Prof. James Russell Lowell, Prof. Henry W. Longfellow, ex-Gov. Emory Washburn, and Hon. Theophilus Parsons.

Speaking of the speech of ex-Gov. Walker, of Virginia, in Syracuse, the Journal of that city says: "The speaker began by lamenting that in the campaign there appears to be a spirit of vilification and vindictiveness. In his assumed innocence he would have brought tears to the eyes of Mary's little lamb. But he switched short off from this line of talk, and thereafter indulged in epithets and calumny which would have made a Kuklux blush."

A letter from Mr. Theodore Lyman, of Massachusetts contains this: "To the Republican Party we owe two supreme benefits—the suppression of the rebellion and the reduction of the national debt. I distrust the Democrats. Their candidates for President and Vice President were both copperheads, and copperheadism is no accident, but a remittent moral malaria, which may break out in new forms. Nearly all the soft-money men are Democrats, and they mean mischief. We have no reason to think they will reform the civil service, and every reason to suppose they will not."

THE ELECTION POLLS IN GEORGIA.

ATLANTA, Nov. 4.—United States Marshal Smith notified the Chief of Police to-day that he had exclusive control of the polls on Tuesday, and that the Police force and all other parties had no authority there, and requested them to keep away from the polls.

AMUSEMENTS.

MUSICAL.

LAST EVENING'S PHILHARMONIC CONCERT.

The Philharmonic Society of New-York last evening inaugurated its thirty-fifth season by its first Winter concert at the Academy of Music. The programme included Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, and the first act of "Die Walküre," which is the first opera of Herr Wagner's trilogy, "Das Rheingold" being only accounted a prologue to the tripartite drama following. Whatever charges may be made hereafter against Dr Damrosch, the new director of the society, he will surely not be blamed for the choice of yesterday's music. No one is likely to complain of too frequently hearing the Fifth Symphony, and the rendering, a few weeks after its interpretation three thousand miles away, of an important part of one of the works the performance of which, three months ago, attracted thousands of representative men and women to a small town in the heart of Bavaria, was at least an indication of what must be called, for lack of a better word, enterprise of no contemptible sort. The execution of Herr Wagner's music was, indeed, the principal attraction of the concert, for novelty, apart from all other considerations, has positive charms. Moreover, the delivery of the Fifth Symphony was not conspicuously good. Most of the rehearsals were occupied with "Die Walküre," and Beethoven, for this occasion only, it is to be hoped, was somewhat neglected for the benefit of the modern composer. Hence the defects of the rendering, many of the elaborate string passages being totally devoid of force and clearness, and the performance, as a whole, being deficient in spontaneity and brilliancy. The delivery of the music from "Die Walküre" made amends for all this. It was full of gradation, delicacy, spirit, and power, and its hearing was succeeded by as general and enthusiastic applause as we remember having listened to on a similar occasion. The opera of which this act is a part is unquestionably the most appreciable of the series. Melody pervades it, and the simple succession of rich and sensuous harmonies, and the endless chain whereof the links are alternately progressions of the most stirring vigor, and themes of infinite suavity and grace of contour, make it a delight to hearken to without reference to its text. Naturally enough, "Die Walkure," which is intended for stage-representation, loses considerably by its rendering in what we may term oratorio style. As it was done at Bayreuth, every bar became suggestive and illustrative, and whatever the opinions previously held by the listener as to the weight of Herr Wagner's theories, it was impossible, once within the charmed circle, not to recognize the impressiveness of a large share of the composer's work. To the complete enjoyment of last evening's concert, either a recollection of the scenes at Bayreuth or a vivid imagination was needed; the beauty of the tone-poem, however, could not have escaped even a careless listener. Verbal description can do but scant justice to an effort of this order, and yet something of the kind must be attempted. We shall therefore rehearse the incidents which the first act of "Die Walküre" includes. They are to be recounted as follows:

Wotan, the ruler of the Gods has mingled with men and married under the name of Wälse, a human wife, who bears him twins: Siegmund, a son, and Sieglinde, a daughter. With his son Siegmund, he goes out in search of adventure, doing deeds of violence and raising up envy and hostility. During their absence the mother is slain, the daughter, Sieglinde, is carried off, and the house burned down. Wälse has to flee to the forest with his son as one under ban. Meantime Sieglinde is to be married to a man whom she does not love. Sitting sadly on her wedding day beside Hunding, her spouse, she saw a strange guest appear at the banquet-board. The new-comer drove a sword into the ashen-trunk in the centre of the hall, and declared that the sword belonged to the one who could draw it out. No one could do this, but Sieglinde recognizes in the stranger her father Wälse, and now lives contented in the certainty that she is to be the bride of him who shall draw out the sword. Siegmund in the meantime has lost all trace of his father, and, leaving the wood, applies to different men and women, but nowhere finding kindly welcome. He protects a maiden on the point of being forced into a hateful marriage and slays her brothers; but he is overpowered by the relatives, his weapons broken, and, himself defenseless, forced to take flight. Hunted like a wild creature, he takes refuge one stormy evening (at the opening of the real action in the drama) in Hunding's house. Hunding, as a relation of the maiden above mentioned, has just started on the warpath against him. Sieglinde refreshes the exhausted wanderer, toward whom she feels a strange and great yearning, and Siegmund bears from her of her loveless marriage, till his sympathy turns to a warmer passion. Hunding, returning, recognizes the object of his vengeance, and grants him shelter only till the next morning. He sends Sieglinde to her chamber and himself follows her. Siegmund, in great dismay, remains by the dying embers of the hearth. How shall he, unarmed, contend with his enemy next morning? His father has once told him that in his time of utmost need he shall find a weapon. Now he is weaponless in his enemy's house. But where is the sword? Sieglinde, who has given her husband a sleeping potion comes out into the hall, now dark, and, suspecting in the stranger the husband promised her by Wälse, tells him of the sword and of her hope. Light dawns on Siegmund's soul; he embraces her passionately as his destined bride. The rear door of the house suddenly flies open, and the full moon of a glorious Spring night streams in. The brother and sister recognize with delight in each other's features the proud look of their father Wälse. Siegmund, with a mighty effort, then draws the sword from the tree-trunk, and folds Sieglinde in a passionate embrace.

As we have stated already, only a representation of "Die Walküre" with the requisite stage costume, is adequate to showing the absolute inseparableness of Herr Wagner's words and music. In default of the stage representation—and we are glad to learn that arrangements are now in progress by which an opportunity may soon be secured of more thoroughly comprehending the beauties of the opera—what we may speak of as the symphonic characteristics of the work were admired last night. The scene opens with a tempestuous introduction, in which the rough and expressive progressions of the double basses and 'cellos were capitally played. Then came an exquisite 'cello solo, introductory of the "love-motive," and connected with soaring passages of extreme sweetness for the strings. In the measures for the brass bound up with Hunding's movements, there is abundant character and color. Later on, the "Walhalla motive" phrase consisting of a few minor chords, also assigned to the brass, reminiscent of the dwelling of Wotan, and recurring wherever allusion to the father of Siegmund and Sieglinde is sought, tinges the music with a gentle sadness, and, beyond this theme, is a delicious fanfare glittering on a ground of shimmering violin passages, which brings to view, almost as clearly as would the scene itself, the mystic sword, the gemmed hilt of which sparkles by the light of the fire. The single harp in the orchestra was not sufficient to enrich the bars accompanying the sudden disclosure of a moonlit forest, but Siegmund's "Spring song," with its vague melody and its dainty accompaniment, produced the requisite impression, its placidity contrasting forcibly with the passionate stretta, quite in the Italian style, previously, sung by Sieglinde. A fine duet, in which Sieglinde's passionate discourse develops into a crescendo which compelled, yesterday, an unanimous outburst of applause; more dialogue, in which the "love motive" and motives from "Das Rheingold" are interwoven, and a triumphal peroration, with the fanfares, and a recurrence of the all-pervading love-motive, overlaid, after Herr Wagner's wonted fashion, with violin-arpeggios conclude the act. The orchestra's execution of this portion of the programme was exceedingly creditable. The violin runs were crisp and sparkling, however rapid their pace; the 'cellos and double basses were smooth and vigorous; the wood and brass instruments kept well within bounds, and the conductor's art made the whole performance precise, nicely balanced and replete with light and shade. The vocalists were Mme. Pappenheim, whose intonation was, once or twice, rather sharp, but whose singing, in its entirety, was very accurate and highly dramatic; Mr. Bischoff, whose "Spring song" was much applauded, but who is sometimes in better voice than yesterday, and Mr. Remmertz. Dr. Damrosch was summoned before the foot-lights, with the other artists, at the close of the concert.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

The play-goer who has neglected until now the opportunity of passing a merry evening in witnessing "Forbidden Fruit," as represented at Wallack's Theatre, has but a few nights left to escape the consequences of his tardiness. "Forbidden Fruit" will indeed be reproduced later in the season, but, on Thursday next, it must make way for "The Shaughraun." This drama has proved so powerfully and durably attractive, that its substitution for the comedy, successful though the lighter piece has been, is scarcely likely to be found injudicious. The present distribution of rôles in "The Shaughraun" is stronger, even, than that which marked the production of the work. Mr. Boucicault's drama is to reintroduce its author in the titular character, and a number of popular artists besides. Mr. Gilbert's rentrée is in itself an event, and Mr. C. A. Stephenson's reappearance will no doubt be welcomed as calculated to add materially to the geniality of the performance. Miss Rose Wood will effect her début at Wallack's in "The Shaughraun."

FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.

"Life" will have but six additional representations at the Fifth Avenue Theatre. It will be acted until Friday evening next, inclusive, and also at next Saturday's matinée, and will then give way to a revival of "As You Like It." Shakespeare's dainty comedy is to be reproduced on Saturday evening. Miss Fanny Davenport, who essayed Rosalind some months ago, is to portray the same bewitching personage, and Mr. Charles Coghlan is to be Orlando. Mr. William Castle will lend the charm of his voice to the music of Amiens, and Mr. Charles Fisher will embody Old Adam. Touchstone is assigned to Mr. Davidge, and Miss Sydney Cowell will romp through the task allotted to Audrey. The cast, it will be admitted, augurs well for the performance, the impressiveness of which will be heightened, we learn, by a liberal display of fresh scenery and appropriate dresses. Shakespeare will be welcomed back to the Fifth Avenue Theatre, we are sure, by a long series of large audiences.

GENERAL MENTION.

Mr. George Fawcett Rowe is expected in town this week.

Mr. Robert Heller arrived from Europe, yesterday, aboard the Britannic.

Wood's Museum is closed for the present. Mr. John Banvard, we believe, will soon reopen it.

A "local sensation," called "Around the City on Election Day," will be part of this week's programme at the Olympic Theatre.

The varied and amusing representations of Kelly & Leon's Minstrel troupe continue to attract large audiences to the Twenty-third Street Opera-house.

"Cash, or The Irish Policeman," the "Modern School," and the new burlesque on "Sardanapalus" are to be elements of this week's programme at the Eagle Theatre.

A "star season" will be commenced at the Park Theatre on Nov. 27. Miss Lotta will then appear in a new piece by Mr. Marsden, entitled "Little Bright-Eyes."

Mr. Max Strakosch is in Chicago, where his two weeks' operatic season, with Mme. Palmieri and Signor Brignoli as the principal artists, will terminate with next Saturday's performance.

The constant addition of strange fishes and shell-fish to the already numerous tenants of the Aquarium renders frequent visits to that interesting place of resort profitable as well as pleasant.

A new piece, called "The Crabbed Age," is to be made known at the Park Theatre, on Wednesday evening. It is referred to as an original comedy, and will introduce a Miss Lottie Allen to local audiences.

A series of Saturday matinées musicales will be entered upon at Chickering Hall, this week. Miss Jacoubowitsch, a Russian pianist, Miss Kate Douglas, and Mlle. Marguerite Selvi will be heard on Saturday next.

"Sardanapalus," with its numerous attractions reinforced by the addition of a new and decidedly picturesque ballet, still retains its hold upon the affections of the public, and will be represented at Booth's Theatre until further notice.

Miss Fanny Danziger, a young lady who has studied the pianist's art abroad, will make her début in this City at Chickering Hall, next Friday evening. She is to have the co-operation of Mr. S. B. Mills, Mr. Ch. Fritsch, and Miss Beebe.

Nightly performances of "The Two Orphans" are announced at the Union Square Theatre for this week. On Saturday the drama is to have its last representation, and on the following Monday "Miss Multon" will be brought out.

M. Alfred Vivien, a Belgian violinist, is on his way hither to take part in the Essipoff concerts at Steinway Hall. The earliest of these interesting entertainments occurs on Tuesday evening week; the first series is to include sixteen concerts.

Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will be given by the Oratorio Society of New-York at Steinway Hall, on Wednesday evening next. The solos will be intrusted to Misses Corradi and Drasdil, and to Messrs. Castle and Stoddard, and the performance will be under the direction of Dr. Damrosch.

Mr. Maurice Strakosch has returned to New-York, and is striving to make sure of the fulfillment of deep-laid plans—to which we shall make further reference hereafter—for the construction of an opera-house, the tenancy of which will not too speedily reduce an impresario to destitution.

The accession of several new artists—Mme. Deburg, M. Romeo Sebastian, Mr. James Cook, Mr. James Messenger, and other lights of the arena being among the number—is announced in the tidings from Mr. Barnum's show, whereof the tents are still pitched in Gilmore's Garden.

Mr. P. S. Gilmore will give a Sunday concert at the Grand Opera-house this evening. Miss Lillian B. Norton will sing; M. F. Carri, Master Rietzel, and M. E. Lefebre will contribute instrumental solos, and a full programme of orchestral music will be interpreted by the band.

Mr. Richard Schmelz will give the first of three concerts at Steinway Hall on Saturday evening next. Among the orchestral numbers of the programme are noticeable Beethoven's Second Symphony and the ballet music from Glück's "Paris and Helena." The soloists will be Mr. Jacobsohn, who will play Mendelssohn's violin-concerto, and Miss Thursby.

Rehearsals of "The Flying Dutchman," which is to be given for the first time in America at the Philadelphia Academy of Music, on Wednesday evening next, occurred last week at the Academy in this City, and foreshadowed an excellent performance. Wagner's opera is to be sung in Italian, Mme. Pappenheim presenting Senta, and Herr Blum Vanderdecken. Mr. Carlberg is the musical conductor, and, with Mr. Joel, the manager of the enterprise.

THE WEATHER.

PROBABILITIES.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5—1 A. M.—For New-York and New-England, rising and stationary barometer, cooler northerly winds, partly cloudy or clear weather.

For the South and Middle Atlantic States, rising followed by falling barometer, stationary or higher temperature, increased cloudiness and north-east to south-east winds will prevail.

THE BOULEVARD LOTS.

All owners of lots on the Boulevard road, or Public Drive, or Broadway, from Fifty-ninth to One Hundred and Fifty-fifth street, are notified by the Assessors, at No. 19 Chatham street, to present their objections before the 10th November to the assessment for regulating, grading, &c., of said Boulevard. As the assessment amounts to two million five hundred thousand dollars, nearly, and each lot on both sides of the Boulevard is assessed about seven hundred and fifty dollars, the owners had better attend to it at once.

As the Boulevard is a grand thoroughfare, and intended for the use of the public generally, I think the City ought to pay all the expenses of it.

Another enormous assessment for sewers on both sides of the Boulevard may be soon expected, and will require examination, as great frauds existed in the construction of the outlet sewer leading into the North River. SEPTIMIUS.

A HOLIDAY GIFT BOOK.

The following letter has been received by O. S. Baldwin, and is published in Baldwin's Monthly for November:

NEW-YORK, Sept. 5, 1876.

Dear Mr. Baldwin:

The pleasant little contribution of Madge Elliot in the last number of your Monthly, prompts me to suggest the reproduction, in your Christmas Book, of that inimitable and touchingly beautiful Christmas story, entitled "Peggy's Letter to Santa Clause." Like the "Night Before Christmas," which annually delights thousands of readers, "Peggy's Letter" would not only be welcome to those who read it last Christmas, but would touch the hearts of all the new readers of Baldwin's Monthly.

* * * * *

I am very truly yours,
THURLOW WEED.

Baldwin the Clothier will publish a Holiday Gift Book, and in it will be found "Peggy's Letter to Santa Clause," as requested by Mr. Weed.—Exchange.

"SEEMS, MADAME, NAY, IT IS."

Hamlet might have spoken these words in referring to the Parisian Diamonds, for they not only seem to be real, but really are so on the surface, and will preserve their brilliancy and keep as bright as long as the purest gems of the mines of Mexico. No discovery of the age has equaled that of the Parisian chemist, who discovered the process of dissolving diamond cuttings and coating crystals with a pure diamond surface, for he has placed it within the power of every lady to wear diamonds which equal in brilliancy and durability those which none but the Queens and Princesses of the earth may wear. For sale only at Humphrey's jewelry store, No. 779 Broadway, opposite Stewart's, New-York.—New-York Sun.

Some years since I was attacked with a severe and distressing cough, the long continuance of which much alarmed me. From what I had heard of WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY I concluded to give that preparation a trial, which I did, and by its use obtained immediate and permanent relief. Again about five years ago I was taken with a severe hacking cough, accompanied with pain in the chest and side, tickling in the throat, &c., which so reduced my flesh and strength as to unfit me for attending to my ordinary business. I applied to well-known physicians, and used their prescriptions without any perceptible benefit; when, after having been confined to my room for several months, I again had recourse to WISTAR'S BALSAM, and to my great joy found, as before, immediate relief, and two bottles restored me to perfect health.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE GIFT BOOK OF THE SEASON.

THE SKELETON IN ARMOR.
By H. W. LONGFELLOW.

Superbly illustrated by Mary A. Hallock. Each stanza surrounded by an emblematic and artistic border. A companion volume to "Mabel Martin" and "The Hanging of the Crane." Cloth, full gilt, $5. Morocco, $10.

This holiday volume is a rare combination of poetic, artistic, and typographical attractions. The ballad is one of Mr. Longfellow's most felicitous poems, suggesting a possible and romantic solution of the mystery that environs the Round Tower at Newport; Miss Hallock's drawings are quite as beautiful as those she made for "Mabel Martin" and "The Hanging of the Crane," and are more powerful; the emblematic borders for the stanzas are of great beauty and variety; the engraving, by Mr. Anthony, is his best, and there is none better; the delicately-tinted paper, careful printing, and tasteful binding, complete the attractions of this superb holiday book.

DOTTINGS ROUND THE CIRCLE.
By BENJAMIN ROBBINS CURTIS.

1 vol. 8vo. Finely illustrated with Heliotypes. $2 50. Mr. Curtis' course led through Japan, China, India, Egypt, Italy, France, and England; and he carried letters that gained for him peculiar privileges and opportunities for making his tour rich in experience and observation. He was in China while the excitement caused by the Margary murder was at its height. In India he witnessed the pageantry and popular enthusiasm attending the visit of the Prince of Wales. The story of his travels is finely illustrated with heliotypes from photographs collected by Mr. Curtis representing a Japanese peasant-woman, a Chinese Mandarin and his wife, a gateway at Shiba, the Burning Ghat of Benares, a street in Pekin, the interior of a Buddhist Temple in Canton, a view in Buitenzorg in Java, a Chinese police-court, an Egyptian dancing-girl, and other interesting views.

SEASHORE AND PRAIRIE.
STORIES, SKETCHES, AND ESSAYS.
By MARY P. THACHER.
"Little Classic" style. $1.

CONTENTS: Old York; Water-Lillies in Newport; The Knox House; A Mountain Adventure; Two Brave Women; A Dying Race; The Massacre of the Innocents; Passenger Pigeons; One Hundred Years Ago; About Spinning-Wheels; Our Literary Club; The Misery of It; Up the Mississippi; Prairie Life; A Wedding on the Prairie; Some Little Folks who Live in the Dark; Quaint Letters from the South; The Last Angel of Correggio; Flyaway.

SELECTED POEMS.
By RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

Including all of Mr. Emerson's Poems that he wishes to preserve. Volume 9 and last of the "Little Classic" Emerson. $1 50.

The "Little Classic" edition of Emerson's Works, now complete in nine volumes, presents a very attractive style of remarkable Essays, Lectures, and Poems, which form one of the noblest contributions America has yet made to the world's literature.

For Congress—Eleventh Congressional District,

HON. BENJAMIN A. WILLIS.

The undersigned electors and tax-payers, residing in the Eleventh Congressional District, do heartily and cordially recommend Hon. Benjamin A. Willis, the nominee for Congress in this District, as a candidate worthy of the confidence and support of all good citizens, irrespective of party.

In his Congressional career thus far he has by his fearless devotion to just principles, his absolute independence, and his strict attention to the business interests of this City, completely justified the hearty support given him when a candidate two years ago, and has shown himself fairly entitled to the praise bestowed on him, at such time, by the New-York Tribune: "A gentleman of untarnished reputation, a lawyer of good repute, a soldier with an admirable record, and a man of ability and integrity."

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE FIFTH SENATORIAL DISTRICT:

The undersigned, residents in and electors of the Fifth Senatorial District, take pleasure in announcing the nomination of Col. ALFRED WAGSTAFF, JR., for the Senate.

Col. Wagstaff has already served two terms in the Assembly, with much credit and honor to himself and to the entire satisfaction of his constituents. He is a gentleman of energy, capacity, and character, with large experience in Legislative affairs, and the best interests of the City of New-York will be promoted by his election. From our knowledge of Col. Wagstaff, we have the fullest confidence in his honesty and integrity, and cordially recommend him to your suffrage.

Your suffrages are respectfully invited in support of

For more than thirty years a resident of the Nineteenth Ward, he needs no commendation to the old residents of the district. His known integrity and fearlessness of character, his inflexible uprightness, his watchful and intelligent devotion to the interests of the City and of his district caused him to be selected in 1859 and 1861, and marked him as the champion of honesty and economy in the Common Council. At the outbreak of the rebellion Mr. Babcock went to the front and participated in the war for the Union.

Never seeking office, Mr. Babcock has not been a candidate for other positions. In the interim of fourteen or fifteen years, he has devoted his time to active and lucrative business pursuits, and will, if elected, bring to the discharge of his official duties the same intelligence, fidelity, and integrity which have always characterized his career, with the addition of the riper experience, keener foresight, and sounder judgment of maturer years.

TO THE PUBLIC.

The attention of voters is urgently called to the important bearing which the two pending amendments to the State Constitution have upon the commercial and general welfare of this City and State.

The continuance of commercial supremacy to the City of New-York is largely dependent upon an economical and honest management of the canals of the State, which can only be permanently insured by a change in the organic law, making extravagance and corruption impracticable.

The amendment relating to the canals provides for such a change, and that relating to the prisons is of the same general tenor. The questions involved are so well understood that we do not deem it necessary to particularize, but desire to admonish all voters, irrespective of party, to guard against canceled ballots, prepared with a view to defeat the amendments, and to provide themselves with ballots FOR THE AMENDMENTS.

POLITICAL.

NEW-YORK, Nov. 2, 1876.

MR. LEVI P. MORTON, A GENTLEMAN personally known to me as a business man, and in whose character, integrity, and judgment I have perfect confidence, has been nominated as the Representative in Congress of the Eleventh District.

As an old resident of the District and City, and as a gentleman long identified with the business interests of the City of New-York, I feel that I can commend him to the support of my friends, and am assured that his election, apart from all questions of party politics, will assist in securing in the future sound and practical legislation, valuable to the country at large, and especially to the interests represented in this District.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

GOOD THINGS IN THE MARKETS.

There is an abundance of Fall fruit in the markets. Apples are very plentiful and cheap. Baldwins, Spitzenburgs, and lady apples are the best for eating, with the exception of good pippins, but Greenings are preferable to all others for general family uses, being good to eat in their natural state or to cook. The best pears now offered for sale come from California. There are plenty of pears good enough to cook, however, that come from other quarters, and which are cheaper. There are only two varieties of grapes arriving in large quantities at present, namely, Catawbas and Isabellas, and both are higher-priced than they were last week. Cranberries are plentiful and low-priced. Among the new things in fruits are fresh raisins, figs, and oranges, from Florida and Louisiana. Bananas can also be bought at rea-onable rates, and greatly add to the temptations of the fruit stand. Chestnuts, hickory-nuts and English walnuts are now in the height of their season, and are, in the language of the market reporter, in liberal supply. The markets are well stocked with game, and the lover of it can choose between wild ducks—canvass-back included—grouse, partridges, quail, wild turkeys, venison, hares and rabbits. Meats of all kinds offered for sale by the butchers are very good just now. Young pig for roasting is now very popular, and can be bought in Washington Market at from sixteen cents to twenty cents per pound. Vegetables of all kinds can be purchased cheaply, and this is a good time to lay in a store of potatoes—sweet and Irish—onions, turnips, cabbages, and other staples for the Winter season.

Contributors to this column will please bear in mind that they should write only upon one side of their letter paper.

RECEIPTS.

WELSH RAREBIT.—Half a pound crumbly, good cheese, one ounce butter, one gill milk or ale—ale is best; cut cheese up fine and put in frying-pan or Brazier with the butter and ale, and keep stirring until the cheese is completely melted; add while stirring half a teaspoonful dry mustard, a few drops of Worcestershire sauce, and a little Cayenne pepper. Have a hot plate with rather thick slice toast, soft-ned with milk, ready to pour the rarebit over it. For a golden buck, poach two eggs and place on top.

ENGLISH PLUM PUDDING.—One cup of sweet milk, one cup of molasses, two cups of stoned-raisins of currants, three cups of sifted flour, one cup of suet, chopped fine, one teaspoonful of soda, and salt; put soda in molasses, add milk, flour, suet, and salt, steam three hours; serve hot, with sauce.—M. C. C.

PLUM PUDDING II.—One pound of raisins, one pound of currants, half pound of suet, five tablespoonsful of bread-crumbs, eight tablespoonsful of flour, six eggs, one-quarter pound of citron, one wineglass of brandy, one tablespoonful of sugar, a little salt, nutmeg to taste; boil fully five hours, and serve with hot melted sauce, well flavored with wine.—M. L. M.

GRAHAM GEMS.—One teacup of white flour, one pint of warm water, half cup of yeast, one tablespoonful of Indian meal, one tablespoonful of molasses, one teaspoonful of salt; as much Graham flour as can be stirred into this mixture at night, with a spoon; make over night; bake in muffin rings in the morning.—M. C. C.

GERMAN TOAST.—Cut thick slices of baker's bread, dip them each one in egg and milk enough to soften; fry until brown in a pan greased with butter; serve with a hot wine sauce.

CHOCOLATE PUDDING.—One quart of sweet milk, three ounces of grated chocolate, scald the milk and chocolate together, and, when cool, add the yolks of five eggs and one cup of sugar. Bake about twenty-five minutes, beat the whites for the top, brown in the oven, and eat cold.—LIVINGSTONE.

SWEET POTATO PIE.—Take large sweet potatoes and steam them till they are soft; slice them thin. The pastry is made in the usual way. Lay the potatoes in a deep pie pan, sprinkle some flour over them, add two tablespoonfuls vinegar, one of butter, half a cup of water, sugar and spices to taste, and eat while warm.—COOPER.

TO COOK CARROTS BY GERMAN RULE.—Scrape and cut your carrots after they are well washed, put them into a pot in which a cooking spoon of suet or butter has been melted, then pour on a cup of water, add a pinch of salt and a lump of sugar. After they are stewed soft brown a spoon or two of flour in butter and pour it over the carrots and let them stew awhile.—IDA S.

CHEESE CAKE.—Line a cake-pan with dough; for filling take two pounds of pot cheese, one pound of powdered sugar, the rind and juice of one lemon, five eggs, a quarter pound of currants, all mixed well together, fill your lining, and bake in a good oven. To make it richer a pint of sweet cream may be added.—IDA S.

PUMPKIN MARMALADE.—Take ripe, yellow pumpkins, pare and cut them into large pieces and scrape out the seeds; weigh the pieces, and to every pound allow one pound of white sugar and a small orange or lemon. Grate the pieces of pumpkin on a coarse grater and put it into the preserving kettle with the sugar and the rind of the orange grated and the juice strained. Let all boil slowly, stirring it frequently and skimming it well until it is a smooth thick marmalade. Put it warm into small glass jars or tumblers; lay a double round of tissue paper, with a bladder or waxed paper.—LEX.

LOBSTER CROQUETTES.—Boil the lobster, cut the meat very fine, season with salt, pepper, and a very little mace and nutmeg; mix some flour and butter together, and when quite smooth add a little hot milk. Pour this mixture into a saucepan containing a little hot milk and stir constantly until it becomes as thick as custard. It requires about two teacupsful of this milk, butter, and flour for an ordinary lobster. Mix this with the lobster, making the whole about the consistency of oatmeal. Put it then on ice until thoroughly cold; then take a piece about the size of an egg, dip in beaten egg (both yolk and white) and roll into any shape you wish in dried bread or cracker crumbs; roll a second time in crumbs if you like a thick crust, dipping the croquette a second time in the egg; lay the croquettes aside and fry when ready; in frying they must be taken out as soon as they are a light brown, otherwise they break and crack.

MOCK PIGEONS.—Cut beefsteaks into pieces as large as your hand, (round of beef is better,) stuff these and skewer them; try three or four slices of salt pork, and in this fat brown your pigeons; take them out; make a gravy of the fat, cover your pigeons with it, and stew them until tender, perhaps three hours.—EXPERIENCE.

STEWED TRIPE.—After the tripe is boiled tender cut it in small pieces an inch square; make a dressing of cream or milk, small piece of butter, pepper, salt, dredge little flour with it, stir these all together; put in the tripe and stew for twenty minutes, stirring often.—EXPERIENCE.

CREASES OUT OF VELVET.—Take a moderately hot iron, wind around it a wet cloth, run the velvet quickly across, the steam which is created by the wet cloth being around the hot iron.—EXPERIENCE.

PAPERING A WHITEWASHED WALL.—First scrape off any of the lime which may be loose or inclined to fall; then sweep or rub off the dust; then with a whitewash brush give the wall a coat of glue-water—about half a pound of glue to three gallons of water—(this the paper-hangers call sizing.) After this dries put on the paper; the glue sticks to the lime, and the paper sticks to the glue.—B.

VINEGAR FROM GREEN GRAPES.—To every five gallons of juice add the white of an egg well beaten, and stir it in the liquid thoroughly, then add one loaf American bread without the crust; should stand for three weeks; draw off carefully; leave the cork or bung loose.

TO KILL MOTH IN FEATHERS.—Bake the feathers in the oven—not too hot.—FAX.

TO CURL OSTRICH TIPS.—Hold the feathers over a stove or range; be careful of burning.—CATO.

VIOLET INK.—"Constant Reader" can make violet ink by adding powdered alum to a strong decoction of logwood until the required shade is produced; also add a little gum arabic mucilage in order to make the ink flow easily on the pen.—W. M. F.

INDELIBLE INK SPOTS.—"J. J." can remove indelible ink by using a solution of twenty-grains of cyanide of potassium to one-half an ounce of water. Apply the solution to the article by means of a stiff camel's-hair brush. After the ink has been removed wash the article thoroughly in water so as to get out all the cyanide. The utmost caution must be used in handling this cyanide of potassium, as it is a deadly poison. Care must be taken not to get any of the solution on a scratch or cut.—W. M. F.

INDELIBLE INK STAINS II.—When recent, spots may sometimes be removed with common salt, slightly moistened with water.—M. L. M.

TO MAUD C. G.—Photographic proofs are not printed as deep as when required for finishing. They have to be printed deep then because they fade slightly on toning and fixing. Proofs can be toned as follows: Wash the proof for some time in running water to remove any superfluous silver, then immerse in a solution of chloride of gold; one grain; distilled water four ounces; phosphate of soda fifty grains; add about two drachms of chalk to neutralize the solution; shake well together in a bottle and let settle. When clear, pour into a soup dish and warm a little; put your proofs into this and keep constantly for a few minutes so that the dark parts of the proof will become dark purple. If the picture should become foggy, remove at once. When it has received sufficient tone, remove from the solution and wash well. Then place it in a solution of hydrosulphite of soda, one ounce; water, six ounces, and alcohol two drachms, slightly warm. Let the print remain in this solution about ten minutes; then remove and wash over night in running water. The proof should be kept from the light as much as possible until after the fixing. Candle light can be used, as it will not hurt.—W. M. F.

CHLORIDE OF LIME.—"Kit" can make chloride of lime as follows: Take a three-pint glass-stoppered retort, support it on a retort stand, connect a bent glass tube by means of a perforated cork with the neck of the retort, make the connection air tight. Take a wide-mouthed bottle, bore two holes about an inch apart through the cork, push the tube from the retort through one of these holes. By means of a spirit lamp bend a glass tube twice so as to form two right angles; have one end about three inches long and the other about eight inches long. Insert the short end in the second hole of the bottle, and seal the cork around the tubes and neck of the bottle with bottle-wax to make it air tight. Place under the long end of the tube a quart jar, allowing the tube to reach the bottom. Now fill the jar with lime that has quite recently been slaked; next remove the stopper from the retort and put in the following ingredients in their order: Common salt, two ounces; black oxide of manganese, one and one-half ounces; water, two ounces. Now add gradually sulphuric acid, three ounces, and put in the stopper; apply gradually the heat from a spirit lamp. Soon the mixture will boil and chlorine gas, which is green, will pass over through the first bottle, which catches any condensed vapor, and then passes through the other tube and through the lime. If the mixture boils too fiercely remove the lamp and replace it on subsiding. When the retort appears quite free from green fumes, the chlorine has all passed over, the chloride of lime is formed. This gas must be made in the open air, as it is very noxious and dangerous to breathe.—W. M. F.

EXTRAORDINARY TROTTING.

REMARKABLE PERFORMANCE OF THE YOUNG HORSE STARTLE.

Gen. Withers, the great Kentucky breeder of trotting horses, lately visited Mr. Bonner's stock farm, near Tarrytown, Westchester County, where he saw the famous young horse Startle trot a quarter of a mile to wagon in the extraordinary time of 32½ seconds. The General has written the following interesting account of the performance to the Spirit of the Times:

FAIRLAWN STOCK FARM, LEXINGTON, Ky., Oct. 23, 1876.

On my arrival home I read to-day, for the first time, your brief mention of the fact that Mr. Robert Bonner's stallion Startle had recently trotted a quarter to wagon in my presence in 32½s. I feel that it is a matter of public interest that the precise circumstances under which this remarkable feat was accomplished should be made known.

When Mr. David Bonner and I drove up to the stable, Startle was already harnessed to a wagon and just about to start to the track to take his regular afternoon exercise. Mr. Allen Bonner, who was in the wagon, kindly stopped and gave me an opportunity to examine the horse. He then drove to the track, and David Bonner and I went to the shop where Mr. Robert Bonner was superintending the shoeing of one of his flyers. I was so much interested in Mr. Bonner's system of shoeing his horses that we remained some time at the shop, and when we started for the track we met Startle returning to the stable, having finished his exercise. Mr. Bonner requested his son to return to the track, which is three-quarters of a mile around, and instructed him to drive twice around the track and let him go a 2:40 gait on the third quarter, and on the second round to "let him go" on the sixth quarter. The instructions were obeyed, and the sixth quarter was trotted in 32½s. A heavy gale of wind was blowing at the time; one-fourth of the last quarter is on the turn of the track, and Startle had to face the gale on the turn.

When all the facts are considered, the performance was certainly the most wonderful ever made. Startle accomplished the feat so easily, and finished so well within himself, that I was convinced that, great as was the performance, he was capable of readily accomplishing a still greater.

Startle, in his physical conformation, is a marvel of power, and the fact that a horse of his size could draw a wagon a 2:10 gait under such unfavorable circumstances, and without any special preparation, stamps him as the most wonderful horse of the age. The skillful and artistic manner in which he was handled by his amateur driver excited my admiration to a degree only excelled by the emotions excited by the wonderful performance of the horse.

WILLIAM T. WITHERS.

THE DEATH OF MR. DE LONG.

The Virginia City (Nevada) Enterprise, of October 27, has the following account of the circumstances attending the death of ex-Minister De Long: "Hon. C. E. DeLong died at his house in this city at 11 o'clock yesterday morning, of typhoid pneumonia. He had been afflicted for several weeks with typhoid fever, but was supposed to be recovering. He was indeed in a fair way to recover until Sunday last, when he was taken with a sudden relapse and grew rapidly worse. This relapse was attended with pneumonia, and his enfeebled body was not able to throw off the combined attack of the two terrible diseases. He was attended by the most skillful physicians, and his wife and friends were constant in their attention and unremitting in their endeavors for his relief, but were powerless to render him efficient aid. He was considered very dangerously ill through the night, and early yesterday morning all hopes of his recovery were given over. When informed of this he requested that his five little children be brought to his bedside that he might look once more upon them. His wife, who had remained by his side during the entire night, then brought them in, and he kissed them and bade them farewell. During the next three hours he sank gradually, but was able to recognize his friends as they entered the room. At 10 o'clock he became oblivious of what was going on about him, and at 11 breathed his last in the presence of his family, Judge Belknap, (his law-partner,) Judge Rising, John H. Kinkead, (President of the Washoe Club,) Capt. Rawlings, his attendant physicians, and others. Immediately after his decease, flags were at half-mast all over the city. As fast as the intelligence spread, a like mark of respect was shown him at the different mining works and mills, both in this vicinity and along the Carson River. The news of his death was telegraphed all over the coast, and was everywhere received with sincere regret. At Carson flags were thrown at half-mast from the capitol of the State and other places."

DEATH OF A MINSTREL.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat of the 1st inst., says: "Mr. Isaac Ray, better known by his stage name of 'Sam Johnson,' died on Wednesday last at River View, Ky., in the seventy-second year of his age. He was the father of negro minstrelsy, and introduced 'Jim Crow' Rice and other famous burnt-cork artists to the public, and was himself a performer of great talent. He was the manager of variety theatres in New-York and other cities, and traveled extensively with negro minstrel troupes in former years. At one time he was connected with Col. Dan Rice in the show business, but for many years prior to his death, had abandoned the stage and devoted himself to other pursuits. About the year 1850 he was engaged in steam-boating between this city and Keokuk, and afterward cultivated a farm in St. Louis County. In some respects he was a remarkable man. When in the city last Summer he appeared to be in the enjoyment of his usual health and vigor, and, although seventy-two years of age, would have passed for forty-five or fifty. Mr. Ray was acquainted in all parts of the United States, and knew the history of every minstrel of note that ever appeared on the American boards. He brought out Dan Bryant and his brother when they were small boys, bringing them upon the stage in a bag, and turning them out before the footlights as colored cupids. A more warm-hearted man than 'Sam Johnson' never lived. He was a true friend, a kind neighbor, and an active and energetic business man. He will long be remembered by thousands of friends in this city and elsewhere."

AN OHIO "REFORMER."

The Sandusky (Ohio) Register has the following: "A Sanduskian returning from the Centennial, was a fellow traveler in the same car, of Rush R. Sloane, a week ago last Saturday, from New York to Albany. Sloane's ticket was for Rochester. He kept his hat well down over his eyes, and did not pretend to know his old Sandusky acquaintance. Is it not a little strange that a man indicted for forgery and embezzlement, who confessed his guilt by jumping his bail and making for foreign parts should feel comparatively safe within a day's ride of the court in which he was indicted? But is that more strange than that prominent members of the Bar, men who profess to be very moral and pious, should seriously ask honest men to sign petitions in favor of dropping the prosecution? What queer ideas of morality men have."

MILITARY GOSSIP.

Business in the Third Brigade will hereafter be transacted on Monday evenings instead of Wednesdays, as heretofore.

The Twenty-seventh Regiment, Westchester, paraded for inspection and muster at White Plains last Saturday, at the celebration of the battle of White Plains.

Private Charles E. Vanderhoef, late a member of Company F, Twenty-third Regiment, Brooklyn, was buried last Sunday. His funeral was attended by the members of his late company in citizens' dress.

The sum of $114 has been subscribed by the First Brigade for the unfortunate marker whose eye was shot out last Summer, as follows: Fifth Regiment, $25; Twelfth Regiment, $25; Twenty-second Regiment, $25; and staff, $39.

A regimental court-martial for the trial of delinquencies and offenses in the Twenty-second Regiment has been appointed to convene at the armory in Fourteenth street to-morrow at 8 P. M. Capt. John H. Horsfall has been detailed to preside. Capt. R. Kelly Styles, of Company H, has found it necessary to tender his resignation, owing to ill-health.

The Dramatic Club of the Twelfth Regiment will commence its second season at the Lexington Avenue Opera-house on Dec. 14. The play selected is W. S. Gilbert's "On Guard." Included in the cast are Capt. Burns, Lieuts. Hart and Cruger, Adjt. Murphy, and Drum Major Brown. The rehearsals of the play have already commenced, and there is no doubt that a second dramatic success awaits the regimental Thespians.

The cadet corps of the Thirteenth Regiment, Brooklyn, will drill at the armory of that command every Friday evening hereafter. The glee club of this command has been reorganized under the leadership of Mr. Frederick Lovejoy, and is contemplating its appearance in a series of public concerts. The officers are: W. J. Tate, President; Vice President, Alonzo Smith; Secretary, Joseph B. Rea; Treasurer, Alonzo Smith; Librarian, Joseph B. Rea. The Board of Officers of this command will proceed with the election of a Lieutenant Colonel on Friday evening next.

The members of Company E, Twenty-second Regiment, had an enjoyable entertainment at its rooms in the armory after drill last Monday evening. A collation was the chief feature, and was followed by a musical recitation by Prof. Vaitant, a medley of comic songs by Mr. George Gair, and recitations by Messrs. Dunning, Burdett, and Banta. Addresses were delivered by Col. Porter, Capt. Horsfall, of Company E, and others, including many of the veterans, who were present. This company is recruiting rapidly, and promises ere long to be the banner company of the regiment.

Major M. J. Petry, engineer on the staff of Brig. Gen. Beebe, Eleventh Brigade, Brooklyn, has resigned. The Board of Examination of this brigade has been discharged and a new one appointed, consisting of Lieut. Col. Brownell, Forty-seventh Regiment; Lieut. Col. Partridge, Twenty-third Regiment, and Major Bosser, Thirty-second Regiment. The friends of Gen. John B. Woodward have placed a life-like portrait of that eminent officer in the head-quarters of this brigade. First Lieut. John W. Marshall and Second Lieut. C. W. Montgomery, of Company D, are contemplating the tender of their resignations. A "Creedmoor" concert is under discussion by the Board of Officers as a fitting entertainment for opening the Winter season at their armory.

The Sportsman's Rifle Club, of Taunton, Mass., have already affiliated with the National Rifle Association for the ensuing year. The Secretary of that club, in acknowledging the receipt of the bronze medal given by the association to affiliating clubs for competition by its members, says "the trophy is alone worth the affiliation fee." The following clubs have also affiliated with the same body: Fulton Rifle Association, Stockton, Penn.; Seventh Regiment Rifle Club, of this City; Middletown Rifle Association, Middletown, Conn.; Norwich Rifle Club, of Norwich, Conn.; California Rifle Association, San Francisco, Cal.; Massachusetts Rifle Association, Boston; Company I, Seventh Regiment; Washington Gray Rifle Club, Amateur Rifle Club, both of this City, and Yonkers Rifle Association.

An election will be held in Company K, Seventh Regiment, Capt. Lentilhon commanding, on Wednesday evening next, immediately after drill, to fill the vacancy caused by the surrender of his warrant by Corp. Chris. Wolfe. Candidates must be nominated before the day mentioned, and will be required to drill the company in order to exhibit their qualifications for the office. The officers and non-commissioned officers of this company will assemble at the Armory on Saturday, Nov. 11, Dec. 2 and 9, for theoretical instruction. The first lesson will be the "School of the Soldier," excluding the manual of arms and bayonet exercise. "No effort," says the Captain, "should be spared to keep up the numerical strength of the company, as we are constantly losing men by expiration of term of service, removal from the State, and other causes." The following members have been dropped from the roll: Frederick E. Scrymser, removed to Laramie City; Douglas Hilger, removed from the City; and Edward E. Gardner, removed to Europe.

An election in the Seventh Regiment for Lieutenant Colonel, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Lieut. Col. Ryder, will take place at the armory next Thursday evening. Gen. Varian will preside. Private Albert L. David, of Company H, has been appointed First Lieutenant and aid de camp on the staff of Brig. Gen. Varian, commanding the Third Brigade. An election for non-commissioned officers will take place in Company H on Monday, the 13th inst. The offices to be filled are First Sergeant, two Sergeants, and two Corporals. Col. Smedburg, of the Second Regiment, California National Guard, is visiting the City, and the Board of Officers of the Seventh have determined to give him a complimentary dinner. The Committee of Arrangements consists of Capt. Turner, Capt. Lentilhon, and Dr. Morris. Tickets will be $10 each, and only officers and members of the regiment and the Veterans of the National Guard will be eligible as guests to the entertainment. Col. Smedburg is commander of the Veterans of the Seventh Regiment of the Pacific slope.

The Fourteenth Regiment, Brooklyn, Col. James McLeer, commanding, paraded for inspection, muster, and review, at its armory last Monday evening. Lieut. Col. Samuel Richards was the Inspector, and there were present Brig. Gen. James Jourdan, and Major H. S. Jewell, Major Lester Keep, and Lieut. J. F. Stranahan, of his staff. During the ceremony of review, Lieut. Col. Michel commanded the battalion, and Col. McLeer received the review. The veterans were "on their mettle," and maintained perfect steadiness and good alignments during the passage. The salutes were good, and nothing occurred to mar the harmony of the occasion. The result of the muster was as follows:

Field and Staff	11	1	12
Band	25	0	25
A	26	15	41
B	23	11	34
C	19	14	33
D	20	21	41
E	29	17	46
F	55	25	80
G	46	12	58
H	31	10	41
I	30	10	40
K	29	3	32
Total	344	139	483

A year ago the regiment mustered 340 present, out of a total of 460, showing a gain of 4 in the number present and 23 in the number enrolled.

Major E. A. McAlpine, of the Seventy-first Regiment, has withdrawn the tender of his resignation, and will remain with the regiment for an indefinite time to come. A rumor had gained credence among military men that Major McAlpine had become dissatisfied with the Seventy-first Regiment, and had determined to go back to the Seventh Regiment, of which he was formerly a member. Major McAlpine says that there was no foundation for such a rumor, as he had never been dissatisfied with his regiment, and the reasons for his resignation were purely of a business nature. As he has been enabled to arrange his business engagements in harmony with his military duties, he has concluded to remain with the Seventy-first as its Major. Prof. F. I. Eben has been re-engaged by this command, and has organized a new band, which it is thought will exceed the former band under his leadership. He has provided a larger number of the instruments known as "over the left" horns than there were formerly, and the consequence will be more steady marching by the regiment on out of door parades. A promenade concert will be given by this command on Wednesday evening, the 29th inst., (Thanksgiving Eve,) when the public will have an opportunity to pass judgment on the new band. At a meeting of Company K, in this command last Wednesday evening, the following non-commissioned officers were elected: Corp. John T. Hyndman, Sergeant; Private Le Grand McKown, Quartermaster Sergeant; Privates Frederick R. Mathesins, Jacob B. Sherwood, and Isaac Bishop, Corporals. This company will visit Creedmoor for rifle practice on Thanksgiving Day.

Rumors of "disbandment" have filled the air for several weeks, and certain evil-disposed persons have mysteriously asserted that it had been written that the Twelfth Regiment was soon to be no more. Diligent inquiry has failed to elicit any confirmation of such statements, and it is hardly probable that a matter of such importance could be conducted without the knowledge of the Brigade Commander. Unfortunately for the Twelfth, it has not recruited as fast as its veterans have dropped out for the past year or so, hence its roll has been smaller than it ought to have been had the members of the regiment worked harder. The Board of Officers recently awoke to the fact that the proportions of their command were growing rapidly smaller, and that it was necessary to offer some inducement to recruits, as other regiments are and have been doing for some time past. And here it may be remarked that the system of "bribing" (and it is nothing else,) the recruit to join the National Guard has degenerated into a positive abuse, and a regiment cannot keep its ranks full without resorting to some sort of bribery to induce recruits to choose a membership in their command in preference to some other. This policy cannot conduce to a love for the regiment by its members such as was borne by members in the old times, when every man had to pay for his own uniform, and took a pride in joining some fine regiment. The inducement now offered by the Twelfth Regiment is a liberal one. It offers a full-dress uniform to every man enlisting in its ranks, without expense to himself. He is under no obligation to pay for any part of it, and is under no responsibility except to take care of it, and if he, through any cause, should leave the regiment before his term of service has expired, his uniform reverts to the regiment. This inducement will undoubtedly fill up the regiment fast enough. It does not owe a dollar to anybody, and has no bad debts hanging over the heads of its members, eating up the dues like lawyers in a chancery suit. The dues are collected monthly, and are at once turned over to Lieut. Col. Cruger, the Regimental Treasurer, who liquidates all indebtedness at once. This is one reason why the Twelfth never has any trouble with its band. Otto's Band remained with this Regiment for seven years, and Dodworth's Band has already been with the Twelfth for four years, and has no immediate prospect of dissolving partnership. During the past two weeks twenty-two recruits have been added to the roll, twelve of whom were enlisted by Company G. The neat Chasseur dress, so long worn as a fatigue uniform by this command, has been abandoned, and hereafter the full-dress pantaloons will be worn on all occasions. Capt. J. T. Van Rensselaer, of Company E, has resigned, and has taken his departure for California. Lieut. Eugene G. Cruger has been detailed to command Company E. A regimental court-martial for the trial of delinquencies in this command has been ordered to convene at the regimental armory on Monday, the 20th inst., at 8 P. M. Major W. G. Wilson will preside.

SHORT RANGE MARKSMANSHIP.

SEVENTH CONTEST FOR THE SPIRIT OF THE TIMES MEDAL—FINE WEATHER AND FAIR SHOOTING.

The seventh competition for the Spirit of the Times badge took place at Creedmoor yesterday. The weather was fine and no wind prevailed to disturb the marksmen. Only ten sportsmen entered in the match, the principal reason why more did not do so being that it was splendid weather for long range shooting, and most of the marksmen preferred to enjoy that sport, as such opportunities are quite unusual at this season of the year. Then the distance covered is one at which very little practicing is done, and although it would appear that the difference of 100 yards between ranges would not make any material difference, it requires a considerable change of elevation from that observed at 200 yards. The conditions and scores were as follows; the highest possible score being fifty points:

Open to all comers; distance, 300 yards; position, standing; any rifle; ten shots, with two sighting shots; entrance fee, fifty cents.

Capt. Price, the winner of the trophy, is becoming an expert with a military rifle, having won the principal prizes at the meetings during the past month, with an ordinary military gun and open sights.

At this season of the year, when all other lines leading to Summer resorts are reducing their fares, the Long Island Railroad Company has taken measures to prevent such few sportsmen as may contemplate visiting Creedmoor from doing so by increasing the price of excursion tickets from fifty to sixty-five cents. The proposition to remove the range from Creedmoor to a more accessible locality is evidently a wise one.

COLLEGIATE ATHLETIC SPORTS.

THE FALL MEETING OF THE COLUMBIA COLLEGE ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION—STUDENTS DEVELOPING THEIR MUSCLE.

The sports in connection with the Fall meeting of the Athletic Association of Columbia College, took place yesterday on the grounds of the New-York Athletic Club, at Mott Haven. The fine weather attracted a large number of ladies and gentlemen, besides a very full muster of the students. The sports were well contested, and commenced at 11:30 A. M. with a one-mile walk, for which W. Bliven, C. Eldridge, and C. F. Hurlbert entered. Bliven walked off in graceful style, but at the half-mile post, Eldridge, who made a walking race, drew up and came in an easy winner—time, 8m. 2½s.; Bliven, 8m. 40s. A very fine contest at vaulting with the pole took place between F. D. Weeks and H. L. Brogert. Weeks made eight feet three inches, which was good vaulting considering that he had to rise from a hard gravel track instead of springing turf. Bogert made eight feet and one inch. The following gentlemen entered for a 220-yards dash which followed: F. S. Ackerman, H. Parsons, G. M. Hammond, W. Waller, J. A. Booth, and W. A. Barket. This was a well-contested race. Parsons took the lead, and kept it until near the finish, when Waller passed him. and won by a fast race by a single yard. Time—Waller, 25¾s.; Parsons, 26s.; Hammond came in third. Only two entries were made for the 440-yards race, namely, W. E. Hildreth and R. R. Colgate. Hildreth made a waiting race of this contest, and won easily by a dozen yards. Time—77s.; Colgate's time, 80s. For the one-mile race. R. R. Colgate, Barnes, and H. L. Brogert entered. Brogert in the first lap kept the lead past the grand stand, with Barnes and Colgate at his heels. In the second lap Barnes shot to the front, and maintained it till near the goal, when Colgate made a spurt, and won a splendid race by a dozen yards; time—5m. 12¼s. Barnes was second and Brogert did not finish. The following entered for the 100-yards dash: F. S. Ackerman, W. Waller, C. Huffman, H. Parsons, School of Mines; E. Bliven, G. M. Hammond, School of Mines, and A. Thatcher, School of Mines. In the first heat, Waller beat Parsons and Thatcher after a very close contest; time—10⅝s. In the second heat Ackerman beat Hoffman (second) and Bliven by about half a foot, in 11s. In the deciding heat between Waller, Ackerman, and Hammond, Waller went away with the race and won easily; time—10½s. No one competed with H. L. Brogert for the long running jump prize, and C. Eldridge had a "walk-over" in the three-miles walk, which he covered in 25m. 43s. There were only two competitors for throwing the (16 pounds) hammer. C. Boyd, School of Mines, threw it 68 feet 3 inches, and G. M. Hammond, School of Mines, 59 feet 4 inches. This was followed by a hurdle race, 120 yards over ten hurdles, ten feet apart, with fifteen feet at the start and finish. W. H. De Forest won the race easily in 22s., beating H. L. Brogert. In the half-mile race only two entered, and G. M. Hammond beat H. L. Brogert; time—2m, 25s. One of the most exciting contests of the day was the 440-yards race. J. A. Booth and W. A. Bartlett were the contestants, and when fairly started they raced up neck and neck, making a dead heat in 61 1-5s. The race was finished at a subsequent period of the day, and won by Bartlett in 59s., by three yards. For the strangers' race the following entered: Charles Harriet, of Yonkers; Cornelius Vought, of Yonkers; James A. Renwick, F. Banham, of Harlem Athletic Club, and A. Varian, of the Knickerbocker Yacht Club. Vought won easily beating Banham by three yards; time—2m. 12s. This concluded the sports, and Prof. Van Amringe delivered a neat congratulatory address to the students as a preface to the ceremony of presenting the prizes to the successful competitors.

THE STATE COURTS FOR NOVEMBER.

The State Courts, with the exception of one Trial Term of the Court of Common Pleas, will begin their November sessions to-morrow. The calendars, as a general rule, are over crowded, but contain fewer cases of great public interest than on former occasions. In the Supreme Court Judge Lawrence will preside at Chambers, Judge Van Vorst at Special Term, Judge Barrett in Part II., Circuit, and Judge Donohue in Part III., Circuit. Judge Westbrook will hold the adjourned January term of Supreme Court, Circuit, Part II., in the General Term room, beginning Nov. 13, for the purpose of trying the Tweed and Sweeny suits, in the latter of which Mr. Tilden, who by that time will have gotten over his ambition to be President, may give some testimony in regard to the checks he indorsed to Tweed and Sweeny.

Judge Brady will hold the Court of Oyer and Terminer, Judge Speir will hold the Special Term of the Superior Court, Chief Justice Curtis and Judge Sedgwick will preside over Trial Terms. The General Term of the Superior Court will meet to-morrow, and immediately adjourn. After the election Gov. Tilden will probably appoint Mr. Freedman, should he be successful at the polls, to hold the office of Judge of the Superior Court until the beginning of his official term. In this event, the General Term of the Court will reassemble on Nov. 13, with Judges Sanford and Freedman presiding.

In the Court of Common Pleas the Equity Term will be presided over by Judge Van Brunt, and in the General Term, Chief Justice Daly, with Judges Joseph F. Daly and Van Hoesen, will sit. Only one part of the Trial Term will be held during the month, over which Judge Robinson will preside, beginning Nov. 13. One of the parts of the Marine Court will be held in the room usually occupied by Part II. of the Court of Common Pleas. Three parts of the Marine Court will be in session, presided over by Judges Alker, Sinnott, and Shea respectively. Judge McAdam will hold Marine Court, Chambers.

SATURDAY, Nov. 4—P. M.

The bank statement shows a large falling off in legal tenders, but the effect of this on the net reserve of the banks is partially offset by an increase in the specie item. The banks now hold $9,942,185 in excess of legal requirements against $10,983,460 last week.

The following is the statement of the New-York City Banks this week, compared with the last:

	Oct. 28.	Nov. 4.	Differences.
Loans	$259,840,800	$260,684,200	Inc. $843,400
Specie	15,947,200	17,436,600	Inc. 1,489,400
Legal tenders	48,862,000	46,353,300	Dec. 2,508,200
Circulation	15,091,100	15,090,600	Dec. 500

The transactions on the Stock Exchange amounted to only 55,380 shares, the paucity of business being explained by the great interest manifested in the speech delivered by Secretary Morrill from the steps of the Sub-Treasury, and the absence of operators who attended the extra meeting at Jerome Park. Speculation was weak in tone, and prices declined ¼ to 1¼ ₱ cent., except in a few instances. At the close there was some recovery from the lowest point. The principal activity was in Lake Shore, Western Union, and Ohio and Mississippi, of which 13,500, 12,870, and 11,825 shares changed hands, respectively. Lake Shore fell off from 57 to 56½, and afterward rose to 57⅛. Western Union declined from 72¾ to 72⅛, and advanced to 73⅛ at the close. Ohio and Mississippi declined from 10⅞ to 9⅝, closing at a recovery of only ⅛ per cent. New-York Central was firm and advanced to 102¾. The North-western shares were ¼ per cent. higher for the common and ¾ per cent. for the preferred. The St. Paul shares declined a fraction, and the coal stocks were also slightly lower. Michigan Central fell off from 46⅜ to 45⅞, and subsequently recovered. Express shares were quiet and without feature.

The money market was easy throughout the day at 3@3½ per cent. on call. The National Bank notes received at Washington for redemption to-day amounted to $500,000, making total for the week of $2,950,000. The rates of domestic exchange at the interior cities on New-York were: Savannah, buying, ⅜ off; selling, par to ¼ off; Charleston, easy. 5-16 to par; Cincinnati, dull, 100 discount; St. Louis, 150 discount; New-Orleans, commercial, ⅜; bank ¼; Chicago, 25 to 50, discount.

The foreign advices reported a quiet market for securities at London. Consols were a fraction lower, and closed at 96 1-16 against 96¼ yesterday. United States Bonds were steady, except for 10-40s, which declined ¼ per cent. Old 1865s closed at 103½, 1867s at 109@109⅛, 10-40s at 108¼, and New 5s at 106¾. Erie sold at 10½. The sum of £78,000 sterling was withdrawn from the Bank of England on balance to-day. Specie to the amount of $860,000 was withdrawn from the bank yesterday for shipment to this country.

The Sterling Exchange market was dull at $4 81½@$4 82 for bankers' 60-day bills, and $4 83½@$4 84 for demand.

Speculation in the Gold Room was devoid of animation. The sales were alternately at 109¾ and 109⅞, the market opening at the former and closing at the latter quotation. On gold loans the rates were flat to 2 ₱ cent. interest for carrying.

There was more activity in Government bonds than yesterday, especially in 1865s coupon, which sold at 110¼ for old, and at 112⅞@113 for new. Railroad mortgages were firm, and prices advanced ⅛@¼ per cent. in some instances. State bonds were dull and without important change.

ENGLAND'S ARMORED MEN-OF-WAR.

From the London News.

Strange as it may seem in these days of heavy guns and mighty iron-clads, we have at the present moment only four armored men-of-war in course of building. Other ships, to the number of thirty-nine, are on the stocks, but these, one and all, are unarmored vessels. This paucity of iron-clads under construction is, however, fortunately more apparent than real. While we have but four such vessels actually building, the Ajax and Agamemnon turret-ships, and the Nelson and Northampton, masted iron-clads, there are six magnificent craft already launched and fitting for sea, which will add very materially to our strength as a naval power. These are the turret-ships Thunderer, Dreadnought, and Inflexible, the least of which would be more than a match for half a dozen iron-clads launched three years ago, and the masted ships, the Alexandra, Shannon, and Téméraire. These six vessels together constitute a fleet which at the present moment would probably be unconquerable by the combined navies of Europe. Of the thirty-nine unarmored vessels building, two of the most interesting are the Bacchante, which will be launched at Portsmouth to-day, and the Euryalus, both of which are built on the principle of the Boadicea, which was launched last year. They are intended for cruising, and will constitute the most powerful vessels of the kind in our service. Eight of the other vessels are to be of steel—the Mercury and Iris, both building at Pembroke, being large and swift dispatch vessels, lightly armed, whose speed will probably be twenty miles an hour. The other steel ships are corvettes, more powerfully armed with seven-inch guns, and these are to be employed on distant stations, and for the protection of our colonies. The number is made up of sloops and small corvettes, one torpedo-boat, four gun-vessels, and twenty gun-boats. The majority of these are being rapidly pushed forward, so that the Admiralty has just now as much work on its hands as it can conveniently manage. Only twelve of the vessels now building for the navy are being proceeded with in Government yards.

A SLAUGHTER OF 320,000 BULGARIANS.

The Cologne Gazette observes that Bulgaria has on several occasions figured in history as the scene of "atrocities" no less horrible than those lately committed by the Bashi-Bazouks. The Greek Emperor Basilius II. was nicknamed "Bulgaroktonos" because he ordered 15,000 Bulgarian prisoners to have their eyes put out, a few only being left with one eye in order that they might guide their fellow-prisoners back to their homes. Even more atrocious was the massacre of the Gothic settlers in Bulgaria. The much praised Emperor Claudius II. gives the following account of this massacre in a letter cited by the historian Trebellius Pollio: "Claudius Broccho: Delevimus trecenta viginti millia Gothorum, duo millia navium submersimus. Tecta sunt flumina scutis; spathis et lanceolis omnia littora operiuntur; campi ossibus latent tecti; nullum iter purum est; ingens carrago deserta est; tantum mulierum cepimus ut binas et ternas mulieres victor sibi miles possit adjungere." (Claudius to Brocchus: We have destroyed 320,000 Goths and sunk 2,000 ships. The rivers are covered with shields, their banks with spears and pikes, and the fields with bones; no road is free from blood; the huge barricade of wagons is deserted; and we have captured so many women that each of our conquering soldiers can take two or three for his share.")

CRUELTY TO A SICK CANADIAN.

The Perth (Ontario) Courier says: "For some time an old man named Shevlin had been living with a farmer named Blakely, in Lavant township. The old man was in a sickly state, and one day, when apparently drawing near his end, Blakely took him in a wagon to Lanark village to have his will drawn. When this was done they returned home, Blakely being drunk and reckless. In the bottom of the wagon lay the old man Shevlin, helpless with old age and sickness, and in this state he was driven eighteen miles, over a more or less rough road, the horses running most of the way. People whom they passed by could see the hands of the old man shoot up over the wagon-box, when the wagon flew over a rut or stone on the road, and claim that his sufferings must have amounted to agony. When the party reached Blakely's house Shevlin was dead. Blakely had been remonstrated with by parties along the road for his brutality toward the old man, but he is said to have made the unfeeling reply, 'Oh, one will do a good deal for two or three hundred dollars!' referring, evidently, to the assets of the dying man, and his interest in them. The old man was buried in due course, but a few weeks afterward Mr. Archibald Browning, a neighbor, took steps to have an inquest held on the remains, and summoned Dr. Howden, Coroner of Perth, to preside. The body was exhumed, but had decomposed so much that it was impossible to trace any marks of bodily injury if such there were."

THE PENNSYLVANIA COAL TRADE.

The Pottsville (Penn.) Miners' Journal furnishes these statistics: "The quantity of coal sent from the Schuylkill region for the week ending Oct. 28 was, by rail, 125,394 tons; by canal, 27,600 tons; total, 152,904 tons, against 164,424 tons for the same week of last year; decrease, 11,520 tons. The quantity sent for the year was 3,613,088 tons, against 3,778,449 tons for the corresponding period of last year; decrease, 165,731 tons. The quantity sent from all the regions for the week was: Anthracite, 579,990 tons; bituminous, 83,412 tons; total, 663,402 tons, against 635,658 tons anthracite and 82,660 tons bituminous—total, 718,318 tons—for the same week of last year. Decrease of anthracite, 55,668 tons; increase of bituminous, 952 tons. The quantity sent from all the regions for the year was: Anthracite, 15,000,289 tons; bituminous, 2,989,498 tons; total, 17,989,787 tons, against 16,659,963 tons anthracite and 3,293,149 tons bituminous; total, 20,253,112 tons for the corresponding period of last year. Decrease of anthracite, 1,659,674 tons; decrease of bituminous, 303,651 tons; total decrease, 2,263,325 tons."

THE WALL STREET RALLY.

A GREAT SPEECH BY SECRETARY MORRILL.

THE WEALTH AND INTELLIGENCE OF THE CITY REPRESENTED—OVER TEN THOUSAND PERSONS IN ATTENDANCE—THE ISSUES OF THE CAMPAIGN DISCUSSED BY THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY, BY JUDGE EMOTT, AND MR. ROOSEVELT.

The Republican meeting of bankers and business men, in response to the call of the Republican Reform Club, was held yesterday afternoon at the Sub-Treasury steps, in Wall street, and was addressed by Judge Emott, Hon. Theodore Roosevelt and Hon. Lot M. Morrill, Secretary of the Treasury. It was beyond comparison the grandest political meeting ever held in New-York. It cannot fail of having an immense weight in influencing the so-called doubtful voters. It showed clearly upon which side the wealthy men of New-York, the good men and the representative men of all classes stand in the present canvass. There was an air of patriotism, too, about the meeting which took hold of everybody. It had none of the suspicious symptoms of an ordinary political gathering. It did not strike people as having been gotten up in the interests of any set of office-seekers. It rather appeared to be just what it was, a meeting of honest, substantial business men—solid men, Mr. Morrill called them—gathered to give an expression to their earnest belief that the prosperity of the country, the enforcement of the Constitution and the preservation of the public credit demand the maintenance of Republican control of the Government. There were at least ten thousand men in attendance, and they formed a solid mass that completely filled Wall street from below the Treasury building half way up to Broadway, while the rear of the meeting stretched down Broad street several rods below the entrance to the Stock Exchange building. Such of the windows in neighboring buildings as were within ear-shot were crowded with gentlemen who leaned forward and out of the windows, anxious to catch every word that fell from the lips of the speaker. The steps of the Treasury building were reserved for such persons as had received special invitations to be present. Among this number were George Opdyke, H. M. Taber, N. P. Hosack, John T. Denny, William A Camp, F. D. Tappan, John A. Stewart, T. L. Thornell, Hon. John D. Lawson, Hon. S. B. Chittenden Hon. Charles A. Peabody, Joseph H. Choate, R. H. McCurdy, Joseph Seligman, Hon. John Jay, J. H. Van Allen, Gen. Francis C. Barlow, Elliot F. Shepherd, John E. Williams, George H. Forster, John A. Weeks, James Stokes, Jr., B. G. Arnold, James M. Halsted, W. H. H. Moore, William H. Wiener, Salem H. Wales, Hon. William M. Evarts, Isaac H. Bailey, Congressman Hale, of Maine, and the next Governor of New-York, Hon. Edwin D. Morgan. There were many other gentlemen of equal prominence, but they were lost in the vast mass that comprised the meeting. The dry goods men of the City were present as a body, 1,000 strong, having marched to the meeting from Worth street and Broadway under the escort of Grafulla's Band, and under the command of Gen. J. H. Liebennen. The idea of attending the meeting in this way was not conceived until 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and it was not until 10:30 o'clock that the following call was circulated, still damp from the printer's hands.

"The dry goods merchants and clerks in favor of the election of Hayes and Wheeler are cordially and earnestly invited to meet in Worth street, between Church and Broadway, at 12:30 o'clock to-day, to proceed in a body to hear the address of Hon. Lot M. Morrill, Secretary of the Treasury, at the Sub-Treasury steps, in Wall street. All are expected to be on hand. Grafulla's Band will act as escort."

The response to this call was most generous. There were 1,000 men in line when the procession moved from Worth street. The character of the procession was similar to the procession of dry goods men that was so conspicuous in the torch-light parade of the previous evening. All of the leading dry goods houses of the City were represented, and generally by the heads of the firms.

The speaking was from a platform raised level with the topmost steps of the Treasury building. The platform was handsomely decorated with American flags and bunting. Directly over the platform and stretching across the entire Treasury building was a piece of canvas bearing the name of the organization at the hall of which the meeting was held, "The Republican Reform Club of New-York." The entrance to the Drexel building was also decorated with American flags. Judge James Emott, President of the Republican Reform Club, called the meeting to order and announced as the Chairman Mr. Theodore Roosevelt. The remaining officers of the meeting were:

An attempt was made by the Democratic members of the Stock Exchange to break up the meeting. A number of these men assembled at the entrance to the Exchange building, and by various means inaugurated a series of cheers and yells so loud and frequent as to render the remarks of Judge Emott quite inaudible to the most of the audience. They were continuing their pranks when Secretary Morrill opened his address, but were soon quieted by a strong detachment of Police, who were sent to the Exchange building with orders to arrest everybody who should persist in the attempt to interfere with the meeting. The meeting was unmolested from that time.

In calling the meeting to order Judge Emott said that in behalf of the Republican Reform Club, of which he was President, he desired to state the principles of that organization, and to explain upon what grounds it took its stand in the present campaign in favor of the election of Hayes and Wheeler. Those grounds were a strong desire to perpetuate the equal rights of all men under the Constitution, to preserve the national credit and good name, and to secure a thorough reform in the administration of the Government. Believing, in view of the general character of the Republican Party and of the principles under which it exists and of the purposes it now holds, that it was the party in which to hope for the attainment of this desire, the Republican Reform Club wished to place itself on record in the most impressive manner possible in favor of the election of the Republican candidates. Mr. Theodore Roosevelt's address was brief, but to the same purpose, he speaking for the business men of New-York, just as Judge Emott had spoken for the Republican Reform Club.

It was 1:15 o'clock when Secretary Morrill began his address. He was greeted with loud and prolonged cheering. When it had subsided, he said, "Mr. Chairman and fellow-citizens, this looks like business." "That's so, we mean business," was the reply from the audience. Mr. Morrill at once proceeded to open the way for a discussion of the two great questions of the campaign, the financial question and the question of the "solid South." Upon these two questions he spoke until nearly 2:30 o'clock, holding the thorough attention of his audience to the last. He indulged in no personalities, confining himself simply to a discussion of principles and of historical facts. He showed the falsehood of the Democratic chaff about the necessity of a reform to restore the national credit. He showed that the national credit was restored, and that the question now was not one of restoring but of maintaining that which had been restored. In the course of his remarks upon the financial question, Mr. Morrill took occasion to answer the statement of August Belmont relative to the loan of 1860. He showed that Mr. Belmont had either ignorantly or purposely suppressed the most important facts in the history of the loan, and thoroughly substantiated the recent statements of Secretary Taft at the Cooper Union, that in 1860 the borrowing power of the Government was at the rate of twelve per cent.

At the conclusion of Mr. Morrill's address the meeting adjourned, after giving three rousing cheers for Hayes and Wheeler. Following is a full report of the proceedings:

THE PROCEEDINGS.

Judge Emott called the meeting to order at 1 o'clock, and spoke as follows:

The association which has called this meeting consists of citizens who are distinctly and proclaim themselves Reformers. It is because they are in earnest in seeking radical and permanent reforms that they are Republicans. We mean by reform something more than turning out one set of office holders and putting in another. We aim at a reform of the methods of politics and of the manner of providing for and of conducting the civil service of the country. We shall contend in the future as in the present, that the public interests demand that public officers should understand that they are not to earn their offices merely by political subserviency, nor to occupy their time in partisan labors. You will not be surprised to learn that reformers of this type have no expectation of attaining their objects by the help of the Democratic Party. I hold that party responsible for the civil war [applause,] which has left behind it the legacy of an enormous debt which involves the necessity of public officers of various description in such numbers as the country never knew before. That war brought with it also, among its indirect consequences, opportunities for speculation and habits of extravagance, which, far more than any acts of administration or failures to act by a party or a Government, are the causes of our present financial condition. The South holds that party responsible and expects the discharge of that obligation from the party if it comes into power. The assertion which I have made that the Democratic Party ought to be held responsible for the rebellion may be disputed. I think the great majority of the thinking men of this nation have always believed it, and believe it still. But there is another charge which men who have such reforms as I have indicated at heart made against the Democratic Party, which cannot be denied. That party is the author, the originator of the principle and practice of giving and holding every public office as a partisan reward, which is the root of all the very evils which this same party is now charging upon its opponents, and for which it is clamoring that the offices of the country should be given to its adherents. The country needs something more than a change of men; it needs a change of the principles of administration which were introduced by the Democratic Party, and which some of us may think have been followed—but have only been followed—by the Republicans. We do not say that good men, honest men, men as good and as honest as any of us, are not in the Democratic Party. We are glad that the Democratic Party does contain such men—in large numbers. It would be in every way most unfortunate for the country if it were not so. But we do say, and we appeal to every careful, conscientious student of our history to confirm the truth of our assertion, that the Republican Party does contain, and always has contained, the great mass of the intelligent, independent, thinking, progressive men of the country. It is the party of free thought and advance, and we cannot look to a party which is its opposite in these respects and in its characteristic components for real reform. We Republicans have no "solid South" behind us, [applause,] but we have what is better—the solid sense of the whole country and of its thinking men. It is a characteristic of the present canvass that there is so little difference in the formal utterances, the platform of principles, of the two parties. We do not meet to discuss whether we shall get back to a solid basis, which is recognized by all nations, for our currency and our finance, or shall go on floundering in a sea of paper promises, whose uncertainty will make everything uncertain and unsettled in the future as we have seen it in the past. Nor have we even the issue distinctly made whether the system of appointments and of the tenure of office, which the present Democratic Party introduced forty years ago, ought not to be changed, and the service of the public conducted upon the principle upon which all private business is managed.

SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Both party platforms may be said to profess to adopt and advocate the resumption of specie payments and a reform of the civil service system. The question is, whom will you trust to carry out these principles, and to administer the Government. Will you trust a party to bring back specie payments which balances its hard-money President with a paper-money Vice President; which is one thing at the East and another at the West? Will you trust a party whose only step and whose only proposal looking to a resumption of specie payments is to repeal the only act distinctly promising resumption, by fixing a day for it? I admit that the Republicans did not go far enough; that there should have been measures to provide for resumption, as well as a day set to resume. But did the Democratic House of Representatives prepare to supply the defect by passing any such measure? Not at all. They passed an act repealing the law preparing to resume. As Mr. Evarts aptly suggested, they and their candidate were like a man who should show his eagerness to get married by insisting upon canceling all appointments fixing the time. Will you trust a party to reform the civil service which proposes to begin by turning out any office-holder, no matter how honest, capable, and experienced, from the excellent Postmaster of New-York, up and down in all quarters, and replacing them with new men who have earned this reward by serving the Democratic Party, or what is worse, serving its ally, the solid South?

WHY IS THE SOUTH FOR TILDEN?

Ah! that opens another question; are you ready to intrust your Government to a party sustained and largely composed of what is boastfully called the solid South? Why is the South solid for Mr. Tilden? Because they feel and act as a conquered people. Not as individual citizens who have attempted to rebel and been defeated, but a whole people conquered but not convinced. They have, indeed, no mind to renew a struggle with arms, but encouraged by circumstances which have increased their political consequence, holding the same end for which they fought, and believing their fight a righteous though it was a losing one, they are fighting at the polls for political supremacy under a leader who has always believed and still believes practically in their creed of secession, and in a Constitution of the United States which was revolution organized. The distinguished gentleman who is to speak to you will tell you what, in his judgment and that of those best informed, will be the consequences to the public finances and the public credit of a political victory of this "solid South." This meeting is composed of the merchants, bankers, and business men of New-York. You have suffered from the financial prostration and distress of the past three years. You have suffered, perhaps, more than all others, except the mass of the laboring classes, whose daily employment depends upon the business enterprises and activities which, directly and indirectly, are moved and kept in motion from the great business centres. The Democratic Party—it is no secret—hope to carry the election, if they cannot win by fraud in a city like this, by appeals to the personal pecuniary condition and interests of men like those here assembled. Is it not an insult to your intelligence, as well as to your public spirit, to suppose that you will be led to vote for any candidate, merely for the sake of a change, that you will blindly believe that a change of office-holders is to entice victory to business men and prosperity to our people? Is it not an equal insult to the good sense of the people to ask them to believe that the political party in power, at the time of a commercial crisis like that of 1873, is responsible for what was inevitable by the laws of trade and of human nature? The merchants of New-York and the business and working men of the country are intelligent and reflecting men. They will not follow a party whose history and character justly make it suspected and distrusted merely for the sake of a change. I now have the pleasure of introducing as the President of this meeting Mr. Theodore Roosevelt. Mr. Roosevelt spoke as follows:

REMARKS OF THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

FELLOW-CITIZENS: It gives me a pleasure that I can scarcely express to be called upon to preside over a meeting in which I recognize the faces of so many who have been associated with me for years in business, and who, I know, would not be here were it not for the importance of the issues which are at stake. We come here not as partisans to discuss even the relative character of the two candidates. There are issues here which no merchant can, under any circumstances, refrain from considering. The Southern question, so-called, is one of vital importance to us, whether the citizens of the United States are to be molested in their effort to deposit their votes at the polls. We insist upon it that they shall not be interfered with; and even beyond that, as merchants, we claim that those who have fought against the nation during the civil war, shall not now come with their losses to the public treasury to be paid. Civil service reform, too, a vital matter to our country, and without which it seems almost impossible that our country can for a very long time exist, that is now promised us by one who refuses again to become a candidate in order to carry out that promise. As to the question of returning to specie payments, gentlemen, we have one here with us who will be able to give us his views upon the importance of that party being continued in power who are determined that they will return to specie payments. [Applause.] I will now introduce to you Hon. Lot M. Morrill.

In response to this introduction, Secretary Morrill came to the front of the platform, and as soon as the cheers which greeted him had ceased began his address, speaking as follows:

SPEECH OF SECRETARY MORRILL.

MR. CHAIRMAN AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: This looks to me very like business. I feel that I want to congratulate the country that at length the business instincts of the people have become conscious of the impending danger, and I hail it as a harbinger of that success which in the Providence of God, and in the right and potency of the great cause which we advocate here to-day, is to triumph early next week. [Applause.] And being here a hundred years from the glorious declaration of human rights, standing here on this ground made sacred by the inauguration of him who was made first in peace, first in war, and first in the hearts of his countrymen; standing here now, fellow-citizens, at the end of sixteen years of victory and triumph over rebellion, civil war and treason,—a country redeemed, a nationality served and preserved, a credit second to no Government on the face of the earth, let us lift our hands reverently to God and give him praise for the wonderful things that have been done in this land. [Cheers.] I am to speak to you in a brief way, if you shall lend me your ears, with no prepared thoughts for the suddenness of your call, and the exigencies of a rigorous service gives me no time to collect two thoughts in any logical manner; and for the desultory way in which I am to address you, you must make all due allowance. The subjects to which I shall direct your attention are simple and plain; they are open to all of you; they are familiar to all of you, and they only need to be emphasized now at this period of the canvass. What are the questions, and what have been the questions before you in the last sixteen years? They are simply whether this nation shall live or perish. [Applause.] I shall not have occasion, time, strength or opportunity to refer to them extensively, but let me state a single fact from which you may infer a few thoughts. Sixteen years ago last March, when this party came into power, in whose interests you are here assembled to-day, you had no nationality. The Government of your country was broken asunder: seven of its States were in open rebellion; they had organized an independent Government within your jurisdiction and limits, and were maintaining it. The credit of your country was below par. In other words, I exaggerate nothing when I say to you that among the great nations of Europe this nation of ours had neither nationality nor credit. What do you say of it to-day? All the potentates of the earth have sent their messengers here with their gifts this Centennial year, they have laid them at our feet and they do us honor. Its nationality is assured, it ranks as a first-class power among the nations of the earth, and as to its credit it is second to no other nation in Europe or elsewhere. And what are the questions that we have to deal with? We have re-established our nationality; our credit is all that we desire; and what is the trouble? Let me tell an old maxim which has been, and ever will be, true that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and it costs no less to maintain and preserve human institutions than to acquire them. That is a fundamental maxim which I desire to illustrate. In these last sixteen years the American people have expended over eleven billions of money in maintaining and preserving the liberties that we suppose to have been organized on this very spot.

A hundred years ago our fathers supposed that something had been achieved when our national independence had been won. Did they not? and do we not venerate the names and memories of our revolutionary fathers? but to make the Declaration of Independence for which they fought a nationality, and to make it something among the nations of the earth has cost you eleven billions of money in the last sixteen years. They say we have squandered a great deal, and I will come to that by and by. We have spent freely, we have loved our country dearly, we have served it well—and of this we dare and defy contradiction. It cost blood and it cost treasure, and it is worth all that it cost. [Applause.]

WHAT IT COSTS TO MAINTAIN THE GOVERNMENT.

Why, my friends, not to trouble you with figures any further than is necessary for illustration, I propose to state what it costs to maintain the Government; and bear in mind it is one thing to acquire and another thing to maintain it. Now, my friends, the aggregate expenditures of the United States Government since 1789, when it was inaugurated on this spot, have been a little less than fifteen billions of dollars; this sum covers the entire expenditure. You, gentlemen, and I, and all of us, have spent within the last sixteen years $11,000,000,000 of that. There is no answer for such an extravagant and enormous expenditure as that unless we have got something to show for it. Well, we have a nationality redeemed, regenerated, assured, and reconstructed, so that now it is put in harmony with the Declaration of Independence. [Applause.] That nationality means equal rights; that nationality and the flag, its symbol, means a shield and protection to all men, high and low. [Applause.]

More than that, my friends; you have established a national credit, at the mention of which the coffers of the Old World fly open on their hinges to take the lowest grade of your bonds. It cost something to do it, I know; but if there is a man here who thinks the expenditure could have been better employed he had better ask me how we spent that money from the time when our armies crossed the Potomac and entered the rebel territory down to the close of the conflict of arms; if anybody is curious and skeptical, or desires to criticise the manner in which that money was expended, the next thing he had better do is to dig up the bones of the dead patriots who perished in Southern fields. [Applause.] Well, now, what is the matter? [Laughter.] That is the question. I will tell you what the matter is. There is a skeleton in the house. [Cheers and laughter.] There is a solid South; the Democrats boast that they have it. Well, they always had it, and that is the gist of the whole thing. [Laughter.] Of such was not the kingdom of heaven, by any means at all. [Renewed laughter.] Out of such came conspiracy, insurrection, civil war, and rebellion. A solid South before the war made the civil war, didn't it? [Cries of "Yes," "yes."] It has the same significance to-day. [Repeated cries of "Yes."] Now that is what is the matter. [Cheers.] But, my friends, the Democrats say they do not look at it so. [Laughter.] That was their case in olden times; they were so blinded that when the day of rebellion came, they said then that it was only a little unpleasantness, and we had better keep quiet. [Laughter and cheers.] A solid South to-day is the hope of Democracy, the hope of the Lost Cause. And what is the significance of it? Let any thinking man answer me. [A voice, "Another rebellion."] Yes, it is incipient rebellion; it is incipient insurrection; it tends to disorder. To-day throughout the entire South it disturbs the public tranquility and demands that the President of the United States shall send the Army to preserve the public peace. [Applause.] And still there are those who cry "peace! peace!" as they did before the war. Let me tell you, my friends, that a solid South is the Trojan horse in American politics. [Shouts of "Good," and applause.] Its significance is precisely what it was before the war. [A voice, "Rebellion."] Thank God, they have not the same opportunities. [Cheers.] The American people have learned something, and the larger portion of them are not Bourbons. [Applause.]

THE SOUTHERN QUESTION.

That is one of our troubles, and I will tell you a great deal more about this Southern question before I get through. You know what the South did, and what it achieved. It was brought upon the nation, and the result of it was the extermination of slavery, the enfranchisement of the slaves, and the promulgation of equal rights to all men—human beings—before the law in this country [Applause]. Out of these three distinct propositions—the product and the fruit of the rebellion, and the result of this party—comes the Southern question; but that I will explain a little further on. I have already told you about the standing of our public credit here and elsewhere; what is the trouble about that? for in that is comprised one of those questions which is not simply administrative, but is one of the elementary principles in government. It so happens that without public credit there is no such thing as public life—national life. Public credit is the life-blood of the nation; there is no nationality without it; there can be no public credit without nationality; therefore these two things are the great political factors in public life to-day. They are not partisan; they belong in some sense to this party, but they are not party. They belong to every patriot in the land, whether Democrat or Republican, for they are the great fundamental principles of our Constitution. When the nationality of this country, in 1861, came into disrepute, infinite disorder, rebellion, and cruel war was the result; and so, my friends, in regard to national credit. As the result of war comes, the question of finance, which I will discuss a little further on. At the close of the war, notwithstanding all that had been paid, your public debt reached the sum of $2,800,000,000, and $2,000,000,000 of that rests upon the shoulders of the American people of the present day. But that was not all. We had a disordered currency, and an overthrow by the vicissitudes of the war of the great standard of values by which the poor man's labor is measured, and by which all honest transactions are conducted. That is our condition to-day. Here is the financial question, two billions of indebtedness on the part of the United States Government, to say nothing of the other two billions of State and municipal indebtedness which rests on the credit of the Government of the United States. If the public credit is not as clear as the apple of your eye, it there is any slip or fall in the credit of the United States, the credit perishes necessarily. Everybody will tell you that.

THE FINANCIAL QUESTION.

Then the two questions before you are the financial question and the Southern question. I don't want to weary your patience, and I shall be brief upon these two topics, and first let us look at the financial question. What is to be done after the payment of the public debt? What is to be done after the resumption of specie payments? Let us first see what the Democratic Party is about, and then see what diversity of opinion there is about it. I read from the Democratic platform. "Reform." [Laughter.] Well, I assure you that laughter is not out of time; it is very amusing. Let me see how it begins. "Reform is necessary to establish a sound currency," and that is sufficiently general, I assure you. "Reform is necessary to restore public credit. [Laughter.] Well, now, I insist upon it that this is not so clear. If what I have been saying is true in regard to the public credit, it would seem that it was restored at the present time, but the question is of maintaining it. [Cheers.] Now that is what we are for; we have restored it. [A voice: that is so.] We have established it, and with the blessing of God we intend to maintain it. "And to maintain the national honor." That is original. [Laughter.] But sixteen years ago an attempt was made to stamp the Government of this country under foot, and the Democratic Party said it was naughty, but they could not help it, [laughter;] and these same gentlemen to-day glibly talk of the honor of the country with their unsanctified lips. That is all theirs. [Cheers.] That is very brief, very general, very uncertain, and it strikes me that, to a people who are anxious and solicitous upon the great question, it would seem very unsatisfactory. Now let us look at the other side of this picture and see what the Republicans propose on the subject of the finances. We have collected and expended within the last sixteen years, as I have already told you, $11,000,000,000, and we have $2,000,000,000 of obligations now to meet. The ordinary financial duty of the Government is to collect from the people sufficient revenues to pay the interest on its debt as it falls due, as any honest debter should do, and to provide for the payment of the debt. In addition to that, it has to collect revenues enough for the ordinary current expenses of the Government. Now, that is what we are doing and have been doing since the war closed; so that to-day the debt of the Government of the United States, both funded and unfunded, instead of being $2,000,000,000 as in 1865, is a fraction more than two thousand millions. [Applause.] Now, our Democratic friends say, "How these men squander money." Well, that is the way we squander it. [Laughter.] That is what we have done. What else? We have paid the ordinary expenditures of the Government. Those expenditures in 1865-6 amounted to over five hundred millions. But hark you now; these people say we are profligate with the people's money and squander it; that what we do not steal we throw into the Potomac—[laughter]—and yet the fact is that year by year, the expenditures of the Government have undergone the most rigid scrutiny, and from a gross amount of $500,000,000 and more a year they have been reduced, so that in the last fiscal year, including the payment of a hundred millions upon the public debt, and $30,000,000 to the brave men who fought to defend your liberties—which I hope the Democrats do not grudge—behold the amount, in round numbers, was $250,000,000. [Applause.] Aye, more, my friends; in the meantime remember, instead of laying oppressive burdens upon the people, as Democratic speakers would try to induce you to believe, we have lightened their burdens by relieving them of over $300,000,000 of taxes during that period. [Applause.] And to-day the only oppression that I know of—and it may bear a little heavily on some parties whom I will not mention—the only tax that we levy, outside of the import duties, is a tax on whisky and tobacco. [Laughter.] If anybody complains of that, I will tell him how to get relief; you don't want to come to the Secretary of the Treasury for that; just don't touch them. [Cheers and laughter.] Don't taste them, that is all. [Applause.] That is your remedy, and avoid all oppression. [Renewed cheers.] Now, has there been since the war a provident or an improvident administration of the finances of the country? I have often had occasion in the Senate of the United States to challenge an investigation of that matter. I know what I say when I affirm that in the last twenty years the most rigid scrutiny into the receipts and expenditures of the Government has been applied by this party in both Houses of Congress, and never before in the history of this Government was so strict an accountability exacted of it as at the present time. And if any gentleman is curious to know whether that be true or not, let him examine the list which has been pretty extensively published over the country, and which shows that the losses of the Government during the Administration of the last eight years are far less than during any other Administration in the whole history of the Government. [Applause.]

Now there is another phase of this financial question which ought to interest you, and which I hope will, and that is about the payment of the debt. It won't pay itself, but how is it to be paid? Simply by paying it—that is the only way. Let us look at this Democratic document here and see what they say about it? Not a word. [Laughter.] They say reform is necessary to the end that you establish a sound currency; they say reform is necessary to restore the public credit; but that is restored. Now what about the payment of the debt? They don't say anything. I know what they think, and if you won't speak of it outside of Wall street, I will tell you before I get through. I know what they think from what they have done. Now, what do we say. We say, like an honest debtor, that we will pay every obligation of the United States Government in coin of the standard value. [Cheers.] Dollar for dollar, cent for cent, nothing taken off, nothing abated. The best we will do is to let some of those solid men have some of our four per cent. bonds in exchange for six per cents—[laughter]—and occasionally we will accommodate our country cousin, John Bull, in the same way. Now, you ask a Democrat what he thinks about paying the public debt in coin—that is what we agreed; that is what this great party pledged itself to do by act of Congress signed by a Republican President, and the nation was pledged to do it; and immediately your bonds went to par in the market, and to-day your bonds stand away up in the sixteens or seventeens. Ask a Democrat what he thinks about paying that in coin! I will give you an example. Here is a leading Democrat in Ohio making famous speeches. He has been making speeches on the currency, and I think on the credit of the United States, and he has singled out this one act, which was passed by this Republican Congress, to denounce it as the great crime of the age.

Mind you, that for a Republican Congress to declare that it would pay its debts, like honest men in an honest community, in coin, is denounced by a Democratic leader in Ohio as the great crime of the age. I think these are the exact words. It is quite tedious to trouble you with this, but just look how the Democratic Party have resisted this; see how they were talking about paying it in greenbacks and currency, and liquidating a public debt by an inferior currency. That is what the Democrats talk about, and that is what you are in danger of if they get the power. [Cheers.] The public credit will deteriorate, and in no European country will they take four and a half per cent. bonds in exchange for sixes. That is one phase of the financial question which needs to be considered. Well, now, upon this question of a sound currency I recur again to the declaration of the Democratic Convention, "reform is necessary to the establishment of a sound currency." Reform how? What will you do, gentlemen, if you get into power? Is the currency sound or unsound, answer me that? It is unsound in that we have an irredeemable currency afloat. What do they say about that? Not a word. They say a reform is necessary to the establishment of a sound currency; and we know Republicans are non-committal upon that question. The Republican Party in that same act said that they would go to specie payments at the earliest practicable moment, and in 1874 this same party passed an act stating that they would resume specie payments in 1879 absolutely. [Cheers.]

WHAT DO THE DEMOCRATS SAY ABOUT IT?

What do the Democrats say about that? They talk about specie payments and a sound currency and resumption, but I tell you there is only one way under heaven by which that end can be attained, and that is the method I have already stated to you. Why, they had that question up in the last Congress. Mr. Tilden—I thought I would not mention his name, but I will, [laughter,]—I don't mean to say anything out of disrespect to him at all; I would not make this a personal canvass; our strength is in principle, in the justice of the cause. [Applause.] We are right, and no matter who comes in, the right will stand. [Applause.] If the party which established the principles prevails, then, without regard to who is President, whether he be Mr. Hayes or Mr. Somebody else, the principles are safe and the policy is safe. [Cheers.] After Mr. Tilden and Mr. Hendricks were nominated for the Presidency, and this proclamation had gone out that "reform was necessary" in order to establish a sound currency, the first thing they induced their friends in Congress to do was to pass an act repealing the pledge of the United States to resume specie payments in 1879. And now what do you see? [A voice—"How are you going to do it?"] If my friend will be a little patient, I will show him directly; I have not got quite along to that. [Voices—"Go on."] We have said we will do it. I know how we will do it; I know how it will be made easy to do it, if this party triumphs, as I know it will—[loud applause]—as it was decreed from the foundation of the earth that it would. [Renewed applause and laughter.] But you will find that business will revive everywhere; it is reviving now and will revive still more. The balance of trade is with you now as it has not been before for many years. Every thing is setting in our favor, whether human or divine; and with confidence restored and assured my skeptical friend below there will wake up some morning this side of 1879 and find that we are already at specie payments. [Cheers and laughter.] Specie payments? It is a question simply of maintaining resumption. We can resume any day; it is simply a question of maintaining resumption; and the elements to enable us to accomplish that are all in motion and all on our side. [Cries of "Good," and cheers.] And this victory which in the early part of next week we are to register, will enable us to accomplish it. [Applause.] If any man doubts these assurances I will make them good to him or I will never see him again. [Laughter.] I will never be a prophet again. [Continued merriment.] We intend to resume by 1879. [Applause.] That is our faith and our pledge. And since 1861 upon these great questions of national credit and national faith this party has not failed. They might have belied their record in 1874, I am sorry to say, but they did not do it. The President of the United States, remarkable for those qualities which make him great in any exigency—[The speaker was here interrupted by three rousing cheers for Gen. Grant]—he was great in the Cabinet as he was in the field, and when there was an attempt made to modify the act of resumption, that brave man said "No, it shall not be." [Loud applause.] That leaves the record of the Republican Party on the right side; that leaves us pledged to the execution of this act in 1879; and I say here to-day, in the face of these men who make finance the business of their lives, who understand its probabilities and its chances, that everything favors the resumption of specie payments in 1879, provided this party in power succeeds, and provided it does its whole duty, as I do not doubt it will.

CREDIT OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Something has been said, some question has been raised in the City of New York as to the comparative credit of the Government in 1861 and 1875-6. It it alleged that the credit of the Government in 1861 was very nearly what it was in 1876. That I may be accurate, I will read from an able speech—an extremely able speech—and one so specious, that on its face it looks as it it were sound. Speaking of the credit of the Government, which he said had been assailed in 1865, he says:

"Yet, in 1860, under a Democratic administration, the Government placed its five per cent. bonds, with ten years to run, at thirty-one hundredths of one per cent. above par."

That is the proposition. Now, bear in mind that the Government of the United States, in 1860, as bad as I have represented it to be about that time, was able to place a loan of five per cent. bonds at six or six and a half per cent. I do not question the entire integrity of the honorable gentleman who made that speech; I do not believe that he intended to misrepresent; but I will show him how very much mistaken he was. In June, 1860, the Congress of the United States authorized a loan of $21,000,000, payable in ten years. In September the Secretary of the Treasury offered $10,000,000 of that loan to the public, and it was paid off at the average rate of one-tenth of one per cent. above par. Mark you, ten millions of that twenty-one millions were paid for in that way. The bidders put up collaterals; seven millions of that loan were taken up by the bidders; the balance of it was not taken up, but they allowed the collaterals to be forfeited. From September down to the time they were taken up in November, an election had taken place in this country. They backed out from that loan, they forfeited the three millions, they forfeited the collaterals, and you will see, therefore, that the credit of the country was not exactly perfect. But what became of the balance of the loan? The Government was in debt, the finances were run behind; the Government could not pay its debts, it could not pay its current liabilities; they were anxious to have the whole of it loaned, and why didn't they? Simply because they could not. They never got an opportunity to loan the balance of it. The balance of it was never put upon the market, and from that time down to the time that the Democrats went out of power it was an impossibility to put it upon the market either in this country or abroad. So much, therefore, for the statement of the gentleman to whom I refer. He is inaccurate; he does not tell you that a portion of that loan was taken at that, and that a portion of it was declared to be taken even at a forfeiture of one per cent., and that the balance of it was found to be impossible to put upon the market, such was the condition of our credit at the time. The next proposition of the gentleman is, that in February, 1861, the Government authorized a loan of some $25,000,000, payable in twenty years, and that is not yet due. He tells you that $8,000,000 of that loan was put upon the market—I desire to be accurate in this—at prices ranging from 91¼ to 96, so that he says the Government was able to borrow at 6½ per cent. Well, my friends, the fact turns out to be that the Government discounted that $8,000,000 at nine and one-half per cent. Mark you, the loan was $25,000,000, and what became of the balance? We are speaking of the credit of the Government; it has capacity to borrow money, and here was the exigency. They wanted $25,000,000. They borrowed $8,000,000 at nine and one-half per cent. discount; that is what they say. They then offered the balance on the market, and along in the fore part of the next year the whole of that $25,000,000 was on the market, and is now a portion of the debt of the Government, payable in 1881. Well, the Government realized for that 89 1-10 per cent., and that is all. The pertinency of what I am saying is this: that Attorney General Taft, in some remarks he made in the City of New-York, said in a general way that the borrowing power of the Government in 1861 was 12 per cent. You will see what it loaned in 1861 went at 89 1-10 per cent., so that you will perceive that, so far as a comparison of the credit is concerned, there is a most remarkable party between the two. In 1861 it was 89 1-10 per cent. and the same securities are selling at 106 per cent, in gold to-day. [Cheers.] As you will have seen, these very bonds, which were put upon the market at 89 1-10 in gold, were on the second of this month of November, worth in the market $106 and some cents in gold, showing a difference between the credit of 1861 and that of 1876, of seventeen per cent. in gold. [Applause.] I advise my honorable friend, when he undertakes to talk finance and to make comparisons, in the credit of the Government between now and then, that he examine the whole record, that he speak so broadly and candidly as to cover the whole case. When he speaks of putting out a loan, he should tell you the result of that loan; and when he talks to you a difference in credit, he should know accurately its standing. Now, my friends, in this brief and desultory way I have called your attention to one of the great leading fundamental questions which lie at the bottom of the great issue now pending before the American people. Every man who has an interest in the public credit can see on which side safety lies. On this side, if you adopt the policy that is definite, clear, concise, certain, the end will be reached—the consummation may be expected. On the other hand all is uncertainty, hesitation, and doubt. I believe it is said that the head of the ticket is a hard-money man. [Laughter.] Well, that is good—it is very good. But will he stick? [Laughter.] That is the question. It depends upon who elects him—upon the company he keeps. That depends upon the party that surrounds him and upon the hands into which he falls.

THE OTHER END OF THE DEMOCRATIC TICKET.

Let us look at the other end of that ticket, if you wish to get an idea what will be done. What do you say as to the other end of the ticket? Is it sound? [Cries of "No!" "No!"] Is he hard or soft? [Laughter.] Decidedly soft, I grieve to say. [Merriment continued.] Now tell me in which end of that ticket is the strength? [Voices, "The tail!"] Well, if the strength is in the tail, then the tail will wag the dog, won't it? [Great laughter and cheers.] I am told—though I do not verify the report—that their names were scarcely cold on the ticket before that end of the ticket was able, as a concession to himself, to have the resumption act repealed by a Democratic House of Representatives. [Cheers.] Now, suppose that ticket is elected and that influence controls, what do you think of the chances of resumption in 1879? What do you think of its chances at any time this side of eternity? [Laughter.] What think you of the probability of fixing a day during the following year on which resumption shall take place? All uncertain, my friends. Therefore, on this great fundamental question, solid men, financial men of Wall street, of New-York and elsewhere, and laboring men, who who would have your wages measured by an honest standard, make no mistake for whom you vote on Tuesday next. [Applause.]

THE SOUTHERN QUESTION AGAIN.

One other question, and that shall be brief, and I will then relieve your patience. That is, the Southern question. I have already asked it: What is the trouble down South? There is trouble, dissatisfaction, discontent. It is said the Republicans have done something dreadful. Well, what is it? In the first place, after the rebellion was put down at the point of the bayonet, the Republican Party did insist upon it that the slaves who had been emancipated should be free men; that they should be called citizens of the United States. Was there anything wrong in that? [Applause and cries of "No."] You rather like that, do you? ["Yes!" "Yes!"] Very well, that is one of the questions of the time, let me tell you. Every Democrat in the Senate of the United States, I believe, save only one—all praise to his memory!—said "No!" [A voice—"Who was it?"] Reverdy Johnson, peace to his ashes! [Applause.] They all said, "No, we did not mean that; that is not what emancipation means. He was a chattel before you emancipated him; and emancipation don't make him a citizen. He is a freedman, that that is all, not a free man—a freedman, a slave freed." That is what they said; pretty difficult to believe, but it is true, and the record will show it. We had a great controversy in Congress over that question whether the slave freed, having been born in this country, the disability having been removed, is a citizen, or whether he was simply a freedman. Well, my friends, you who remember the reconstruction policy of the South, know that Andrew Johnson undertook to reconstruct the rebel States upon the idea that the slaves, having been emancipated, were not citizens; that they should be turned over to the rebel States, and that they might be made slaves to the States as they had originally been slaves to their masters. Now, a Republican Congress said that they were citizens, and that being citizens they were entitled to protection. And we passed an act as early as 1866 enfranchising those men. Afterward, you remember, we put into the Constitution of the United States an amendment providing that no citizen should be denied the right to vote. On that question of giving civil rights to the negro, protecting him as a citizen in all his rights, civil and political, to which any other citizen was entitled, you will find the Democratic Party in both branches of Congress nearly solid. Now, if you understand the significance of that fact, you will understand why they do not allow the negro to vote there if they can help it. They do not believe he had or ought to have had any right to vote. There is no principle in the question so far as they are concerned. As a mere matter of policy they would not allow him to vote. They think it an outrage that we allowed him to vote. But remember, you who boast of American liberty, you who profess to believe in human rights; inasmuch as you deny the same privilege and the same right to the least of God's children, so shall it be meted out to you in the end. [Great applause.] There is no hope for human liberty in this land, there is no hope for the Gospel of the Declaration of Independence that all men are born free and equal, and equally entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, so long as the Government of the United States fails to see to it that they are protected in their rights. [Cheers.] Now, answer me, with such a record as the Democratic Party has on that question, if they come into power, what do you say will become of that aspect of the negro question, or of the Southern question? The South so strongly rebelled against that proposition of reconstruction that it become necessary later for Congress to pass what was called the Enforcement act; that was an act declaring that any citizen who desired to cast his vote for member of Congress or any Federal officer should have the right to vote so, and he should not be disturbed in it; and if anybody should disturb him it would be a breach of the peace, and that the Federal officers should see to it that he had the right to vote. Well, that is the law, but the Democrats voted against it in a body. They tried to get it repealed last Winter when the House was Democratic; they did the best they could to have it repealed on an appropriation bill, so that it should be forced through the House to the end that these people should have no protection from the Government of the United States in the exercise of the rights which are denied them when they attempt to go to the polls. Will you trust that interest, then, to the Democratic Party; do you think it is safe? If you mean that these men shall be free as implied in their emancipation and enfranchisement, do you intend that the law shall be enforced and shall be made good to them, and that it shall come to pass in all the South that it is lawful, that it is right, that it is permissible, and it is safe for a negro man to deposit his vote in favor of the men he prefers for the office. [Applause.] There is another feature to the Southern question. Our Democratic friends say, a great deal of this is talk for election purposes. Why, have you not read the history of the Kuklux and the Hamburg martyrs? Are these myths? are they fiction? Have not these gone into history? haven't they been recorded, and won't they constitute a most disgraceful page in our record, when it comes to be written in the future? These are solemn facts, noticeable to all but those who are too blind to see. Why, what is taking place in the South every day? Why, the white men, as a general proposition, within the military age, are organized into rifle clubs, and they don't carry clubs either. They carry revolvers and veritable rifles, and they march up and down the State—for what purpose? Why, in the language of the Attorney General, to menace these poor negroes. They go to the Republican meetings, wherever they are held, with arms, with their rifles, and demand of these bodies as they might demand of this body, "You stop; you shall not speak until you divide the time." Gentlemen, I stand here and declare before you that these menaces are insurrectionary in their character, and possess within them the incipient elements of rebellion, and if the Government of this country passes into the hands which aid it, and cherish it, and organize these companies, and the South becomes solid, and the Democrat North by their inaction, acquiesce in the subject, what do you think will take place? [A voice—"Rebellion."] There will be no execution, of course, of the Enforcement act; there will be no protection of the negro whatever; these things will go on and on; the murders and outrages that arise where there is an oppressed people will continue (for a third of the Southern people is oppressed) until the avenging hand shall strike the nation blind again if it does not see to it now. Now, my friends, that is the phase of the Southern question; that is the significance of the Southern question, and these are the two great questions which lie at the foundation of our politics. If you would wish for tranquillity, vote for Hayes and Wheeler. If you wish for general prosperity, vote for Hayes and Wheeler. If you would have the standard of values of the Constitution restored to it, do the same thing. And, my friends, unless the Republican Party betrays its high and exalted trust, be assured that this nation is on a career of prosperity and grandeur which shall redound to the glory of the people of the country, and to the benefit of the down-trodden of all the earth, such as there is no other parallel for in all human history. [Cheers.]

Meeting then adjourned.

A CURIOUS WAR SCENE.

A correspondent of the London Standard, writing from the Turkish Army, says: "The officers on their way to Nish at the first cannon-shot returned to their regiments, but I was detained by a sight, which even in the midst of this sanguinary fight, deserves to be recorded. Among the drivers who bring provisions to the camp in carts drawn by oxen, to return the next day with the wounded to Nish, was a young Bulgarian girl, about fourteen years old, driving a pair of buffaloes. Along the road traversed by the girl thousands of Bashi-Bazouks daily pass, and it leads through the midst of at least 30,000 soldiers. The girl appeared in the camp instead of her father, who, she told me, was ill, but did not wish to lose his share of the rich harvest which the war brings, and although many of the soldiers cast stolen glances at the unwonted apparition, and perhaps reckoned up the time since they had last seen a woman, the girl passed uninjured, and without the slightest fear, through the midst of their ranks."

THE GAME OF BRAG.

The Toledo Blade prints a confidential circular addressed by John E. Thompson, Chairman of the Ohio Democratic State Committee, to the Democratic editors in the State, in which he says: "In your paper, from this until the 7th proximo, claim the national contest and this State also. Be earnest in this matter. Do it exultingly, and with the utmost confidence. Don't be lukewarm in this, but fervent. The Republicans are greatly alarmed. They feel that the fight is gone. They are drooping. Keep them there. Press the advantage which the situation assures. There is much to be gained by this course. Demand the polling of every vote, that our victory may be overwhelming and last through years. Claim the State with confidence. Do it with such confidence as to carry conviction to our friends and terror to our enemies. Hold meetings everywhere in your county. Exult at your meetings, and press each one to go forward with assurances of victory."

UNTIMELY RUFFIANISM.

The Providence Journal of Thursday says: "The same old demoniac spirit crops out in various parts of the State beyond the restraint of the Democratic Committee's resolutions. In Bristol, last evening, the Republican procession was villainously assailed with stones. Several persons were hit, and one Bristol man was knocked senseless by the rugged arguments of his Tilden townsmen. The assailing mob seemed as usual composed chiefly of the foreign element. These outrages occur so regularly and systematically as almost to inspire belief that they are a part of a plan to drive off Republican support from the proposed amendment extending suffrage to foreign-born soldiers. Possibly these mobocrats think that they can fight the Constitution of the State more effectually hereafter if no partial amendment is adopted. At any rate, upon the heads of these ruffians rests the responsibility of their defeat, if the amendment extending the suffrage fails."

MORE TESTIMONY.

A Yale graduate, who was in the Union Army and has resided in a Southern city since the war, has written a letter to a friend in Boston in which he shows how necessary for the peace of the country it is that Hayes should be elected. The writer is a lawyer and has been quite conservative in politics, having supported Greeley in 1872. He says: "I am feeling anxious about the impending election. Of course I am for Hayes and Wheeler. I think there has never been a time since the close of the war when the disloyal spirit of the South was as active and rampant as now. I think it is going to be an exceedingly unfortunate thing for the country if the Democratic Party should succeed. I should be very apprehensive for the consequences, especially for Northern men South."

CHURCHES AND MINISTERS.

HOME AND FOREIGN EVENTS.

The Lutherans observed Oct. 31, as the 359th anniversary of the Reformation.

Rev. Dr. W. C. Richards has become one of the editors of the Chicago Baptist Standard.

Lord Plunkett has been chosen Episcopal Bishop of Meath, Ireland, in place of Dr. Butcher, deceased.

The Presbyterian Synod of Philadelphia reports 42,450 communicants in 292 churches. The increase for the year was 6,105.

The Carthusian Monks are erecting the largest monastery in England, near Horsham, Essex. The style of the building is Norman.

Rev. S. J. Smith, Baptist Missionary at Bangkok, Siam, is having some Siamese type cast in Massachusetts, for use in his Siamese printing house.

The Episcopal Cathedral of Saints Peter and Paul, Chicago, has been raised four and a half feet without injury. The building, which is of stone, is 138 feet long.

Although Methodism had its origin in Oxford in 1729, it has never obtained a place even in the town. It is now proposed to raise funds to establish a church there.

The Philadelphia Association of Friends for the promotion of First-day-schools, reported 550 officers and teachers in these schools, with 5,613 scholars, of whom 1,334 are adults.

Rev. J. Rhoads Fury, who was ordained last year by Bishop Stevens, of Pennsylvania, has withdrawn from the Protestant Episcopal to join the Reformed Episcopal Church.

The Methodist General Missionary Committee will hold its annual meeting at No. 805 Broadway, in this City, Nov. 16. The society has a debt of about two hundred thousand dollars.

There are now Baptist native women's missionary societies among the Choctaws, Delawares, and Cherokees. The Cherokee society embraces thirty women, who give $1 each yearly.

The Evangelical Alliance of the United States has issued a protest against the oppression of Protestants in Spain, a copy of which has been sent to United States Minister Cushing at Madrid.

The Baptists in this State numbered in 1792, 4,895; the statistics show that there are now 105,232, which is an increase of less than 2,000 since 1872. The largest number of baptisms was in 1843, namely 15,794.

The International Sabbath-school Lesson Committee meets in this City in November to select lessons for 1878. American teachers ask that the lessons for 1878 be made shorter than those for 1876-7.

The Anglican Bishops, with only one dissenting voice, which is that of the Bishop of Lincoln, have chosen the two Archbishops as Assessors in the civil court, which is appointed to try ecclesiastical cases.

The Baptist Association of Massachusetts reports 287 churches in the State, 247 Pastors, and 47,173 members. The number of baptisms during the past year was 1,968, and the amount of money contributed $692,000.

There are now forty-seven Young Women's Christian Associations in this country, which are formed on the plan of the Young Men's Christian Association. There is one of these associations on Fifteenth street, in this City.

Bishop Strossmayer, of Austria, does not side with the Pope in desiring the success of the Turks. Canon Liddon says the Bishop "is on fire with the Eastern question," and declares that the cause of the Servians is the cause of God."

The Elders belonging to the Presbytery of Logansport have just held their second annual Council, and they are so well satisfied of the usefulness of these meetings, that they have resolved to make the council a permanent institution.

The Christian Advocate, of this City, will change its form in January and become a sixteen-page paper, with leaves cut and stitched. Only three religious papers of prominence in this City now retain the old quarto form—the Observer, the Evangelist, and the Examiner and Chronicle.

Since 1866 the Methodist Church Extension Society has aided churches of the denomination in the South by donations and loans to the extent of $354,082. The value of the property now held by these churches amounts to over four million dollars, and connected with them are 306,807 members.

Last May the Presbyterians dedicated a new Chinese mission-house in Los Angeles, Cal. Since then the regular Sunday services have been attended by as large a congregation as any other church in the city could boast of. Recently eight young Chinese have been received into the membership of the church.

The Quebec Canadien, in noticing that a Bible agent had gone to Baie St. Paul, in Charlevoix County, "to start a free school, build a chapel, and establish a bible depository," said: "The Bibles will become food for the fire, and if the minister officiates with too much solemnity, he will be notified to clear out, and all will be over."

A new Protestant Episcopal Parish has been formed in Key West, in addition to St. Paul's, which, in consequence of the immigration from the West Indies of many church people, furnishes insufficient accommodation. Services are to be held in Spanish in the new parish, which will be served temporarily by Rev. Mr. De Palma, of New-York.

The great commentator, Dr. Lange, has been fifty years a professor. He was the son of a peasant and in his boyhood sold milk. Falling in love with a young lady of high family he resolved to make something of himself so he might win her. He borrowed books and studied and soon became known as a brilliant scholar. In later years he married the girl of his early choice.

The Methodists held a fraternal meeting recently at Louisville in celebration of the establishment of friendly relations between the Northern and Southern Churches. Bishop Foster and a number of prominent ministers met Bishop Kavanaugh and other representative men from the South. The Bishops made pleasant speeches and embraced each other, as a token of the reconciliation of the two Churches.

Rev. O. Gibson, Methodist missionary among the Chinese of San Francisco, reports eight baptisms for the year, and a total membership of fifty, including two assistant preachers. Mrs. Gibson's work among the Chinese women has not been very successful. Of the twenty-four women who were in her mission school at the beginning of the year, fourteen left, and there are now only eighteen in the school.

The old Catholic Congress held its meeting this year at Breslau. Its last meeting was at Freiburg in 1874. Since then the Synod has become the ecclesiastical legislature of the Old Catholics, and the Congress is not of the same importance that it was. The Breslau Congress, however, took important action on an important question which it was supposed the Synod had settled for the present. The Congress directed the Synodal Council to ascertain what are the legal hindrances to the abolition of clerical celibacy, and to take the sentiment of old Catholics on the subject. The Congress also urged the Synod to carry out the promised reforms in church service, a scheme for the organization of provincial assemblies was ordered to be drawn up, and it was resolved to open negotiations with German Protestants, with a view to union.

In 1873 what was known as the Declaration and Testimony Synod of Missouri, which had occupied a position of neutrality between the Northern and Southern Presbyterian bodies, united with the Southern Assembly. The Walnut Street Church in St. Louis, Dr. James H. Brookes, Pastor, refused to agree to this action, and until now has maintained an independent position, though claimed by the Southern Presbytery to be under its ecclesiastical jurisdiction. Recently the church voted to join the Northern Presbytery, and applied to the Southern Presbytery for dismission thereto. The latter refuses to grant the request, and will neither dismiss the church nor drop the name of Dr. Brookes from its roll. The case is likely to be appealed, and may furnish occasion for a long litigation in the courts.

The Presbyterian Synod of Philadelphia has just rendered a decision which is attracting considerable attention. In one of the churches within the Synod's limits the Pastor, by request of a candidate for baptism, immersed him. A complaint was thereupon carried to the Presbytery of Lackawanna, which took an exception to the act. From the Presbytery the case went to the Synod, which has rendered a decision as follows: "In view of the teachings and principles entering into the doctrine of baptism, we judge that the administration of baptism by Rev. J. H. Clark, in the case excepted to, came within the possible limits of a permissible administration of the rite, and, although without any sanction of command or fact in Sacred Scriptures, yet did not involve a moral wrong. The mode of administration, however, not being accordant with the distinctive mode of baptism accepted and appointed by the Presbyterian Church, we do approve of the spirit of the exception of the Presbytery of Lackawanna, as betokening a just, watchful care in the exercise of its responsible duties, and adjudge that it should be so interpreted as giving fraternal counsel, and not as ecclesiastical censure."

OF
A. T. Stewart's
Garden City Water Works,
THURSDAY, Nov. 9, 1876

There will be an EXHIBITION of the WATER WORKS recently constructed at GARDEN CITY, on THURSDAY, Nov. 9, at 12 o'clock.
THE AUTOMATIC WORKING of the MACHINERY by the SIMPLE OPENING of a HYDRANT upon any of the LINES of PIPES throughout the village WILL be SHOWN, and the CAPACITY and USEFULNESS of the SYSTEM WILL be ILLUSTRATED by THROWING SIX ONE-INCH STREAMS of WATER, at the SAME TIME, ONE HUNDRED FEET HIGH, and ONE TWO-INCH STREAM OVER TWO HUNDRED FEET HIGH.
APART from the INTERESTING NATURE of such an Exhibition, the WORKS, consisting of the "HOLLY PUMP," with all the new improvements, automatic attachments, &c., &c., can be seen in operation, showing their perfect adaptability for supplying water for fire and domestic purposes.
A SPECIAL TRAIN will leave HUNTER'S POINT at 10 o'clock A. M., and RETURNING will leave GARDEN CITY at 2 o'clock P. M. The WATER WORKS are LOCATED NEAR the STATION.
VISITORS can find ACCEPTABLE ACCOMMODATIONS on the GROUNDS, and LUNCH MAY BE HAD at the HOTEL RESTAURANT.

LOCAL POLITICAL MATTERS.

THE COMMITTEE OF TWENTY-FIVE.

ADDRESS TO THE CITIZENS OF NEW-YORK EXPLAINING THE REASONS FOR THE FAILURE OF THE RECENT CONFERENCES WITH OTHER ASSOCIATIONS—A PLEA FOR LOCAL ELECTIONS IN SPRING.

A meeting of the Independent Citizens' Committee was held yesterday at their head-quarters, No. 166 Fifth avenue, Hon. Oswald Ottendorfer in the chair, when the following address was unanimously adopted:

NEW-YORK, Nov. 4, 1876.

To the Citizens of New-York City:

The efforts of the Committee of Twenty-five to secure a union of the independent and honest voters of this City as would justify us in proceeding with the campaign so auspiciously begun, and in incurring the necessarily large expense attendant thereon, have failed, and we deem it but justice to you to give the reasons therefor. Early in the season it was evident to all that there existed in the public mind a deep and earnest feeling that the government of our City and the management of its monetary interests should be placed beyond the reach of mere party control, and that honesty, integrity, and capability should be the only recommendations to office. In this belief Andrew H. Green was, at a mass-meeting of the people, nominated for the Mayoralty. This committee then undertook to secure his election by such a combination of the various organizations as then existed, and by creating new associations, as would best secure the result sought to be accomplished. A complete history of our efforts in that behalf can never be written, including as it would conferences public and private with men high in authority, and with humble though earnest members of the different parties. We were met in the beginning with the objection that nothing should be done in our local affairs that would in the slightest degree interfere with the Presidential contest; that City Government was a small matter compared to the question of securing the electoral vote of the State; that our City taxes were as nothing to the administration of national affairs. These arguments were advanced mainly by members of the Republican Party, and at the outset of the campaign, only by those who are known as party leaders; their opposition to our movement was decided and outspoken, and their influence, as we have seen, was finally successful in securing what is known as a straight ticket. It is our duty, with the experience of the past, to guide us, to warn you of future danger, and to suggest such remedies as may secure for us an honest, energetic, and economical administration of Municipal affairs. Vast as are the interests of our City, with a population larger than that of many of the States, with an immense indebtedness, we find our local interests placed in the background, and so completely subordinated to the national contest that the independent portion of our citizens have practically no voice in City management. This condition of things will exist as long as our City elections are held at the same time with the State and national, and we think the time has come when we should demand for City elections the importance they deserve. When we select our City officers in the Spring we may hope for special attention to City affairs, and not until then; elect our City officers any other time than when national and State contests are supreme, and the ordinary New-York politician cannot hope to succeed through the popularity of the head of the ticket. This change we cannot hope to secure through the party leaders; the large and ever increasing number of office holders are not, as a rule, favorable to a high standard of character and capability, and would therefore oppose any reform of the kind proposed. The people themselves must demand this from their representatives in Albany; an organized effort should be made, and the citizens of the Empire City owe it to themselves and for the honor of New-York to effect this change, and prevent a recurrence of the reign of official corruptionists that has made our Government a disgrace to ourselves and a stumbling-block to the cause of universal freedom. The independent citizens have overthrown party discipline and can do it again; we have had no stealing through the Controller's office for the past five years, but the system under which a pliant and willing tool of a corrupt organization brought us to the verge of bankruptcy still exists, and may again result as disastrously.

The thanks of every inhabitant of this City are due Andrew H. Green for his financial management, and we hope that the condition of affairs that rendered his appointment necessary will not be allowed to occur again, against which condition his management is the best guarantee. It City officials are elected at a time when no other officers are to be voted for, and no other issues are involved, the different parties will be forced to place the best men in nomination; character will be the only party platform, an unsullied life the highest recommendation to official trust. We take this occasion to express our appreciation of the hearty support we have received from the Independent citizens, and we have no doubt that true reform can surely be accomplished by the same means.

LOUIS M. DOSCHER, Secretary.

RING TACTICS IN BROOKLYN.

TRYING TO INTIMIDATE THE VOTERS—A LETTER FROM DISTRICT ATTORNEY BRITTON TO THE POLICE BOARD.

If any further evidence were needed of the fact that the Ring men of Brooklyn are thoroughly frightened, it was furnished yesterday by the audacious attempt made to intimidate the honest voters who are opposing the public plunderers. Winchester Britton, who was turned out of the office of District Attorney by Gov. Dix for corrupt practices, and who was subsequently "vindicated" by the Ring Democracy in the Democratic tidal wave last year, wrote a letter to Superintendent Campbell, directing him to instruct the police to arrest all persons found distributing pamphlets or circulars containing libels on candidates. The object of the letter is to intimidate the people and prevent the distribution of election documents showing the true character of the Ring nominees. The Police Officers are made the judges of the libel. Interviews are published in the Eagle between a representative of that paper and Police Commissioners Jourdan, Tyburn, and Hurd. The two last named, who are Democrats and form a majority of the board, make long statements approving Britton's letter and promising to aid that official in carrying out what they facetiously term "his duty." President Jourdan bluntly told the Eagle man that if Britton's instructions were carried out every person found selling the paper he represented could be summarily arrested, for the reason that its every issue since the campaign commenced contained the most atrocious libels upon public men. The attempt to intimidate the people will not, however, succeed. Neither the Democratic Police Commissioners nor District Attorney Britton dare use the police force to carry out the schemes of the Democratic Ring. The manifesto of Britton is merely meant to scare the opponents of the Ring. There are sure and speedy ways of punishing those who publish malicious untruths against any candidate. Complaint must be made by the person libelled before a Magistrate, and a warrant issued for the arrest of the libeler. This course has been adopted by Mr. Abram H. Dailey, the Democratic candidate for Surrogate, who, it is alleged, has been wrongfully accused in circulars, secretly distributed, of being turned off the Bench. The accusation, if such has been made, is undoubtedly a lie, and those who circulated it are amenable to the law. Mr. Britton simulates a fear that the day before election fatal accusations in printed form may be distributed when no time is left to candidates to refute the charges. Malicious people who pay money for the circulation of such documents a day or two before election throw it away. Accusations not made in ample time to allow the parties accused to answer have no influence whatever and are not heeded by voters. When the truth is spoken or written of Ring candidates, it is, of course, unpleasant; but, as the proverb has it, those who have made their beds must lie on them. While a great cry is being made by the Ring because their candidates are subjected to just criticism, they adopt themselves the most sneaking, underhand methods of assailing their opponents. A good illustration of the Ring method is furnished by a circular written in German and apparently in the interest of one of the Republican candidates. The circular sets forth that the candidate alluded to should be elected because he is in favor of closing up all lager-beer saloons and of preventing the sale of all kinds of malt or spirituous liquor. This is sent by the Ring men among the Germans in the hope that they will refuse to support the candidate named in the circular.

FRIDAY NIGHT'S PARADE.

[Circular.]

Commandants of independent organizations and of other bodies of men which participated in the parade of last night, and which formed below Fourteenth street, are respectfully requested to make return to these head-quarters of the title of their organization, name, and address of commandant, and the number of men under their command.

By order. LLOYD ASPINWALL,
Brigadier General, Commanding.
Brevet Brig. Gen. CHARLES A. CARLETON,
Assistant Adjutant General.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

There are enrolled in this seminary 156 names. Nearly the entire list are college graduates, and represent the majority of the States. No vote has been taken for either of the candidates for President, but, after careful inquiry, it has been ascertained that there are six men who would vote for Mr. Tilden. The leading papers are on file in the reading-room, and every fellow reads and thinks for himself.

J. G. B.
NEW-YORK, Saturday, Nov. 4, 1876.

AFRAID OF TWEED.

A GUILTY WAIL FROM THE DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE.

ROOMS OF THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE, EVERETT HOUSE, NEW-YORK, Nov. 4, 1876.

To the people of the United States:

I deem it my duty to caution the public against a pretended confession of William M. Tweed seeking to implicate Gov. Tilden in the New-York Ring frauds, which, I am informed, is already in type in advance of the arrival of the United States steamer Franklin, said to be purposely detained off the Harbor of New-York until the eve of the election, in order to give color to the fraud and prevent its contradiction. Possibly this notice may cause an abandonment of a device to which only politicians made desperate by the conviction of impending defeat would resort in order to mislead the ignorant and unwary. It is enough to say that the Ring was broken and Tweed and his confederates brought to justice by Gov. Tilden. This is one of his chief titles to the confidence of the American people.

ABRAM S. HEWITT,
Chairman National Democratic Committee.

HOME WORK.

The Young Men's Republican Association of the Twenty-first Assembly District ratified the entire Republican ticket at a special meeting.

The real home work now is folding and distributing the Republican national, State, and local tickets, and using every effort to get them into the hands of the voters before election day.

Capt. Edward Wortheimer delivered an able address before the German Republicans of the Eighth Assembly District at No. 63 Ludlow street last evening. Mr. Charles Schafer presided, and the enthusiasm for Hayes and Wheeler was genuine and spontaneous.

The national, State, and County nominations were heartily indorsed by the Hayes and Wheeler Club of the Tenth Assembly District, at a meeting at No. 182 Ludlow street last evening. Mr. G. Wieland presided, and speeches were made by C. Otto Boese, Col. Strong, and others.

The Seventeenth Ward Hayes and Wheeler Campaign Club held a special meeting at No. 385 Bowery last evening, Mr. Charles F. Wolfe in the chair. A resolution was adopted pledging the members of the association to render all the aid in their power at the polls on election day.

At a meeting of the Twenty-fourth Ward Republican Association, held at Ittner's Hall, West Farms, on Friday evening, a series of strong resolutions were adopted, indorsing the national, State, and Municipal Republican tickets, and pledging the hearty support of the association to secure their election.

Hon. Jacob M. Patterson, Jr., Chairman of the Republican Central Committee, has received the most encouraging information from the several Assembly district associations in relations to large accessions of Republican votes, the increase coming mainly from the class of persons who seldom or never vote.

The letters received at the rooms of the National and State Republican Committees show a general awakening among the Republicans throughout the State and country, and that every effort will be made to poll every Republican vote, it having been demonstrated that this is all that is necessary to insure a glorious victory.

Gen. John A. Dix has taken a vigorous part in the campaign. He addressed several meetings on Long Island last week, and closed by making a strong and impressive appeal at Port Chester, last evening, to all who wanted good government; urging all his hearers to use every possible effort for the success of the Republican nominees.

A grand Republican mass-meeting was held at Harugari Hall, No. 171 Avenue A, last evening, under the auspices of the Young Men's Republican Association of the Fourteenth Assembly District. Addresses were made by Messrs. George McKee, John R. Nugent, and John Kehoe. This district will perform effective service next Tuesday.

The contrast afforded between the respectable Republican processions in this City and Brooklyn, and those of the Democrats, composed largely of roughs and boys, has produced a visible effect in favor of the Republican canvass, and an additional impetus has been given by the speeches of Hon. William M. Evarts and Hon. Lot M. Morrill, in arousing members of the mercantile classes to the danger to business interests likely to result in the event of the success of the Democracy.

A number of Tilden agents went through the lower portion of the City yesterday, calling at prominent business houses to solicit signatures to an appeal to merchants. In almost every instance they were refused. Among others called upon was the firm of Hand & Elsworth, where they appealed to all of the clerks for their signatures, without obtaining a single name. As one of the agents was passing out of the store, Mr. Hand, who had been before appealed to, said, "Here, let me sign it." The paper was handed to him, when he affixed the signature of "Jeff Davis," and gave it back to the agent who folded it up without looking at the signature, and walked out satisfied.

TILDEN SPEAKS IN BROOKLYN.

"Boss" McLaughlin's ragged regiments, bearing torches, and for once dressed in decent garb—the General Committee having furnished caps and shirts—paraded through the principal streets in Brooklyn last evening in honor of Samuel J. Tilden, the great reform Democratic candidate for the Presidency. Mr. Tilden was received in Brooklyn by such eminent reformers as William A. Fowler, (who is now under suspension from office on a charge of defrauding the people,) Winchester Britton, and several others of the same type. Out of nearly a hundred men on the Reception Committee there were not more than half a dozen representative Democrats of the better class. Most of them were mere ward politicians and petty Ring contractors. The procession was formed into three divisions, under command of William J. Powell, John B. Meyerborg, and Thomas M. Riley respectively. Gen. Thomas T. Dakin, the Democratic candidate in the Second Congressional district, acted as Grand Marshal, and Anthony Barrett as Adjutant General. There were about ten thousand persons in line, a large number of whom were boys—mere boys—glad of the opportunity to parade through the streets with a torch and a red cap. The line of march was from Bedford avenue to Rutledge street, to Johnson street, to Union avenue, to Grand street, to Fourth street, to Bedford avenue, to Clymer street, to Washington avenue, to Myrtle avenue, to Cumberland street, to Lafayette avenue, to Fulton street, to Joralemon street. Gov. Tilden reviewed the procession from a platform erected at the back of the City Hall, on Joralemon street. Mr. Tilden was subsequently entertained by a number of politicians at a hotel on Washington street. Being introduced to those present by ex-Senator Murphy, he spoke as follows:

I thank you, citizens of Brooklyn, not so much on my own account as on behalf of the cause I represent, for the manifestation you make here to-night. It is not my cause, but the cause of the people you represent. This contest is the greatest, the most interesting, the most solemn, the most momentous that has happened since the revolution of 1800. The question is whether we shall have a united, harmonious Government and country, representing the people of all politics, sections, and races—whether we shall join our friends and carry forward the great principles to which we have devoted ourselves. Too long, alas, we have been engaged in domestic broils. Can New-York and Brooklyn be prosperous with the favor of a policy that destroys one-half of the country? Can they bear that? I have been told that if I should happen to be elected that I should have great trouble with the South. There may be difficulties in bringing back people to the administration which they desire, but I do not apprehend that there will be any difficulty with the South. I believe that with unanimous accord we can carry on the Government on the basis established by the results of the war. The other day there was a great cry about the rebel claims. I understand that Parson Brownlow was circulating my letter to get votes for the Republican cause. I am very happy to have him do that. That letter was supposed to be an act of courage and boldness. I did not suppose that it was an act either of courage or boldness to make a declaration on which both North and South agree. I am sure that the spirit has now become universal in the South to share in the common duties of citizenship. I believe that if the election turns in favor of the Democratic ticket, it will produce a political millenium our citizens will begin to repair the ravages that the war has made in their business, our people can turn from ruin, from discord, to prosperity. We are not prosperous. How can we be prosperous when we have done nothing but contend against one another for twenty years; when our public representatives have been legislating as class against class, have imposed a burdensome taxation, have been holding a carnival of public plunder and erecting a class of officeholders against the people? In the old world the governing classes have been able, with the help of the army, to maintain an ascendency over the people. In our country we did not think this possible. It did not address itself to the understanding of the American citizens. It is now that we find the case is different; that the governing class have made it possible in the ordinary division of parties to make it a difficult contest against the mass of the people. I feel perhaps more than anyone else how difficult it is for a private man to maintain a contest against the Government—the contest of the people against their unworthy servants. I do not doubt the issues of that contest, and when the result shall be declared I believe that it will be a subject of congratulation not only among us, but to the large number of those who will vote against us, because the Government has to be saved not only from the wrong-doers, but from the weak men who go with the wrong-doers, who have to be saved in spite of themselves and cannot be depended upon to maintain the right. I have felt lately, since I have seen the names of various men signed to the calls of our antagonists, that I have entertained a notion of human weakness greater than I have ever entertained before, knowing what they have said to me and to my friends. I see these men have to be saved by the power of the common people from their own weakness. But I did not intend to make a speech more than six inches. Thanking my old friend, the Senator, [Senator Murphy,] and congratulating you, I bid you good evening.

COLORED MEN ASSAULTED.

At 1 o'clock yesterday morning, while a Republican club, composed of colored men, known as the "Farren" Battery, hailing from Jersey City, was passing through Desbrosses street, it was attacked by a number of white men belonging to a Democratic club, and during the mêlée which ensued one white man was dangerously wounded and several others were slightly injured. The "Farren" Battery had taken part in the Republican procession Friday night, and at the conclusion of the parade started for home. They numbered about 100 men, and marched down Broadway to Canal street, and through that thoroughfare to Desbrosses street. They marched on the sidewalk, and attracted considerable attention by their soldierly bearing. While passing through Desbrosses street the members of a Democratic club, formerly known as the "William H. Burns" Association, but recently transferred to a Tilden campaign club, under the name of the "William J. Aikman" Association, who had been carousing in their rooms at the corner of Watts and Greenwich streets, came out to see the procession pass. When the procession had reached the corner of Greenwich and Desbrosses streets, some reckless individuals in the crowd, supposed to be members of the association, commenced an assault upon some colored men who were straggling behind the column. The rear of the column was assailed with a shower of rotten apples, potatoes, and other missiles, and in addition they were pelted with brickbats and stones from the roof of a building on the corner. When the captain of the colored men learned what was transpiring at the rear of his company he halted the company, and faced the men toward the assailants, and in a moment a general melee ensued, in which bludgeons, cart-rungs, and other weapons were freely used. The colored men made such a determined fight that their white assailants fled toward the club-house for shelter, followed by their antagonists. In front of the club-house a fierce hand-to-hand fight ensued, in the midst of which Patrolman Budds, of the Fifth Precinct, arrived on the spot. He sprang in between the contending factions, and endeavored to separate the combatants, but all his efforts in this direction proved futile. Suddenly several pistol shots were fired, and the crowd dispersed. The colored men reassembled and continued their march to the ferry at the foot of Desbrosses street, and embarked on the boat for Jersey City. Several policemen arrived in response to the summons for assistance given by Officer Budds, and it was then found that William J. Merriman, aged twenty-two, a resident of No. 20 Desbrosses street, had during the fracas been stabbed in the left side and badly wounded. He was also suffering from a bad scalp-wound. Thomas J. Fisher, aged twenty-one, of No. 8 Desbrosses street, was shot in the right leg, and slightly injured. James Norton, aged twenty-one, of No. 464 Canal street, had been struck in the breast by a pistol ball, which had merely grazed the skin, inflicting no other injury. Some of the wounded men, who are all white, were removed to the Leonard Street Police Station, where their wounds were attended to by Police Surgeon Cook. Merriman and Fisher were removed to the Chambers Street Hospital, where it was found that Merriman's wound was of a highly dangerous nature, the point of the weapon with which he was stabbed having, it is believed, penetrated the left lung. Norton was very much intoxicated, and was locked up at the station-house. William Fitzpatrick, of No. 438 Greenwich street, was arrested while in the act of beating a colored man who had taken part in the procession, and he was also locked up in the station-house.

It was a matter of great difficulty for the Police to obtain any trustworthy information in relation to the origin of the mêlée. Capt. Caffrey detailed several officers for that purpose, and from the testimony these officers gathered, the Captain is convinced that the white men were the aggressors. It was learned that when the "Farren" Battery crossed the ferry, early in the evening, on their way to join the procession, they were hissed and hooted at by a number of loafers who lounge about the liquor store of Michael Murphy at the corner of Watts and Greenwich streets, over which are situated the rooms occupied by the "Aikman" Association. The negroes paid no attention to the insulting jeers and opprobrious epithets applied to them. Fears had, however, been expressed by those in the neighborhood that there would be trouble when the Battery returned. When they did return, there was a considerable number of white citizens marching in their ranks. Most of the torches carried by them were out, but some of them were still burning. When they reached the corner of Greenwich and West streets the man Norton, previously referred to, who was intoxicated, applied an insulting epithet to one of the colored men, who retaliated by striking Norton with an unlighted torch. Norton and a man who was in his company thereupon assaulted the colored man and were beating him severely when his comrades came to his assistance. A general free fight followed, with the result stated.

Several other participants in the affray received scalp wounds and other injuries, but not of a serious nature. As the colored men were all residents of Jersey-City, and departed for their homes immediately after the affray, it could not be ascertained whether any of them had been injured. Norton and Fitzpatrick who were arrested, were arraigned before Justice Duffy, at the Tombs Police Court yesterday, and were discharged.

PRELIMINARY VOTING.

A vote on the 8 A. M. train from Jersey City to Philadelphia, on Friday, stood Hayes, 108; Tilden, 65.

A vote on the 2:40 day train from Princeton to New-York, yesterday, stood: Hayes, 150; Tilden, 70; Cooper, 2.

On the Long Island Railroad, Friday night, out of 115 votes, 66 were given to Hayes, 44 to Tilden, and 5 to Cooper.

On an incoming train from Roselle, N. J., one day this week, the vote stood as follows: Hayes, 146; Tilden, 70; Cooper 1.

In the wholesale dry goods house of L. M. Bates & Co. the vote on the Presidential question stands thus: Hayes, 63; Tilden, 39.

On the 7:45 A. M. train from Philadelphia, yesterday, the vote on the Presidential question stood 108 for Hayes and 65 for Tilden.

A vote was taken yesterday at the saloon corner of Third avenue and St. Mark's place, of which Hayes obtained 50, Cooper 25, and Tilden 15.

The employes of the Domestic Sewing machine Company, at Newark, voted yesterday on the Presidential question, with the following result: Hayes, 162; Tilden, 98; Cooper, 17.

REPUBLICAN PARADE IN JERSY CITY.

The Republicans of Jersey City held their final torch-light procession last night. The demonstration was one of the most imposing ever held in the city. All the local clubs and the Boys in Blue turned out in large numbers, and it is estimated that there were four thousand uniformed men in line. Besides these there were large numbers of citizens on foot and a long line of private vehicles decorated. Their line of march extended through the principal streets of the lower section of the city and the Heights. Large crowds looked on from the sidewalks, and almost every house in the better part of the city was brilliantly illuminated, and from some elegant pyrotechnic displays were made. The mottoes on their transparencies called for "Hard Money, no Rag Baby," "Real Reform, no Sham Reform," "Free Schools, and Free Ballots." The procession evoked much enthusiasm.

ARRIVALS AT THE HOTELS.

Ex-Senator William Sprague, of Rhode Island; John Davis, Clerk of the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims, and Baron C. R. Osten Sacken are at the Hoffman House.

Gen. S. Meredith Read, United States Minister to Greece; ex-Gov. Henry Howard, of Rhode Island; Gen. George A. Sheridan, of Louisiana; Lieut. George M. Wheeler, of the Engineer Corps, United States Army, and Capt. W. H. Thompson, of the steam-ship Britannic, are at the Fifth Avenue Hotel.

MURDER TRIAL ADJOURNED.

WATERTOWN, Nov. 4.—Francis Grapotte, who murdered Simon Hoover in March last, has been on trial here for the past two weeks. The court adjourned over until Wednesday next, the jurors being allowed to go to their respective homes to remain till that time. The court charged them to listen to no talk on the subject of the trial. Counsel on both sides expressed confidence in the integrity of the jurymen.

SINGULAR FATAL ACCIDENT.

BELLOWS' FALLS, Nov. 4.—A son of Henry White, 16 years old, living near Grafton, accidentally shot himself while hunting, yesterday. When found, his body lay near that of a fox. It is supposed that he wounded the fox and then struck at him with the butt of his gun, discharging the loaded barrel, the contents of which passed through his body, killing him.

THE NUMBER OF SHOCKING BAD HATS to be seen on the heads of persons usually fastidious in such matters is a matter of general observation. They are evidently waiting until after the election, when, on the result of pending wagers they expect to indulge in one of the KNOX FALL STYLE, from No. 212 Broadway, corner of Fulton st., and under Fifth Avenue Hotel.—Advertisement.

REPUBLICAN SUCCESS CERTAIN.

THE ELECTION OF HAYES AND WHEELER BEYOND DOUBT—A TEN DAYS' STAMPEDE FROM TILDEN—THE DEMOCRATS UTTERLY DESPERATE AND DEMORALIZED—THE FIGURES WHICH THE LATEST INFORMATION GIVES.

Information from the most trustworthy sources, including our own specials and dispatches to the Republican National Committee, as late as 8 o'clock last evening, indicate that all doubt about the election of Hayes and Wheeler has been removed by the extraordinary manifestations of public sentiment during the last ten days. Especially in this City has a great change taken place, evinced by votes in public places, notably at the New-York Stock Exchange, where ten days ago there was a majority for Tilden, while on Friday the vote stood 393 for Hayes to 204 for Tilden. Many similar changes are noted, caused by the general uprising of bankers, merchants, manufacturers, and other business men, produced, in a great measure, by the general conviction that the election of Tilden means the imposition upon the country of a great burden of debt and taxation to pay war claims. The fact that Mr. Tilden's frantic call upon the Southern Democrats to save his election by agreeing not to press the war claims has been responded to by only five out of fourteen Southern States appealed to, and not by Missouri, which has already issued over two millions of claim-greenbacks, purporting to be valid claims against the United States, has added to the growing distrust.

A most unfavorable impression has also been produced by the issue by the Democratic National Committee of an address warning the country against an expected statement, which the committee say is already printed, of William M. Tweed, implicating Mr. Tilden in his plundering of New-York City. As a result of these late and universally prevalent manifestations of the tendency of the people, no confidence in a Democratic victory is shown by any one except Mr. Tilden himself and the gamblers in the pool-rooms, who have been employed to make fictitious bets to be telegraphed for effect in the country.

As a summary of the present indications, it may be stated that the projected Democratic frauds in this City will be prevented and the majority kept down to thirty-five or forty thousand, which will be more than overcome by the interior vote; that with New-York State Hayes and Wheeler are sure of one hundred and ninety-five votes, or ten more than enough, without counting nine other States in each of which an active contest is going on with the probability of success with the Republicans. If these States—South Carolina, (7,) North Carolina, (10,) Nevada, (3,) New-Jersey, (9,) Indiana, (15,) Louisiana, (8,) Connecticut, (6,) Oregon, (3,) and Florida (4)—casting 65 votes, should also vote for Hayes, he will receive 260 votes, or 75 more than enough. The best judges place Hayes' vote at certainly not less than 233 with New-York, or 198 without New-York. The most thoroughly-informed Republicans have no doubt about the general result.

GOOD FEELING AT HEAD-QUARTERS.

THE LATEST NEWS AT THE NATIONAL AND STATE COMMITTEE ROOMS—THE TALK AT THE FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL.

The Fifth Avenue Hotel was thronged last evening with anxious politicians, eager to learn the latest news received at the National and State Committee Rooms and to compare notes upon the situation. The telegrams received during the day at the National Committee Rooms were of the most encouraging character, and gave assurance of the success of the Republican ticket, even without the aid of New-York. While the Republicans were highly gratified with this news, none of them showed any disposition to yield New-York to the enemy, even if it were not needed to elect Hayes and Wheeler, and the intelligence gathered at the State Committee Rooms convinced them that there was no occasion for any such apprehension. Reports from all parts of the State indicate a marked change in favor of the Republican ticket during the last week, and give promise of the old-fashioned majorities of war times. Every day increases the probable majorities as the election draws near, and although there is but one day left to work in, all the reports agree that the State is sure for Hayes and Wheeler. A leading topic of conversation in all circles was the silly manifesto issued by Abram S. Hewitt yesterday morning, concerning a bogus confession of William M. Tweed, which he says the Republicans are going to publish on the eve of the election. All agreed that the Democratic National Committee must be in a fearful state of trepidation to resort to such a stupid card. The remarkable conduct of Tilden himself was also commented on as another evidence of the panic that has lately seized upon the Democratic leaders. When the Presidential candidate of their party found it necessary to go to Brooklyn and make a midnight speech to a Democratic rabble under the auspices of the thieving Ring of that plundered city, it was believed that his cause must have reached a desperate strait, and that his chances were hopeless. If there were any members of the Reform Democratic organization of Brooklyn, or any Democratic tax-payers of that city, who were disposed to vote for Tilden on Tuesday next, the spectacle witnessed on Saturday night, of his addressing a crowd of Ring hirelings, from a platform filled with the leaders of the Ring, must have dissuaded them from any such purpose. A Brooklyn man remarked at the Fifth Avenue Hotel last evening, that this speech of Tilden would cost him 5,000 votes in that city. The news that came in from the various districts in this City during the evening was very encouraging. Notwithstanding the Democratic Party has apparently united and is harmonious, there is still great disintegration in the ranks on the local ticket and an utter lack of enthusiasm for the Presidential candidate among either of the factions that were so lately quarreling with each other. There is a fair prospect of the election of a good share of the Republican candidates for local offices in this City, and there is nothing to indicate that the majority for the electoral ticket of the Democracy will exceed 35,000. The election of Frederick W. Seward for Senator in place of James W. Booth, deceased, is regarded as certain, and there is little doubt of the success of Gen. McCook in the Eighth and of Hon. Levi P. Morton in the Eleventh Congressional District.

ELMIRA, Nov. 5.—The last and greatest meeting of the campaign in this city was held on Saturday. The mass-meetings of the Democrats having in every instance been overshadowed by the Republicans, the Democrats made their final effort on Friday, with Gen. McClellan for their attraction, openly boasting that the meeting would be too large to be beaten. They certainly had as large a meeting as could be made by chartering all the five railroads running into the city and carrying outsiders in free, but the effect, instead of disheartening the Republicans, stimulated them to greater exertion, and the result was the greatest demonstration ever seen in the southern tier, not excepting those of 1864 and 1868. The wigwam was altogether too small for the accommodation of the afternoon assemblage, and the crowds that poured into town toward evening surprised every one, the arrangements proving wholly insufficient. Torches and transparencies gave out hours before the demand for them ceased. The line of march had to be lengthened, as the head of the procession several times came in contact with its centre. Delegations were present from all the principal towns of Steuben, Tompkins, Broome, and Tioga Counties, N. Y., and Tioga and Bradford Counties, Penn. The Cornell University students, in military dress, and the miners from McIntyre, with lamps in their hats, were present. Wagons with all kinds of devices were in line, including a load of hay drawn by six oxen, on its way to Washington, and a canal-boat mounted on wheels, with an inscription denoting that it was Tilden's device to bear him to the White House, but it would navigate Salt River instead. The line was made up of all classes of citizens, including merchants, and bankers and professional men, with many cavalry companies. Altogether the procession made by the Democrats, the previous evening, was beaten by several thousand. The line was an hour and a half passing a given point. National patriotic songs were sung constantly as the procession moved through the streets, and such enthusiasm as was manifested cannot easily be described. Meanwhile, a great meeting was organized in the Wigwam, and a great crowd listened to the speakers until midnight. The mention of the names of such men as Hon. J. C. Burrows, Gen. W. H. Gibson, and Col. A. E. Baxter as orators, being sufficient to explain the keeping up of interest until such an unusual hour.

The registry of this city shows 5,188 names. This will increase the vote of the county to near ten thousand.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CROWN POINT, Nov. 4.—At 3 o'clock to-day Gen. Hammond started with two special trains of eight cars each, to attend a mass-meeting at the Iron Mines of the Crown Point Iron Company, thirteen miles distant. Hon. L. Bradford Prince, the speaker of the day, and a band of music were on the first train. At every cross-road crowds had collected and were taken on board, until even the roofs of the cars were occupied. The railroad ascends nearly fourteen hundred feet, to the summit of the Iron Mountains, where the meeting was held. Five hundred miners were waiting on the ground, and on the arrival of the trains the greatest enthusiasm was manifested. After the meeting was organized, Senator Prince made a most comprehensive and effective speech, which was listened to with marked attention. Rev. Mr. Smith, Pastor of the Methodist Church, followed briefly, and the meeting adjourned at nightfall with cheers, which echoed through the mountains, for Hayes, loyalty, and honesty. Our working men fully understand the damaging results of Democratic success and you will hear a good account on Tuesday from Essex.

PROHIBITIONISTS OUT FOR HAYES AND WHEELER.

CORNING, N. Y., Nov. 5.—John Heermans, the Prohibition candidate for Presidential Elector in this district, and many other Prohibitionists here have announced their intention to support Hayes and Wheeler.

OHIO GOOD FOR 25,000 MAJORITY.

THE EFFECTS OF THE OCTOBER ELECTIONS—REPEATING AND OTHER FRAUDS TO BE GUARDED AGAINST—DEMOCRATS WHO DISLIKE TILDEN—INDEPENDENTS AND LIBERALS FOR GOV. HAYES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 5.—Everything indicates a majority of not less than twenty and possibly thirty thousand for Hayes and Wheeler in Ohio next Tuesday. The Democrats have lost heart since their Waterloo in October, while the Republicans have correspondingly gained in pluck and confidence. There will be a renewal in the large cities of the State of attempts at repeating and other frauds on the part of the Democrats, but the Republicans will be more energetic and vigilant than ever in protecting the ballot-box against these attempts, and in securing a fair and honest vote. Although the external manifestations of political excitement have greatly subsided since the October election, there is no abatement of deep and earnest feeling among the people, and should the weather be favorable a larger aggregate vote will probably be polled than in October, though the straight Democratic vote may be several thousands less. There is a full Cooper and Cary electoral ticket in the field, and it is likely to receive the support of a very considerable body of Democrats who dislike Tilden quite as much as they are wedded to greenback theories. Nine-tenths of the Liberals, including the independent Germans, will vote for Gov. Hayes, as will also a considerable number of anti-Tilden Democrats. Ohio may be expected to send good tidings to Republicans throughout the country next Tuesday.

CALIFORNIA CERTAIN FOR HAYES.

A COMPLETE CANVASS OF THE STATE—A GAIN OF TWO CONGRESSMEN ASSURED.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 4, 1876.

Hon. Z. Chandler:

I have just returned from a complete canvass of the State. California is certainly for Hayes. We shall undoubtedly gain two Congressmen.

GEORGE C. GORHAM.

DEMOCRATIC TELEGRAMS TO BE DISTRUSTED—THE REPUBLICANS BOUND TO CARRY THE STATE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 5.—Trust no Democratic telegrams. We have no doubt about carrying this State handsomely. Mayor Bryant's dispatch was for buncomb. The Democratic parade in this city last night was a woful failure.

ALEX. GABELL,
Chairman State Central Committee.

GOING HOME TO VOTE.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—Secretary Fish will soon leave for New-York, in order to vote in that State on Tuesday. The other members of the Cabinet have left for their respective homes for a similar purpose. All the available voters in the public departments and outside of them, including among the latter a large number of Democrats, have gone home. It is estimated that between 3,000 and 4,000 persons have thus left the city to vote.

A PROMINENT CONVERT TO HAYES.

ONE OF THE LEADING BUSINESS MEN OF AKRON, OHIO, DECLARES FOR HAYES AND WHEELER—WHY HE TAKES THIS STEP.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

AKRON, Nov. 5.—Lewis Miller, President of the Agricultural Works of C. Aultman & Co., at Canton, Ohio, and President of the Akron Iron Company, and Superintendent of the large Mower and Reaper Works of Aultman, Miller & Co., in this place, has declared for Hayes and Wheeler. Mr. Miller is a Republican, but has differed with the Republican Party on its financial policy, and had intended voting for Cooper, but the other issues which have been thrown into the canvass have caused him to take this step, believing it to be unsafe at this time to do anything that would place the control of the Government in the hands of the Democrats, to be controlled by the people of the States lately in rebellion against the lawfully constituted authorities of the nation. This makes the prominent business men of Akron nearly a unit for Hayes.

THE CONNECTICUT REPUBLICANS.

A SECOND SPEECH BY PRESIDENT WOOLSEY—THE DANGER AHEAD—TILDEN'S PUBLIC APPEARANCES ALWAYS "JUST ON THE EDGE OF EVIL, MAKING USE OF IT ADROITLY"—A CRUSHING COMPARISON WITH GOV. HAYES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARTFORD, Nov. 5—An immense meeting of business men was held last night at Allyn Hall, Hon. Calvin Day presiding. Addresses were made by ex President Woolsey, of Yale, and E. W. Stoughton, of New-York. President Woolsey, after expressing his desire for the election of Mr. Robinson as Governor, and Gen. Hawley as Congressman, said: "This is the second time in my life that I have ever addressed a political meeting. I am to say a few plain words on what may be called the risks that lie before us. The question now before the people is whether you will put the Government into the hands of a party that for the last sixteen years has been untried in legislation, and which, if we may judge by the miserable specimen it exhibited in the late session of Congress, has just failed most signally in ability. I think I never read of a session where the members exhibited such universal incompetency." After arguing that the only hope of a stable currency was in Republican success, the speaker continued: "I have felt for a long time that there is danger in committing the Government to those who do not believe that this is one country, one nation inseparable, and which no action of one single State can rend asunder. If you look back over the history of the country you will find the old doctrines of the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions coming up in the shape of nullification. In the providence of God a firm Democratic President affirmed the doctrine that this is one country, and that the State has no power to nullify. This put an end to the nullification business for several years. Then it came up again, at last, in a still gloomier form—a confederation of seceding States, resulting in the sacrifice of thousands of lives and millions of money and the uncertainties and trials of the past twelve years. Is this heresy rooted out? What do we see now? We see a gentleman, estimable in many respects, offered to the people as a Presidential candidate, and coming forward with a lie in his right hand. The United States, he says, are not a nation. Suppose he is President and a State makes trouble. According to his sincere convictions, repeatedly expressed, can he coerce that State? He has denied his right to do it. Is it not right to suppose that he will carry out his own views? It seems to me that there is the same situation as when that paltriest of Presidents, Buchanan, was in power and saw the States secede, and thought he could do nothing. Would you like to have Buchanan over again? Would not you think it would involve some risk, some damage to the national credit, some occasion for alarm? With respect to the Constitution, I understand Tilden to be identical with Buchanan. Is it safe to trust to a party, two-thirds of which believes, in spite of all evidence and the history of the past, that this is no nation; and to a President who does not believe in the right to coerce a rebellious State? For my part, I want to see the nation grow strong and compact, held together by som firm bond, instead of being in detached masses without strength or unity."

The question o civil service reform was next discussed, the speaker holding that the history of the Democratic Party proved that nothing was to be hoped from it in this direction, and that i was the Republican Party that initiated the movement which has called out the cry of reform In conclusion, he said: "These are some of the great risks which the country has to run if it allows the Democratic Party to come into power. I will not say that the person who is to fill the offices, if the party comes into power, is another element either of fear or of hope. I shall not compare the two candidates extensively. I will only say that Mr. Tilden, whenever he has appeared in public life, has always been just on the edge of evil; not directly involved in it, perhaps, but making use of it most adroitly and with his great ability. In all the actions of Mr. Hayes you see honesty, simplicity, steadiness of principle, love of country, indifference to office—that is, not seeking office—but having the office seeking him, which I take it is the true way. In all private and public positions he has been tried and has been found solid gold. [Immense and continued applause.] He has not made any pledges. I do not believe that he ever made one that he did not intend to fulfill. [Applause.] He is not a man to be crushed by the weight of bad principles in the party. He will have his own way so far as not to be entangled in compromises, following the Constitution—not dictating, but following an independent course, and letting other persons do as they please. The Republican Party is shown to be worthy of confidence by the actions of the men who have been treated most ill in the party. You would think that such men as Jewell, Bristow, Jacob D. Cox and Schurz have had grievances enough to say "we will not do anything for the party." You would think that some of them would go over to the other party. They have not felt authorized to lay up bitter feelings, but have given themselves heartily to the cause. To my mind, the great party, with all its faults, is still noble in principle. It has done nobly in the past, and will do nobly in the future."

MR. MORRILL IN PHILADELPHIA.

SPEECH BEFORE THE UNION LEAGUE CLUB—AN INTERESTING CHAPTER OF ANTE-WAR HISTORY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 5.—Secretary Morrill, in his speech at the Union League Club to-night, read a letter dated Feb. 11, 1861, from the then Secretary of the Treasury to the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives. The letter calls attention to the pressing needs of the Government and says:

"In the present condition of the country it would be impossible to borrow the money needed to meet the wants of the Treasury unless at a discount which would seriously impair the public credit, without some pledge in addition to that of the faith of the Government. Several of the States, in accordance with a suggestion contained in my letter to your committee on the 18th of January last, have offered to superadd a pledge of that faith to that of the United States for the redemption of any bonds it may issue to the amount of the public moneys deposited with them respectively for safe keeping, under the act of 2d of June, 1836. If Congress will authorize these offers to be accepted, the money required to meet liabilities due, and to fall due before the 4th of March, can be obtained at par. If the authority is not granted, I am satisfied it can only be procured on terms which would be exceedingly disadvantageous to the Government, and in the highest degree detrimental to its credit."

The amount about which so much distress was shown was about two millions. It was desired before the 4th of March, on which day Mr. Lincoln was inaugurated. To such a pass had the public necessities and the credit of the Government come by Democratic financiering! This condition was contrasted by Secretary Morrill with the present, when our credit is equal to the best in the world.

THE TRUTH BRAVELY UTTERED.

SPEECH OF GEN. HARLAN IN LOUISVILLE—WHAT THE SUCCESS OF TILDEN WILL COST THE SOUTH—THE FIRST REFORM DEMANDED—SUPPRESSION OF THE KU KLUX AND WHITE LEAGUE—THE GREATEST FREEDOM FOR EVERY MAN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 5.—The Republicans held their final meeting of the campaign here last night. Ex-Secretary Bristow presided and made a speech, setting forth in strong, unmistakable language his views of the crisis. Here, at his home, as in other States where has spoken, he stoutly maintains that the South can suffer no misfortune so great from any other cause as would surely follow the triumph of the Democratic ticket. He held that the South brought their troubles on themselves; that no contingency could make the turning over of the country to them, with all their cherished hatred, anything but a calamity, under the influence of which the entire country would groan. Party excitement ran high, and when Gen. Harlan spoke, his intense words of "war to the knife" for Republicanism were listened to with the interest that tells how strongly the old Union men of the South feel the danger of a Democratic victory. Among other things, he said of the Democrats: "They boldly charge that the triumph of the Republican Party will be the ruin of the South. They seek every possible way to fire the Southern heart just as they did in 1861. They denounce all as traitors to the South who, living upon Southern soil, dare advocate the principles of a party which saved their country from destruction. Many will still hold the doctrine of the divine right of Southern Democrats to rule the South. They are still engaged in the Cotton States in the work of making it hot for every man who does not bow the knee to the Southern Democracy. If a Southern Republican happens to have been born in the North, and settles in the Cotton States, he is denounced as a carpet-bagger. If he dares to speak out boldly and defiantly the political opinion which he holds, the Southern Democracy is the enemy of free speech. It is the friend and apologist of the Ku Klux and White Leagues. It the enemy of emigration and education. It is the enemy of nationality. It loves a State more than it does a country. It loves the flag only when it is borne aloft by Democratic hands. Its triumph in this contest will erect an impassible barrier between South and capital immigration from north. Its success now will be a notice to quit to every white Republican in most of the lower Southern States, and it will result in the subjugation of the entire colored race of the South to the domination and will of the Democratic leaders. It will be a triumph of the shot-gun policy which will sound the death-knell of Southern property for many years to come."

In closing he said: "Fellow-citizens, when it comes to pass in this land that a public speaker cannot refer to the trials and struggles of the loyal people of the country, North and South, without giving offense to those who hear such sentiments, and without being charged with waving the bloody shirt, then let us cease decorating the graves of the dead soldiers of the Union, and like men admit that those who desired the dissolution of the Union were wright and we wrong. If fidelity to the principles of the Republican Party be treason to the South, we glory in such treason. We of the Republican Party are true friends of the South. We do not seek to oppress any people of the South. We maintain the rights of all, of every race. We recognize the right of free speech. We are enemies of the Kuklux and the White Leagues. We are for protection to all in every right secured by law. We recognize the right of every citizen to go where he pleases and speak his sentiments freely, without let or hindrance. We recognize the rights of the States, but we claim that paramount allegiance is due to the country. We believe this to be a nation, and insist upon the right and duty of the nation to protect all the people against lawless combinations, when they are too powerful to be suppressed in any other way than by the strong arm of the nation. When the nation becomes unwilling and unable to do that, then will the American people deserve the execration of the civilized world. The first and most essential reform we demand is That the Democratic Kuklux, White Leaguers, and riflemen shall take their hands off the throats of those in the South who were true to the country in her hour of peril. We demand that persecution of Union men in the South shall cease. We demand that the work of reform shall go forward until everywhere in all the land each citizen shall be accorded any right which, under the laws and under the Constitution, belongs to every other citizen. We demand that this nation shall stamp the life out of of every combination or organization which defies the power of a State and seeks to oppress the citizen because of race, color or political opinions."

THE CAMPAIGN IN PENNSYLVANIA.

THE WORK OF PREPARATION COMPLETE—A HANDSOME MAJORITY FOR HAYES AND WHEELER—REPUBLICANS IMPATIENT FOR ELECTION DAY—A MAJORITY OF 25,000 AND UPWARD PROMISED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 5.—The work of preparation for Tuesday's election is as nearly as possible completed in Pennsylvania. There is nothing remaining but such arrangements for the day as can be perfected to-morrow, and such personal efforts as may be possible and useful on the closing day of the canvass. The information from all parts of the State is full and complete, and shows the most conclusive reasons for absolute confidence that the State will give a handsome majority for Hayes. There was never a better prospect thirty-six hours before the opening of the polls that the State would give a decisive Republican result than there is this year. The feeling throughout the State is more intense than at any time since the close of the war, and Republicans are impatiently waiting for the time to vote. There will be no indifference, and no staying from the polls. There is no room for doubt as to the result; the majority is the only matter of conjecture. The prospect is that the Republican majority outside the City of Philadelphia will be very considerable, and the State as a whole, including this city, may be depended upon to give the Hayes and Wheeler ticket from twenty-five thousand upward.

DEPARTURE OF CENTENNIAL VISITORS—HARDLY A VOTER FROM A DOUBTFUL STATE IN PHILADELPHIA—THE ZEAL AND ACTIVITY OF REPUBLICANS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 5.—The interest is so much turned to the election that the Centennial Exhibition is being forgotten apparently, for it is observed that the visitors are rapidly leaving the city since last night, so that some large houses are reported to be almost deserted. There is hardly a voter from a doubtful State who will be found in the Exhibition Tuesday. Measures were taken to give warning by means of posters and small handbills, but the interest is so great that this seems now to have been but superabundant caution. The information from New-York has been most encouraging, and has added much to the zeal and activity of Republicans. Democrats are trying to divert attention from their recently discovered attempt at fraud, but are only getting deeper into trouble. Pennsylvania may be depended on to do her full duty.

REBELLION RAMPANT IN CAROLINA.

THE RIFLE CLUBS SEARCHING FOR HELPLESS NEGROES—ADVICE OF NORTHERN LEADERS DISREGARDED—ARMED MEN DISFRANCHISING PEACEABLE CITIZENS—THE COLORED MEN QUIET AND DETERMINED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHARLESTON, Nov. 5.—About two weeks ago Gen. Wade Hampton and other shot-gun leaders in this State received letters from the Tilden Bureau in New-York and from the National Democratic Committee, begging them in the strongest terms to see to it that their lawless followers refrained from further outrages upon the negroes. One of these letters, which has come into the possession of a certain Republican here, contains the following passage: "Everything depends upon you being quiet in South Carolina. Another Hamburg affair and we are lost." In accordance with these instructions, all the prominent Democrats in this State have, for several days past, been working early and late to keep the reckless young men of the party quiet. They have succeeded in preventing any public outrage or serious riot, but the secret intimidation of helpless negroes in the remote county districts has gone on as before. As it is perhaps unnecessary to state, the rifle clubs maintained, or appeared to maintain the peace, because they feared that by doing otherwise they would injure their cause in the North. To-night, however, as I am creditably informed, all restrictions have been removed, as it is not believed that reports of any outrages which may now occur will reach the North in time to hurt the Democratic cause. The United States Marshal and others have received information from the most reliable sources which leaves no doubt that the rifle clubs will commence riding the country to-morrow morning, and will continue doing so until the polls have closed on Tuesday.

In this city, and in other large towns, hundreds of young men have been supplied by the Democratic Committee with heavy navy pistols. These they wear in belts hung about their waists. To-day I have met dozens of them so armed. Gen. Ruger has been informed by a number of United States officers that the whites were under arms in some of the upper county districts, and that trouble might be looked for to-morrow night. In consequence of these reports he has doubled the force in some counties, and hopes that serious outbreaks may be prevented. Gov. Chamberlain shares this hope, still he and all the other Republicans here are very anxious. The Democrats boast loudly that they will carry the State for Tilden at all hazards, and if they were only confident of that gentleman's success they would not scruple to fire on the United States troops. They are all well armed, drilled, and organized, and many of them crazy with drink. Nothing but their fear of a Republican victory keeps them in check. No man in the North can understand the dangers of the situation here. The State is one vast powder mine—a spark would set it on fire.

The wildest reports have been flying about all day. At one time it was stated that four negroes had been killed while attending church on James Island, in Charleston Harbor, and later a rumor was current that a riot had occurred in the town of Union; that two negroes and one white man had been killed, and a company of United States troops fired upon. Both these reports proved to be untrue. No one was hurt on James' Island, but in the Union fight one negro was injured. The troops took no part in the affair. In the midst of this excitement, the negroes are behaving with remarkable discretion. They are quiet, but determined to exercise their rights. If they are allowed to do so, South Carolina will give Hayes and Wheeler a majority of at least twenty thousand. Mr Tilden can only succeed by murder and bloodshed.

THE WHITE LEAGUE OF LOUISIANA.

APPLICATION TO HAVE A NUMBER OF THEM APPOINTED DEPUTY UNITED STATES MARSHALS REFUSED BY MARSHAL PITKIN—THE REASONS FOR IT—THE LEAGUE SAID TO BE "PREPARING FOR ACTION."

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 5.—The Chairman of the Democratic Committee, Patton, made application on Saturday to Marshal Pitkin for the appointment of special Deputy Marshals in New-Orleans, for Tuesday, and submitted a list of several hundred White Leaguers. The Marshal refused to appoint them for several reasons: first, because, as the published correspondence states, the application made under section 2,021 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was unnecessary, "a previous application having been made to this office on the 15th ult. by two citizens residing in such city or town. Upon that application I proceeded to act, and had so far fulfilled the statute and the need to which the statute addresses itself, that after due deliberation upon your communication and its inclosures, I find myself unable to respond save by a denial of your application."

He furthermore says: "In view of this responsibility, I cannot reasonably be expected to accredit as deputies, to assist me in conserving the peace at the polls of New-Orleans, men who, two years ago, wantonly rallied with arms in that city, shot down and dispersed her Police, subverted the State Government, and obdurately forbade peace until the United States reassured it by military force. I conceive that I should be grossly derelict, as a servant of the United States, were I to commission persons to preserve the peace who did not scruple, at so recent a date, to convert that peace to bloody anarchy."

Further on he says: "I cannot appoint men to whom I might have to surrender the peace which deputies in the present case are selected to defend. Permit me to state here, that the less aggressive element of those whose political chief you are can doubtless render this district of the United States material service on election day, without severally receiving a commission from me. Those whose names your list presents will, if deserving of confidence as Deputy Marshals, be efficient contributions to whatever posse comitatus it may be necessary that I should embody. Recourse may thus be avoided to the only means by which the peace of this district, whenever in extreme hazard, is usually re-established, to wit, the military arm of the United States. In earnest of my effort to maintain the peace, I have selected as deputies persons who have never been in any wise chargeable with a violent purpose against that peace, or against the freedom and security of voters. They are men who have been or will be so thoroughly instructed in their duties under the law as to secure the purity to the ballot, freedom and safety to the voter, and tranquility at the polls. They have not been recruited for this service by the Republican State Committee, with which body, indeed, I have never held a word of conference upon the subject. They have been chosen in my own way, and under a grave sense of my responsibility, not to either political party, but to the Government, whose executive officer I am."

The excitement is great over the refusal, and the White League is said to be preparing for action.

THE FEDERAL ELECTION LAW.

CONFERENCE BETWEEN THE MUNICIPAL AND UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES REGARDING THE ARREST OF ILLEGAL VOTERS—THE CITY AUTHORITIES AGREE TO SUSTAIN THE UNITED STATES MARSHALS IN DISCHARGING THEIR DUTIES.

A conference was held last night between the Municipal and United States authorities in relation to the matter of enforcing the United States Election law in this City at the election to-morrow. The City was represented by Mayor Wickham, Corporation Counsel Whitney, and the Board of Police Commissioners. The United States was represented by Mr. John I. Davenport, Supervisor of Elections; District Attorney Bliss and United States Marshal Fiske. The question at issue was, whether the United States Marshal had authority to arrest persons simply attempting to cast illegal votes. It was claimed by the Mayor, upon advice of Corporation Counsel Whiting, that the simple attempting to vote was not enough. The man must first be allowed to cast his ballot before he could be arrested. Upon this question there was a long argument. Mr. Davenport and District Attorney Bliss stated that the United States law gave Marshals the right to arrest for the simple attempt at illegal voting. The warrants which would be placed in the Marshal's hands, were drawn to cover fraudulent registering. They could be served to-day if the Supervisor so directed. The crime had already been committed. But it was not the intention to make any arrests except in cases where the crime of fraudulent registering should be followed up by an attempt to cast illegal ballots. Corporation Counsel Whitney at length yielded the point which he had made and went home without reading the opinion he had written, setting forth the points of his argument. The result of the conference was an agreement on the part of the City authorities to act in accordance with the United States law. The importance of this agreement lies in the fact that it will prevent any conflict on election day between United States Marshals and City Police. Had the Democratic City authorities adhered to their original opinions, the police would not only have refused to assist United States Marshals in making arrests of persons attempting to vote illegally, but would even have attempted to compel the United States authorities to allow persons intending to cast illegal votes to deposit them before they could be arrested. Any such action would, of course, have been resisted by the United States' authorities, and, necessarily, serious disturbances must have taken place. As it stands now, the police will do all in their power to assist the United States Marshals in enforcing the Federal Election law. The conference took place at the residence of Police Commissioner Smith, on Forty-first street, and continued from 10 o'clock last night until after 1 o'clock this morning. It was held at the request of Mayor Wickham, and was unasked for by the United States authorities. It is asserted that Mayor Wickham's idea in asking the conference was to frighten the Supervisor into a withdrawal of his intention to enforce the United States law. It was stated by Police Commissioner South, that the report was current in Democratic circles that 20,000 warrants had been issued, which would be served in such a way as to prevent men legally entitled to vote from doing so. He was assured by the supervision of his error that he or any body else was at liberty to go to the Supervisor's office to-day and examine all the warrants. Furthermore the Supervisor asserted that he was perfectly willing to have the name of every man covered by the warrants published in any or all of the New-York newspapers. It was not the intention to spring a trap upon the Democrats. The Supervisors' sole purpose was to secure a fair election.

THE NEW-JERSEY CAMPAIGN.

REPUBLICAN MEETINGS IN CALIFON AND HIGH BRIDGE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HIGH BRIDGE, Nov. 5.—Large and enthusiastic Republican meetings were held at Califon on Saturday afternoon, and in the evening at High Bridge. Major D. A. Pelloubet and E. A. Ranson, Esq., of Jersey City, and T. I. Hoffman, of Clinton, delivered telling speeches on both occasions. The sham reformers, Tilden, Clark, and Pidcock, are fast losing ground in this formerly Democratic stronghold. Where the characters of Clark and Pidcock are best known their vote will be lightest. Although money is being freely used in their interest, they have succeeded in rallying to their support only the venal and corrupt.

THE EXTRADITION TREATY.

NO NEGOTIATIONS FOR ITS RENEWAL PENDING WITH THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—Secretary Fish says no negotiations are pending with the Government of Great Britain for the renewal of the Extradition treaty, nor is it the purpose of this Government to take the initiatory steps necessary to revive the old treaty or negotiate a new one. The treaty was abrogated by the act of the British Government, and any proposition for a new Extradition treaty must come from that Government.

LOOK OUT FOR PASTERS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

GOSHEN, Nov. 5.—Pasters of the Tilden Electoral ticket have been received in this village. The object is to paste them over our ticket and retain the Republican heading.

THE TROOPS IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

CHARLESTON, Nov. 5.—The distribution of United States troops throughout the State will be completed to-morrow. Four companies will be assigned in squads to the polling places of this city and along the coast; but the bulk of Gen. Ruger's force will occupy the upper counties.

SOUTHERN DEMOCRATS.

BOGUS ADDRESSES FROM SOUTH CAROLINA.

HOW NORTHERN DEMOCRATS ARE HUMBUGGED—DEMOCRATIC CAMPAIGN TRICKS—A SPECIMEN FRAUD—BRIBERY ATTEMPTED IN CHARLESTON COUNTY—THE MEN WHO SUPPORT "TILDEN AND REFORM."

From Our Special Correspondent.

CHARLESTON, Wednesday, Nov. 1, 1876.

During the present political canvass the Democrats of South Carolina have deluged the North and West with statements, declarations, resolutions, appeals, explanations, and every other form of campaign document which the ingenuity of a most ingenious people could devise. All this political literature has been telegraphed at the expense of the Associated Press, whose agent in this city has prostituted his office, which should be one of strict impartiality, to aid his party friends and cover up the crimes of the shot-gun leaders. It is a notorious fact that every statement made by the Democratic Committee, no matter how false and malicious, has found circulation through the channel indicated, while the Republican leaders have been denied the right of saying a single word, even in their own defense. To give the people of the North some idea of how this branch of the Democratic campaign in the South is conducted, I need only refer to the so-called address of "Northern men, residents of Charleston, to the people of the United States," which was telegraphed from here a day or two since. The call for the meeting from which the address emanated was as follows:

"The Northern-born residents and citizens of Charleston are invited to meet at the Charleston Hotel on Friday evening at 7:30 o'clock, for the purpose of considering the condition of affairs in South Carolina, and of preparing an address to the people of the United States."

In accordance with this invitation, more than a hundred gentlemen assembled at the place indicated. Many of them were Republicans, and for this reason were allowed to take no part in the proceedings. They were coolly informed that the call was intended for Democrats only, and that all others would have to retire. When all the Republicans had left the room, the persons who remained adopted the address to the people of the United States previously prepared, and it was telegraphed to the North as "the statement of the Northern-born residents and citizens of Charleston." Of course, it denied that the Democrats had ever intimidated the negroes, and stated that all the race conflicts which have occurred in South Carolina, including the Hamburg and Ellenton massacres, were caused by "the corrupt and ambitious Republicans." An examination of the names of the men who signed this monstrously false statement proves beyond all question that most of them were rebels or rebel sympathizers during the war. All the others are foreigners. In short, like the signers of all Southern campaign documents, the gentlemen whose names are appended to the Charleston address pretend to be what they are not.

REBEL SYMPATHIZERS.

The first name on the list is that of C. N. Averill. He is a discharged Custom-house official; lived here before and during the war, and was a rebel sympathizer. P. P. Toale, who signs as being a native of New-York City, was born in Ireland, and has been a Democrat ever since he knew anything about politics. A. Hammerschmidt, who also pretends, in the address, to come from New-York City, is a German, who keeps a lager beer saloon, patronized, by members of the rifle clubs. The next man on the list, Mr. W. N. Jackson, came to Charleston from New-York thirty years ago, and has lived here ever since. He was a warm rebel sympathizer. R. P. Southerd, who signs from Boston, Mass., has not been two months in the State. He depends upon the Democrats for his bread and butter. Edmund Bull, who writes Goshen, Orange County, New-York, after his name, has been thirty years in South Carolina, and calls himself "a Carolina gentleman." Leonard Chapin, the next man on the list, signs from Massachusetts. He has lived in South Carolina nearly all his life, and married the distinguished authoress of a seditious work entitled The Young Rebel. Mr. A. Butterfield, who signs from New-Hampshire, lived here for many years before the war, and disgraced the Granite State by serving with distinction in the rebel Army. J. S. Terry, who is now particular to state that he hails from Hempstead, Long Island, N. Y., was a citizen of this State before the war, and sympathized with the man who fought against the Union. The same is true of E. H. Gardner, who signs the address from Connecticut. Mr. A. H. Hayden, who also claims to be from Connecticut, has lived in South Carolina for nearly forty years. Louis Benedict, who signs from New-York, is a German who knew that his business would be ruined if he refused to put his name to the address. This was also the case with E. H. Weihrmann, a German, who appears in the list as being a native of New-York. The gentlemen who follow him, Messrs. Michael Heward and Michael Conlon, sign from Pittsburg and New-York. They were both born in Ireland, and they have always been friends of "the Lost Cause." The next name on the list is that of A. Dotty, Sr. This gentleman lived here before the war, and has always sympathized with the Southern Democrats. Carl Berlin, who appears as from New-York, is a Swede and a great favorite among the unreconstructed young ladies of Charleston. L. B. Doolittle, who signs from New-Haven, Conn., has lived in South Carolina nearly all his life. He is on terms of the warmest intimacy with all the ex-rebel leaders here. John Garvin, who signs after him, is a respectable Irishman who knows nothing about the politics of America or the political condition of South Carolina. Mr. W. A. Rook, who signs for New-York, lived here before and during the war. He has always sympathized with the Southern Democrats, and made torpedoes to blow up the United States ships in Charleston Harbor. J. B. Steele, who also appears as from New-York, is well-known here as a rebel Democrat. H. W. Kingsman, who signs from New-Hampshire has lived in South Carolina for fifteen or twenty years, and has always been a Democrat. D. McPherson, who presided at the meeting, and who signs from Maine, was born in the British Provinces, and has never been naturalized. He has lived in South Carolina for years, and has always been a pronounced friend of "the Southern cause." Mr. R. S. Long, who signs from Philadelphia, Penn., was in the rebel Army, and fought bravely to overthrow the United States Government. Q. A. Damon, who signs after him, and who claims to be from Boston, Mass., lived here during the war, was a warm rebel sympathizer, and an aid of the rebel conscript officer. H. E. Lord, who also appears as coming from Boston, Mass., is in the employ of Mr. Chairman McPherson. He was not at the meeting. This completes the list of the "Northern-born citizens of Charleston," with the exception of five young men who are clerks in the employ of Democrats, and about whose record I know nothing. The petty trick which they have attempted to put upon the country is indeed worthy of "Tilden, Hampton, and Reform."

DEMOCRATIC CORRUPTION.

In nearly every speech made during the canvass which is supported by such contemptible frauds as this address of bogus Northern men, Wade Hampton has stated that the Democrats based their demand for votes upon their desire to reform the State and National Governments. While he was making these public declarations, however, his friends were privately trying, by every corrupt and dishonest means known to the lowest political wire-puller, to carry the large and populous County of Charleston. This county usually gives a Republican majority of from eight to ten thousand, and the Democrats knew that they could not hope to elect their State ticket without overcoming, or at least greatly reducing, this majority. To effect their object they attempted every trick known to men of their kind, and invented several new ones, but all to no purpose. Then they tried bribery. The honest, pure, and high-minded friends of "the spotless Hampton," the men who lead the South Carolina movement for "Tilden and Reform," actually tried to buy Republicans. They forgot all they have ever said against Sheriff Bowen and his friend, the well-known District Attorney Buttz; they forgot that they have accused them of every crime in the decalogue; they forgot that they have called one a murderer and the other a thief, and they were willing to extend the right hand of fellowship to them—their pure and spotless Democratic hand —if they would sell out their party and turn over Charleston County to "Tilden, Hampton, and Reform." Bowen was offered $10,000 if he would do this, and he refused. He has been called a rascal by every Democrat in South Carolina, but he was not so low as the men who tried to bribe him. H. C.

THE SHOT-GUN CANVASS.

THE SOUTHERN QUESTION IN A NUT-SHELL—FACTS FOR HONEST CITIZENS—HOW A DEMOCRATIC VICTORY WOULD END—WHAT THE REBEL LEADERS HOPE—THE NEGROES APPEALING TO THE NORTH FOR PROTECTION.

From our Special Correspondent.

CHARLESTON, Friday, Nov. 3, 1876.

In 1860, when Abraham Lincoln was elected President of the United States, the question of peace or war became the leading one in American politics. The minority of the voters of the country, headed by Jefferson Davis, Toombs, of Georgia, Yancy, of Alabama, and the same Wade Hampton who now leads the shot-gun Democracy of South Carolina, would not submit to the arbitration of the ballot-box, and wanted war. Their desire was gratified, and a fight ensued between Southern aristocracy and American democracy. The democracy—the majority of the American people—triumphed, and their triumph was a double one, for they won not only with the ballot, but with the bullet. The one great result of this double victory was the emancipation of four million men who had been held in slavery by the aristocrats of the South, and the one great question in American politics to-day is, Shall that emancipation stand, or was the war for freedom a failure? This is the issue; twist it or turn it as you will, the great question still remains—Are the negroes of the South to be political slaves or political freemen? Wade Hampton, following in the footsteps of Toombs, of Georgia, and all the old rebel leaders, places himself at the head of an army of lawless riflemen, and declares that the black man shall vote as he dictates or not at all. The leaders of the Republican Party, on the other hand, again face their old opponents, and, asserting that the war was not in vain, demand that the negroes be allowed to freely exercise all the rights of citizenship. The question must be settled by the voters of the country on the 7th of the month. If Rutheford B. Hayes is elected President by the Republicans—by the law-abiding masses of the country—the political freedom of the negro will be assured; but if, on the other hand, the shot-gun policy is victorious, and the men who fought to overthrow the National Government and break up the Union succeed in electing Samuel J. Tilden, then the black men of the South must remain in political slavery until they are freed by another war. More than this, if Mr. Tilden is elected to the Presidency, no Republican's life will be safe in the Cotton States; thousands of men, women, and children will be driven from their homes and forced to find a living in other parts of the country. These are simple truths, and still they may be doubted by many Northern readers; for no man who has not passed the last six weeks among the Democrats of South Carolina can fully understand what would be the disastrous consequences of Tilden's election. His success would be a national calamity, and when I make this statement I only echo the sentiments of all the thoughtful, law-abiding men in the South. These men are now anxious and tearful, as were the old Union men of the South just before the war, and they have good reason to be alarmed.

To prove this I need only refer to the political situation in Georgia and Mississippi. In the first the Democrats triumphed by fraud; in the second by intimidation, outrage and murder. They now have control of the Governments of both of the States named and they have driven all of the active Republicans out of them. It has been proved beyond all question that no pronounced Republican can live in Mississippi. There are districts in that State like the county of Warren, of which Vicksburg is the county seat, where the negroes have a majority of seventeen to one, yet the whites, ever since the Vicksburg massacre, have elected their ticket without opposition. The black men never go near the polls. They dare not vote. In Georgia there are districts where the Republicans never cast a vote. The negroes have a majority of several hundred in the voting precincts on the South Carolina line, but in the last election there was not one Republican vote cast in any of them. Turning to South Carolina, the Democrats are found in armed opposition to the State and National authorities, for as I have already stated in a former letter, the disbanded rifle clubs have all reorganized under the title of social or benevolent associations.

This is the political situation in the South under a Republican National Administration. What will it be if the Democrats elect their President? There is only one answer to such a question. No Republican can live here. The white supporters of Hayes will have to leave the county or be killed; the negroes will be reduced to a condition very little better than that which they occupied twenty years ago. Mr. Tilden and the Democrats of the North, even if they desire to do so will be entirely unable to control or influence their friends in the South. The Democrats here know that Tilden can only hope to succeed by their efforts, by the vote of "a solid South," and they will demand the complete control of the National Government as their reward. No one who knows their temper can doubt that Tilden and his Northern friends would be forced into complying with their wishes. No one who understands their character can doubt that their ascendancy would put an end to all political freedom in the South. Even now, in South Carolina, Wade Hampton, "Hamburg Massacre" Butler, and "Unreconstructed" Gary are boldly asserting that, no matter what the result of the State election may be, Chamberlain and the other Republican leaders will have to resign their positions if Tilden is elected. A few days ago, in one of his incendiary speeches, Gary said "Chamberlain may be elected Governor, but by —— he shall never take his seat. We are sure to elect Tilden any way, and them carpet-baggers will have to travel." In these and many similar utterances Gen. Gary only expresses the sentiments of the South Carolina Democracy. Upon every street corner in Charleston and Columbia, within the past few days, I have heard them speculating upon the result of the Presidential contest, and declaring that if Tilden was elected Wade Hampton would be Governor of South Carolina, no matter what the Republican majority might be. There can be no doubt that they would carry their threats into effect. If the leading Republicans escaped from the State with their lives they would be fortunate. Knowing all these things, it is no wonder that they are anxious and troubled. They join the black men of the South in asking the people of the North to protect them in their rights, to assure to them their political liberty. If Governor Hays is elected they are safe. If Mr. Tilden succeeds, they must do one of three things, give up the right of citizenship, leave the State, or run the risk of being killed. H. C.

THE CLOSING EXHIBITION.

PROSPECTS FOR RETAINING THE MAIN BUILDING AS A PERMANENT INSTITUTION—THE CLOSING DAY FIREWORKS.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 5.—At a conference on the Grounds yesterday of the friends and projectors of the permanent exhibition movement, the most encouraging reports were received as to its probable success. Applications for space continue to pour in upon the gentlemen appointed to receive them, and already aggregate considerably over four hundred. The number includes scores of the larger exhibitors in Machinery Hall, Agricultural Hall and the Main Building, with a sprinkling of prominent manufacturers of large cities not heretofore represented at the Exhibition. Among some of the foreign exhibitors a more favorable disposition to co-operate appears to be manifest, and though Mr. Petit, in charge of the Main Building, has made no request to them to remain, several have cabled home for instructions. The financial prospects of the undertaking are reported to be such as to give reasonable assurance that it will be carried through without delay. It is proposed to heat the Main Building, and supply it with such conveniences as the necessities of the Winter season may dictate. A meeting of gentlemen interested in the new company will be held to-morrow morning, when the time and place for a public meeting of the citizens of Philadelphia to aid the project will be determined, with a view to perfecting the organization of the company and applying for a charter as soon as possible.

The scaffolding and other accessories of the arrangements for the great pyrotechnic display, by Messrs. Brock, of London, and Jackson, of Philadelphia, on Thursday evening, which is to be the prelude to the closing day ceremonies on Friday, are being rapidly put in position on George's Hill, where a large force of workmen are employed for the purpose. The display will be more extensive than any that have preceded it. One of the chief features will be a pair of fiery wheels fifty feet in diameter, and the largest of the kind ever used in America, arranged to produce the most brilliant chromatrope effects.

The President has accepted the invitation of the Centennial Commission to formally close the Exhibition on the 10th inst. He will be accompanied by the members of his Cabinet. On Thursday the Commission and the Board of Finance will entertain the foreign Commissioners of the Exhibition at dinner in St. George's Hall, together with other distinguished guests.

DEATH IN A SCHOOL-ROOM.

From the Milwaukee Sentinel, Nov. 1.

An agonizing rumor that a child of tender years had been whipped to death at the Fourth Ward, or Plankinton, School was current about the streets yesterday noon, and created considerable excitement in police circles. On reaching the school it was found that the Principal, Mr. Lawrence, was absent on business connected with the sad affair. He had been called into the room just as the child was dying, and had not witnessed anything that had occurred between the teacher and the little one. An assistant teacher was consulted, and from her these facts were gleaned: The little boy, Herbert Booth, son of Mr. George Booth, resident at No. 140 Fifteenth street, a lad seven years of age, had come to school rather late and had subsequently hurried back home to get his slate, having forgotten it in his haste to get to school. Nothing unusual occurred after this until about 11 o'clock, little over an hour from his return to his desk. Then his teacher, Miss Sarah W. Chapman, daughter of Mr. Silas Chapman, observed that he was making a noise and that it diverted the attention of the children from their studies. She called him up on disobedience of an order to keep quiet and had given him four or five blows with a light rattan when he fell into a fit and died. The assistant spoke very highly of Miss Chapman as a teacher and remarked, incidentally, that her uniform patience and kindness in the treatment of the children under her care had often been a subject of notice among her associates.

At the residence of Mr. Booth, the officer and the reporter were received by Mr. Samuel Canner, an uncle of the child, who said the child was of a tender, sensitive nature, and it was the general opinion that its death was the result of the excitement incident to his attendance at school during the forenoon. Herbert had risen as usual, partaken of breakfast with the family, and had assisted in dressing a younger brother or sister before going to school. His race for his slate and the nervous disturbance consequent upon punishment by the teacher, had resulted in an apoplectic fit and death. The family had no fault to find with Miss Chapman, and viewed the occurrence as one that might have happened in the home circle under no greater provocation than that at school. Mr. Canner had carefully examined the hands of the deceased, and had failed to discover any marks upon them. There was a slight abrasion of the skin on the upper side of one of his thumbs, but this might have been caused at some time previous to his death.

The reporter resolved to visit the residence of Miss Chapman and get a statement of the circumstances attending the death of her pupil. Miss Chapman and her mother were on the point of paying a second visit to the residence of the Booth family, but very kindly returned and afforded the writer ample time to get a correct version of the affair. Miss Chapman had detected the little fellow in the act of making noises with his mouth, to the annoyance of those about him, and had called him to account. He laughed, and, very carelessly, it seemed to her, repeated the noises. Thinking it necessary to punish him for his disobedience, she summoned him out into the hall and administered four or five light blows upon the inside of one of his hands. He made no resistance, but cried more out of mortification than from pain. On his release he walked to his seat, sobbing all the way, and the teacher observed that he settled down into a seat near the one he occupied, and assumed a recumbent position. She hurried to his side, and found that he was ill. A boy near by expressed an opinion that the child had fainted, and word was immediately sent up to Mr. Lawrence, who appeared and assisted in bathing the boy's temples with cold water, and applying ammonia. Dr. Carlton was sent for, but arrived too late to be of service. The little one died in a few moments after he reached the seat. The parents were sent for, but Mrs. Booth was too ill to come. The remains of her boy were conveyed home in a hack. The pupils of the grade under the care of Miss Chapman were dismissed and the room closed for the day. Miss Chapman thought the boy's death was the result of great nervous excitement and his effort to restrain his grief. He gave one or two sobs at the close and fell back dead. He was quite heated when he returned from the chase after his slate, and was very restless up to the time he was called. His actions of the forenoon were in strange contrast with his usually quiet deportment, and this leads to the supposition that he was subject to some functional derangement.

Dr. Carlton could give no positive opinion as to the cause of the boy's death—nothing short of a post-mortem examination would determine the matter. Coroner Kuepper visited the residence of Mr. Booth at a late hour in the afternoon, and informed himself of the nature of the case. To allay the numerous rumors and to satisfy the public, he resolved to hold an inquest, and ordered one to take place at 2 o'clock this afternoon. The general impression is that the child's death was the result of natural causes, hastened by the excitement of the forenoon. The statement of Miss Chapman as to the degree of punishment inflicted, and the fact that there were no marks upon the child's hands to indicate undue violence, fully sustain this view.

THE SAD STORY OF A MILITARY CADET.

THE EASTERN COMPLICATIONS—CANARDS IN ABUNDANCE—A KNAVISH PUPIL IN THE FRENCH MILITARY SCHOOL—HOW HE WAS DETECTED—HIS PUNISHMENT—THE STORY OF HIS LIFE—THE PUBLIC INTERESTED IN HIS BEHALF.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Monday, Oct. 23, 1876.

There has been no great change in the situation since I last wrote, though the ultimatum of Russia has come to clear away some of the doubts and difficulties that have so long environed it. The Bourse continues in a state of excitement; the funds show but a feeble tendency to rise. All eyes are turned toward the meeting at Livadia, where the question of war or peace has to be settled, and where Lord Loftus has gone to represent the Queen and to throw the influence of England upon the side of peace. It is probable that peace will be made, but, if so, it will be at the expense of Turkey. She must lose all authority over her provinces if not the provinces themselves, and she must find herself greatly weakened as a power. In the meantime, the wildest rumors are floating about, and one never knows just what to believe. We have canards in abundance, and of all possible sorts. The other day news came that Prince Dalgorouky had been killed in a duel by Count Shouvaloff, the Russian Ambassador in London, who went over to Belgium for the purpose, and as one can readily imagine, the event caused a good deal of gossip in the clubs and in the diplomatic saloons. The truth of the matter was that Dolgorouky was indeed dead, but he died by his own hand and not by that of Shouvaloff, for he succumbed to an attack of delirium tremens. He was a hard drinker and a fast liver, and for years had suffered from the effects of continued dissipation. Whether or not the story of the duel was spread about by Dolgorouky himself, while suffering from mania à potu, is more than I can say, but in some way a long and circumstantial account of a duel which did not take place got into the Continental journals. It is the same with our war news, for we get many a highly colored picture of battles which have never come off, and about which the Servians and the Turks know nothing. It is generally agreed, however, that Duc Decazes has managed things with a great deal of tact, and kept the French Government free from all complications.

A very sad case is now occupying public attention here. Some time ago, the pupils of Saint Cyr, the West Point of France, had to make frequent complaint of robberies. Many of them lost money, and in a few cases of rich young men, the sum abstracted was one of considerable importance. All agreed in saying that they had their money at night when they went to bed in the dortoir, and that it must have been taken during the night. After the third or fourth complaint, a careful watch was kept, and the Professors soon acquired the painful conviction that the thief must be one of the students. At the next robbery all were questioned. All had slept profoundly, and heard nothing or seen nothing extraordinary. The next day, however, one young man said that there was one incident of the night which he had not related, because it was of no importance; he had been aroused by Sergt. Phillipot, who was close to his bed, and on asking what was the matter, Phillipot replied that he was suffering from the colic and had been out. At the next robbery a student saw Phillipot coming from the end of the hall. On that occasion all submitted to a search, but nothing was found. When the Professor was going out one of the students saw Phillipot glance at a package of cigarettes on the table, and when he took it up Phillipot turned pale. The object sought was a thousand-franc bill taken from the pocket of one of the young men, and it was found in the packet of cigarettes. I should say that all agreed to a search because the examinations were just over, and in three days all the young men would receive their commissions in the Army. It was out of the question to allow a thief to be commissioned, and hence a grand search was proposed. Phillipot was arrested, and when before the Tribunal remained calm and impassible. He confessed to the crime, and said that he had been driven to it by his want of money. Something in the young man's manner led the President of the Tribunal to think that he had not gotten at the real secret. He began to question in a kindly way, but with a great deal of tact, making appeals to the noble sentiments of human nature, and in a short time Phillipot broke down. He began to cry, and then the President pressed him, with kindness, to tell the truth. The story he told was this: He was the illegitimate son of a retired Army officer. He had never known a home or parental affection. He was kept at a boarding-school, utterly without money, never seeing any relative, and getting no letters, and only got into Saint Cyr because he passed at the head of his class. When he got in, his father wrote him one cold letter to tell him to stay there and mind his studies, but he was allowed only enough money to pay his regular bills. In the second year he received another letter. His father wrote that he had just married a rich widow, who had a son of his age just entering Saint Cyr. Young Parisot was therefore his brother by marriage, but he, Phillipot, was particularly charged not to reveal the secret of his birth, or to make himself known to Parisot. He obeyed the parental request, and for three years kept the secret. Meanwhile, young Parisot had his pockets full of money, he was always well dressed, he received constant letters, and went home during vacations. Every wish was gratified, while his poor brother was in threadbare clothes, without a sou, and without a friend. His needs were so great during the last quarter, that he ventured to write to his father for money, but he received no reply. Driven to the last extremity, the neglected youth confessed that he could endure it no longer, and fell before a tempting opportunity to commit a crime. The first was followed by another, then another, when detection came.

I need scarcely say that the members of the court-martial were deeply moved, and every person in the room sympathized warmly with this young man. His sentence was light. He was condemned to two years' imprisonment, without military degradation, and taken off at once to the prison of Cherche Midi. The public has also been deeply moved by this story, and it is rumored to-day that several influential men have united in a petition for pardon, and that, if it be granted, young Phillipot will be furnished money to go abroad for a few years and try his fortune in another country. Great indignation is felt toward the father who neglected his own son in this way, while cherishing the son of his rich wife, and the father appears to have written frequently to young Parisot, while neglecting utterly his half brother.

"HOW "REFORM" WORKS IN CANADA.

The Toronto Leader of Thursday contains the following article in reference to a so-called "reform" Administration in Canada: "The zeal and success with which the 'reformers' have labored to extirpate corruption, enforce economy, and 'save the country' since they obtained power are truly wonderful. The independent press in all the Provinces is engaged in pointing out the numerous and irrefragable proofs of both. As to the first part of the great work they promised to accomplish—putting down bribery and corruption—the public are probably satisfied. The revelations of the Election Courts and the Brown-Simpson correspondence, to say nothing of the Lachine Canal, steel-rail, Foster contracts, and other jobs, have convinced even the most stubborn and credulous Grits that 'corruption,' as the word was understood when the party was in opposition, cannot be put down except 'with lots of money.' They accept the situation, excuse or defend the reform method of extirpation, and to avoid the necessity of explaining the new meaning of the word very rarely use it. As to economy, the increase of nearly six hundred thousand dollars for civil Government at Ottawa—in salaries and contingencies alone—under Mr. Mackenzie's régime is a sufficient commentary on that part of the reform programme. But the prompt and successful efforts of the self-denying patriots to 'save the country' by superannuating and pensioning experienced officials to make room for themselves, are more remarkable, more edifying than anything they have yet accomplished."

WIDE AWAKE.

HOW MR. BELLAMY TRIED TO KEEP HIS EYES OPEN IN CHURCH AND THE WOES IT BROUGHT UPON HIM.

From the Burlington (Iowa) Hawk-Eye.

The other day Mr. Bellamy, of Pond street, read in a religious paper the following paragraph:

"Many very good people are annoyed by sleepiness in church. The following remedy is recommended: Lift the foot seven inches from the floor, and hold it in suspense without support for the limb, and repeat the remedy if the attack returns."

Now, Mr. Bellamy is a very good man, and he is subject to that very annoyance, which in his case amounts to a positive affliction. So he cut that paragraph out, in accordance with the appended instruction, and pasted it in his hat, and was rejoiced in his inmost soul to think that he had found a relief from his annoyance. He hoped that Deacon Ashbury, who had frowned at him so often and so dreadfully for nodding, hadn't seen the paragraph, for the Deacon sometimes slept under the preached word, and Mr. Bellamy wanted to get even with him. And Mr. Driscoll, who used to sit in the choir, and cover his own sleepiness and divert attention from his own heavy eyes by laughing in a most irreverent and indecorous manner at Mr. Bellamy's sleepy visage and struggling eyes and head —how the good man did want to get it on Driscoll. So he chuckled and hugged his treasure, so to speak, in his mind. He was so confident that he had found the panacea for his trouble that he went to the minister and told him what a burden his drowsiness had been to him, but that he had made up his mind now to shake it off, and to continue to keep it off, and he was certain that he had sufficient strength of mind and force of will to overcome the habit. And the minister was so pleased, and commended Mr. Bellamy so warmly, and said that he wished he had 100 such men in his congregation, that Mr. Bellamy was so elated and happy and confident that he could hardly wait for Sunday to come to try his new method of averting drowsiness.

Sunday came, however, and soon enough, too, for it was Saturday afternoon plumb, chick, chock full of men with bills, over-due notes, trifling accounts, little balances, pay-roll, rent, narrow-guage subscription, political assessments, and one little thing and another, almost before Mr. Bellamy knew it, although it hadn't been here half an hour before he had some suspicion of it, and was soon very confident of it. Sunday morning found the good man in his accustomed place, devout and drowsy as ever. The church was very comfortably filled with an attentive congregation, and Mr. Bellamy was soon cornered up in one end of the pew, and the strange young lady who sat next him was attended by a very small white dog, that looked like a roll of cotton batting with red eyes and a black nose. The opening exercises passed off without incident, and the minister hadn't got to secondly when Mr. Bellamy suddenly roused himself with a start from a doze into which he was dropping. His heart fairly stood still as he thought how nearly he had forgotten his recipe. He feared to attract any attention to himself, lest his precious method should be discovered, and slowly lifted his left foot from the footstool and held it about seven inches in the air. As he raised his foot the strange young lady shrunk away from him in evident alarm. This annoyed Mr. Bellamy, and disconcerted him so that he was on the point of lowering his foot and whispering an explanation, when the dog, which had been quietly sleeping by the footstool, opened its eyes, and seeing the uplifted foot slowly descending in its direction, hastily scrambled to its feet and backed away, barking and yelling terrifically. The young lady, now thoroughly alarmed, jerked her feet from off the footstool, which immediately flew up under the weight of Mr. Bellamy's foot, and the dog, excited by this additional catastrophe, fairly barked itself into convulsions. Deacon Ashbury, awakened by the racket came tiptoeing and frowning down the aisle, bending his shaggy brows upon Mr. Bellamy, who actually believed that if he got much hotter he would break out in flames that not even the beaded perspiration that was standing out on his scarlet face could extinguish. The young lady rose to leave the pew, Mr. Bellamy rose to explain, and as he did so, she was quite convinced of what she had before been suspicious, that he was crazy. She backed out of the pew and sought Deacon Ashbury's protection. Mr. Bellamy attempted to whisper an explanation to the Deacon, but that austere official motioned him back into his seat, and as the minister paused until the interruption should cease, said in a severe undertone that was heard all over the church:

"You've been dreaming again, Brother Bellamy."

Mr. Bellamy sank into his seat, quite covered with confusion as with a couple of garments and a bed quilt, and his unhappiness was greatly aggravated, when he looked up into the choir, and saw Driscoll convulsed with merriment, stuffing his handkerchief into his mouth and shaking with suppressed laughter.

After service Mr. Bellamy, who was, all through the service, the centre of attraction for the entire congregation, waited for his Pastor and made one more effort to explain his unfortunate escapade. But the minister, whose sermon had been quite spoiled by the affair, waved him to silence and said, quite coldly:

"Never mind, Brother Bellamy; don't apologize; you meant very well, I dare say, but if you make so much disturbance when you are awake, I believe I would prefer to have you sleep quietly through every sermon I preach."

THE CHAMPION PEDESTRIAN.

From the Liverpool Post, Oct. 23.

Mr. Daniel O'Leary, who undertook to walk upward of 500½ miles in six days, has not only succeeded in accomplishing the task, but has achieved the still greater triumph of covering 502 miles in fourteen minutes less than the time he allowed himself. This is, perhaps, the most wonderful feat that has ever been chronicled in the history of pedestrianism, and it is doubly remarkable from the fact that it completely eclipses Mr. E. P. Weston's famous walk on a recent occasion, when, it may be remembered, that pedestrian was successful in "doing" 500½ miles in six days. Mr. Sam Hague bet O'Leary £100 that he would not cover more than 500½ miles and 48 yards within six days, which was the feat performed by Mr. Weston. O'Leary commenced to walk at the Park Skating Rink, Admiral street, at 12:7 on the morning of Monday last, and particulars have been given in our columns from day to day as to the progress the pedestrian was making in his formidable undertaking. An interest beyond the limits of the pedestrian circle had during the week been taken in the event; and as O'Leary neared the termination of his task that interest gradually deepened and intensified, till it culminated, on Saturday night, in a public demonstration of the greatest excitement and enthusiasm. O'Leary retired to rest at 12:50 on Saturday morning, at which time he had finished his 427th mile. He reappeared on the track at 3:20 A. M., and walked on till 9:08, when he retired for about an hour and a quarter. From that time to the close he only rested for a few minutes at intervals. His quickest mile on Saturday was his 493d, which he walked in 11 minutes 51 seconds. At 11:04:36 o'clock he had accomplished 500 miles and seven laps, but he continued on the track till 11:36, by which time he had covered the extraordinary distance of 502 miles. O'Leary has thus beaten Weston's walk by a mile and a half and fourteen minutes to spare, his time not expiring till 11:50 on Saturday night.

During the day there was a numerous attendance of people, the great majority of whom seemed to be Irishmen, who had come to pay their respects to Mr. O'Leary, who is a native of the Emerald Isle. As the evening advanced, however the concourse of spectators gradually increased, till between ten and eleven o'clock the inclosure was crowded to such a degree that it was almost a matter of impossibility for one to budge from the spot where he located himself. Indeed, so closely packed was the interior of the rink about eleven o'clock that orders were given to the doorkeepers not to admit another individual. Immediately after O'Leary retired at 11:36, Mr. Sam Hague entered the judges' box, and briefly addressed the over-enthusiastic assembly. It was with considerable difficulty that he could make his voice heard above the cheering and buzz of excitement, but when some degree of quietness had been secured, he intimated that O'Leary had accomplished the task which he had undertaken. "Mr. O'Leary (Mr. Hague continued) is too much exhausted to address you; but he desires me to thank you all for the kindness which has been shown to him during the week; and for the fair play he has received. O'Leary is open to challenge any man in the world to walk 500 miles for £5,000."

PROBABLE MURDER IN MASSACHUSETTS.

LOWELL, Nov. 5.—The dead body of a man was found in a dry ditch between Forge Village and Graniteville, Westford, yesterday. It had evidently lain there two or three months. A pistol-ball was found imbedded in the skull, and the skull was also cracked as by a blow of a club. There is no clue to the man's identity. The affair will be investigated.

RHODE ISLAND SPEAKS.

ADDRESS OF ITS LEADING BUSINESS MEN IN FAVOR OF THE ELECTION OF HAYES AND WHEELER.

To the Electors of Rhode Island:

In view of the momentous issues involved in the approaching Presidential contest, the undersigned are constrained to urge upon their fellow-citizens an immediate and earnest attention to the requirements of the canvass, to the end that confidence in our institutions and our Government may be continued unimpaired, our reviving commercial prosperity maintain its advance, and the perpetuity of the Republic be definitely assured.

It is manifest now that the election of the Democratic nominees is likely to accomplish these results: The absolute control of the Government will practically be given to a "solid South;" the definite and successful aim of which will be to retrieve its fallen fortunes at the expense of the country at large, and to enthrone the seditious sentiments of "the lost cause" in the place of that generous loyalty to the whole Union for which our sons and brothers died, and unwonted burdens of taxation were willingly self-imposed. The indifference to the integrity and sanctity of State and municipal obligations which has ever been the discredit and disgrace of Southern communities will manifest itself at the Capital; the public credit, which is now more than ever before the basis of all private credit, and which now, thanks to a rigid adherence to sound financial principles, is in just and high appreciation abroad as well as at home, will be shaken, to the great detriment of all departments of business. A decline in the value of the securities in which the surplus earnings of our people are so largely invested through our savings banks and other institutions will ensue, and will not be among the least of the evils certain to follow the triumph of a party which depends for its hopes of success upon the proclivity of its followers for repudiation, and irredeemable, fluctuating, and uncertain measures of value.

The interests of Rhode Island depend in an especial degree upon uniformity and consistency in the administration of the national finances, and upon that tranquillity which is born of confidence in the intelligence, honesty, and patriotism of those who for the time being are intrusted with the reins of Government. Under the guidance of the Republican Party the national existence was preserved in its critical hour; by the wisdom of its counsels and the prudence of its financial administration the debt forced upon us by the secession madness has been reduced with a rapidity beyond all reasonable expectation; the country has prospered so abundantly that its very prosperity allured to temporary depression and disaster by reason of the over-confidence and sanguine hopes of the mercantile community.

These are among the considerations which induce the undersigned to ask you, fellow-citizens, to aid in keeping the administration of public affairs in the hands of the party which has proved its devotion to the Constitution and to the public good, and its determination to guard our industries and enterprise by a broad, honest, and unvarying financial policy, and to give your votes and influence to secure the election of Rutherford B. Hayes and William A. Wheeler as President and Vice President of the United States.

A TILDEN FABRICATION.

From the Troy Times, Nov. 4.

The Tilden managers are up to all sorts of fraud. Their last dodge is a pretense that the Temperance voters have adopted the Tilden electoral ticket—a thing preposterous on the face of it. Mr. Tilden is not a temperance man himself, and in no sense represents temperance principles. We subjoin three letters, which show "what is in the wind:"

SANDY HILL, N. Y., Nov. 3.

Hon. J. M. Francis:

DEAR SIR: I inclose a letter from George B. Sherrill, the leader of the Tilden party in Kingsbury, and the reply. They explain themselves. Frank Hawks is an officer of quite a large lodge of Good Templars in our village, and will vote for Hayes and Wheeler. If you can make any use of these letters please do so. We are gaining ground fast, and shall give a report Nov. 7. Yours truly, *

SANDY HILL, Nov. 1, 1876.

Mr. Dear Col. Brice:

Will you please send to Mr. Frank Hawks, Sandy Hill, Washington County, N. Y., the national and State Temperance tickets? We are afraid that they may not be sent from head-quarters. Hoping you are well, I am yours, truly,

GEORGE B. SHERRILL.

Frank Hawks:

The Temperance folks have adopted the Tilden National ticket and the Greenback State ticket. Very respectfully, JAMES BRICE.

James Brice is a small Democratic politician of Albany, disguised as a pretended apostle of temperance to divert the votes of honest Prohibitionists from the Republican Party to the Democratic. That's his mission in life.

The Massachusetts Republican State Committee, describing the Democratic Party of the present day, says: "That party looks back upon a record of weakness and of failure. Its distinctive character is its own and has not changed. If there are constitutional heresies, it embodies them; if there is risk of wild, delusive, ruinous schemes of national finance; if the civil service is to be again an illustration of giving the spoils to the victor; if there is danger of a renewal of the weak policy of James Buchanan; danger of losing all the moral influence of a national Administration firm in its enforcement of the constitutional rights of all citizens; danger of irritating the relations of race by maintaining the distinctions of race; danger of the pressure of rebel claims; danger of interrupting the present wise administration of the national finances and our steady progress in the reduction of the public debt and taxation upon the Treasury; all these dangers become possible only in the event of the victory of the Democratic Party. In that event the return to specie payments would be indefinitely postponed. The national faith, the national credit, the national Treasury would all be imperilled. Inflation, and ultimate repudiation, would be among the dreaded possibilities of the future. Confidence—the prime requisite of a revival of business prosperity—would languish and die."

THE LATE DR. RIMBAULT'S LIBRARY.

From the Athenæum.

A wealthy American gentleman, who has seen the late Dr. Rimbault's library, has liberally offered to purchase it entire, and to present it to his native State. The executors have, however, found that there would be a difficulty in valuing some parts of the collection, for want of precedent, and have, therefore, decided to send the whole to Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge, to be sold by auction early in the Spring. During the pressure of long-continued illness, and consequently of lack of income from his profession, Dr. Rimbault sold to that enthusiastic collector of rarities, Mr. Julian Marshall, several of the manuscripts of Henry Purcell, and the unique caricature of Handel by Goupil.

THE UNITED STATES STEAMER FRANKLIN.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—Neither the State nor the Navy Department has recent information concerning the United States steamer Franklin; but it is supposed that she will be heard from some time this week. While there is no doubt that Tweed, the prisoner on board, will be delivered to the New-York State authorities immediately on his arrival, it is not probable that the official correspondence will be published before the meeting of Congress. The facts, however, relating to Tweed's escape from the United States, and of his arrest in Spain, are already known to the public; but it may be stated that when the Spanish Government informed that of the United States of Tweed's arrest, and its readiness to surrender him, in accordance with the wishes of our Government, the American Legation was instructed to conduct the arrangements to that end. As the return of Tweed to this country on a Spanish vessel would have entailed expense to that Government, the United States steamship Franklin was ordered to proceed to Vigo and bring him home. Besides, it was considered more safe to return him a prisoner on one of our own than on a Spanish vessel.

FATAL RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

MEMPHIS, Nov. 5.—A distressing accident occurred to the east bound train on the Memphis and Little Rock Railroad last night near Edmondson, caused by the forward truck of the sleeping-car dropping down and throwing it over a trestle, pulling the next car off with it, and piling the passengers up in a promiscuous heap. The following persons were injured: Francis Moore, formerly of Canada, lately living at Bledsoe's Landing, Ark., so badly injured that he died within thirty minutes; an infant son of J. T. Eggleston, of Mississippi, fatally injured; J. J. Barnes, of Bowling Green, Ky., cut in face, shoulder and hip bruised; Mrs. John Gwathmey, of Arkansas, rib broken and severe internal injuries, and about fifteen others slightly wounded. Luckily the sleeping-car was empty, or the list of casualties would have been much larger. The wounded arrived here at 1 o'clock this morning, and were promptly cared for. An inquest was held to-day on the body of Mr. Moore, and a verdict rendered in accordance with the above statement.

POSTAL CHANGES.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—The following are the postal changes for the week ending Nov. 4:

Postmasters Appointed—Byron C. Matthews at Boothbay, Lincoln County, Me.; Seymour W. Gage, Litchfield, Herkimer County, N. Y.; Sylvester Graham, Klukora, Burlington County, N. J.; D. F. Cushing, Jr., Cambridgeport, Windham County, Vt.; Edson D. Herrick, Highgate, Franklin County, Vt.

Post Office Established—Hudson Centre, Hillsboro County, N. H., Eli Hamblett, Postmaster.

THE GRASSHOPPERS' ALLIES.

The grasshopper is not the only burden in the way of insect depredators that the honest Granger has to bear. The Southern Farmer says that by the united efforts of the potato-bugs, chinch-bugs, curculio, weevil, Hessian fly, grasshoppers, cut worms, &c., the farmers' crops have been reduced fifty per cent. in some localities, while in others entire destruction is threatened. Nevertheless, the food crop is still abundant, and there is no present cause to despair.

POLITICAL MISCELLANY.

TILDEN'S CANAL POLICY.

From the Buffalo Commercial, Nov. 2.

Gov. Tilden appears before the country in the rôle of a great canal reformer. Mr. Dorsheimer, his First Lieutenant, claims that he has laid open the rotten places in that department, and has introduced reforms everywhere. It is therefore important to know the practical effect of this great reformation.

On the Buffalo section of the canal, at least, it is very far from what could be desired. Through the influence of Lieut. Gov. Dorsheimer, Chairman of the Canal Board, a set of Tilden Democrats were appointed this season. They are supposed to represent his reform policy, and are known to be his political friends and partisans. Hence it is reasonable to presume that their administration of canal affairs is a fair sample of Mr. Tilden's canal policy.

Now, we claim that the Superintendent's department on this section of the canal has been run as a Democratic electioneering machine. Men have been appointed to office on account of their skill in manipulating caucuses and in promulgating Democratic doctrines. Sinecure positions have been created and maintained for the benefit of party hacks who go about the streets shouting for Tilden and reform. Officials are paid by the State who render no equivalent for their money. Thus the expenses of the department have been increased over a hundred per cent. lately, so as to extend its political influence. We do not make these charges at random. They can be proved from the records of the Superintendent's office.

We have been well aware that the disbursements by the Superintendent have largely increased as the day of election approached, but we were not prepared to see them doubled and trebled. The following transcript from the Superintendent's monthly abstracts of expenditures tells the whole story:

Month.	Expenditures.	Month.	Expenditures.
April	$3,932 46	July	$7,168 93
May	8,393 77	August	5,169 06
June	4,852 30	September	15,406 97

Comment is unnecessary. These official figures speak for themselves. No fair-minded person can be convinced that there is good reason why three times as much should be expended on the canal in September as in August. But this is not all. On the abstract appears the name of Patrick Lyon as "Water Inspector." Now, this distinguished citizen is very well known in the city. He may be seen on the street near the Democratic head-quarters all hours of the day and night, shouting for "Democracy and reform." But he is a stranger to the tow-path. Our people have hardly forgotten that the State paid half a million dollars to construct a division wall between the canal and harbor, so that the mills at Black Rock could not interfere with navigation by drawing away too much water. Notwithstanding this expensive wall, Mr. Lyon receives $3 a day from the State for keeping a close eye on the mills!

In addition to the "Water Inspector," a large force of "patrolmen" are employed on this section, ostensibly to make a daily inspection of the canal, but in point of fact to disseminate Democratic ideas. This office is but a sinecure at the best. Among the list of patrolmen we find the name of Charles Riley, who is much better known as Chairman of the First Ward Democratic Committee than as a canal patrolman. This man does not go near the canal; he is actually employed at other work, but is paid by the State $40 a month on account of his services in securing Tilden delegates to St. Louis and for the enthusiastic support he now gives the Democratic candidate.

Another reform that has been introduced is to class common laborers on the roll as carpenters, thus increasing their pay from $40 to $65 a month. We could give a great many other interesting facts regarding Tilden's reform canal policy, but these are sufficient for this time.

ADDITIONAL ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE MANNER IN WHICH THE PEOPLE'S MONEY IS BEING SQUANDERED TO BUY VOTES FOR THE BOGUS REFORMER.

From the Oswego Times, Nov. 2.

We have before called attention to the manner in which money is expended upon the canals of this State for the purpose of bribing the laborers to vote the Tilden ticket. Upon the Oswego Canal a large force has been employed under the pretence of putting in aprons upon the various State dams, and the question is put directly to every applicant for employment, "How do you vote?" And unless they promise to vote the Democratic ticket, they are turned away. Many men are employed who can render but little service, if any, for the wages they receive. What is true of the Oswego Canal is true of the entire canal between Oswego and Albany.

An intelligent and reliable gentleman who has just come over the route between Syracuse and Albany reports gangs of men employed all along the Erie Canal, under various pretenses, where there is no legitimate work to be done. For instance, at a place called Castle Creek, about five miles east of Little Falls, is a place where a small creek passes under the canal. One side of this creek is walled to hold the bank. The wall is sound as it has been for years, and needs no repairs whatever. Here a large force is employed picking stones from the bed of this creek and piling them upon the wall, with no apparent object whatever except to keep up a semblance of work. At 8:30 in the morning, our informant met a gang of men, over twenty in number, going to the place we have described under the pretense of working for the State. They were, when met, nearly a mile from the place where they were to pretend to work, and could not possibly reach the "job" before 9 o'clock. And yet they are expected to put in a whole day.

This side of Little Falls this gentleman found a large force of men employed in digging ditches of the flats between the canal and the river. These ditches were about twenty rods apart, and were connected with cross-ditches. They were no benefit to the canal, and could not possibly be of any use to the State. Within a section of about six miles this gentleman discovered from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five men, under full pay, mainly employed in cutting down alders, willows, and other bushes, along the fences on the line of the canal—anything to keep up an appearance of work.

In one place, near Little Falls, out of forty or fifty men, ostensibly employed, over one-half of them were sitting upon the bank, smoking their pipes, and idling away the time, without even the pretense of keeping themselves busy.

In one instance our informant saw two laborers keeping up the appearance of work by picking up pebbles on the bank of the canal, and throwing them in piles. This "gang" of two men had a "boss" over them, who stood with an umbrella over his head and with kid gloves on, doubtless to prevent tanning his delicate skin.

These are fair samples of the manner in which large sums of money are being expended to elect Tilden. All this enormous expense, from which the canals are not benefited, must be paid by the tax-payers of the State. In the history of the State there has never been such an outrage, such a swindle imposed upon the tax-payers. It emulates the most flagrant swindles perpetrated by Tweed upon the tax-payers of New-York City. And this outrage upon the tax-payers is perpetrated for the advantage of Samuel J. Tilden.

THE PATRIOT'S DUTY TO VOTE.

In an address just issued, the Massachusetts Republican State Committee says: "It has been said that the danger of our political system lies in a too extended right of suffrage. On the contrary, our peril is in the neglect of those who have the right to vote but fail to use it. The alarming fact is that, as a rule, more than one-half of our voters do not vote, and that among those who neglect this duty are especially to be found citizens whose intelligence would otherwise be the surest safeguard of the Republic. This is not a merely partisan appeal. The success of a party is a means, and not an end. The Republican Party invites the suffrages of the people not for its own triumph, but because it believes its success will secure the inestimable blessings of good government, and thereby best promote the public prosperity. Its candidates for national and State office are men of unblemished character and approved public service. They stand squarely upon the great issues of a sound and honest currency; the reform of the civil service, as well as of all that tends to corrupt and debase the standards of public duty; and the just and wise pacification of the country upon the basis of a recognition of the equal rights of all citizens under the Constitution and the law. No better exposition of its aims and spirit has been given than in the letter of acceptance of its candidate for the Presidency. Upon that platform the Republican Party of Massachusetts stands."

GRAVITY OF THE ISSUES.

In a published letter, Senator Morrill, of Vermont, writes: "It is no light matter to look back upon the four years' struggle against rebellion and secession, with all of its cost of blood and treasure, as something no longer appreciated. It will be no trivial affair to find the amendments of the Constitution, wholly dependent as they are upon appropriate legislation, committed to the interpretation and tender mercies of those ever eager to strangle them. It will be no child's play to tamper with the public credit, nor to uproot the national banks, nor to unhinge the entire industries of the nation by the adoption of a hobbling copy of the system of British free trade. And yet these are the great calamities, too plainly mapped out, which threaten us, if the 'solid South' shall ever prove victorious. If the public credit rapidly rose when Gen. Grant and not Horatio Seymour was elected in 1868, it is quite apparent that the election of Tilden and Hendricks, instead of Hayes and Wheeler, would be highly detrimental to all classes of American securities. When so many of the Southern States controlled by Democrats fail to protect their own credit, and the interest on their State debts, contracted by themselves, goes unpaid, how can they be expected to take a more lively interest in protecting the honor and credit of the National Government, for which they never professed the highest allegiance, and against which they recently so desperately fought? Four years ago the Democratic Party sought to win by the nomination of Horace Greeley, a life-long anti-slavery Republican, known to have been always opposed to secession, and during the war most urgent to push the Army 'on to Richmond;' known, also, to be the vigorous champion of a protective tariff and irreconcilably hostile to all the dogmas of free trade, and who was, moreover, a clear-grit foe to irredeemable paper money, and the advocate of specie resumption, holding that 'the way to resume was to resume' instanter; but this year the heart of the Democratic Party is no longer on the left side; they have changed all that, and Mr. Tilden represents the opposite or anti-Greeley phase at all points. If the party is sincere now, it cannot have been sincere four years ago. If honest then, it cannot be honest now. The followers of such a party seem forced to march to the music of any hurdy-gurdy that its leaders may pick up. Its candidates for nearly twenty years (it is hardly too much to say of the droll assortment) have been selected much as Barnum selects his riders for the hippodrome, not as the representatives of any fixed principles, but for some astonishing peculiarity that it is supposed will draw a full house, and their national party platforms for the same time have been so unrelated, dissimilar and heterogeneous that, as the French say of unmatched pieces of furniture, they swear at each other."

THE COLORADO VICTORY.

THE EXACT FIGURES AT LAST—A REPUBLICAN GAIN OF 3,200—TWO-THIRDS OF THE LEGISLATURE REPUBLICANS.

The Denver papers of Oct. 29 bring us the result of the official canvass of the vote of Colorado on the 3d of that month, concerning which such false reports were persistently printed by the Tilden organs. Below we present the vote for member of the present Congress, compared with the vote for Delegate cast at the election of 1874:

Weld	754	476	629	485
Majorities	1037			2163

The vote for member of the Fifty-fifth Congress was as follows: James B. Belford, Republican, 13,233; Thomas M. Patterson, Democrat, 12,264; Republican majority, 969. The average Republican vote for Judges of the Supreme Court was 14,034; for the Democratic candidates it was 12,554. The State Senate consists of nineteen Republicans and seven Democrats; the House of thirty-one Republicans and eighteen Democrats. In the whole Assembly there will be fifty Republicans and twenty-five Democrats, giving the former party just two-thirds majority on a joint ballot. The total vote of the State for State Senators was 28,493. Of these, 15,213 were Republican and 13,280 Democratic; Republican majority, 1,933.

WHAT IS ASKED OF LOYAL MEN.

In a speech at the great Republican meeting in Utica, Thursday, Gen. W. H. Gibson, of Ohio, forcibly said: "I was in Washington that Spring the war broke out, and I used to hear lean, lanky, devilish-looking fellows talking war. They wore red shirts and dirty shirts, generally both; they had revolvers in their belts and fire in their eyes and treason in their hearts—and they said 'one of them could whip five Yanks,' and I heard it repeated so often I began to wonder whether it was not true. I didn't get scared, however, but I went home and raised the Forty-ninth Ohio, composed of brave boys who could write their names, and didn't think they were made by Jeff. Davis. [Applause.] That regiment lost more men in battle than any regiment west of the Alleganies. Of the entire Field and Staff I am the only survivor. We meant business then, and we mean business now. Now the proposition to-day is to hand this Government over to the rebels. We who have fought on every rod of Southern soil are expected to do this! I am going to shake this bloody shirt because I was wrapped in a bloody shirt. So was Rutherford B. Hayes. A Democratic bullet broke his left arm. He refused to go to the rear, but with his arm dangling, led his boys to victory. [Continued cheering, which lasted for many seconds.] And again, in the Shenandoah Valley, where Sheridan made his famous ride, Hayes was there, and a rebel Democratic bullet found shelter in his leg, but he never left his horse until the rebels were put to flight; and all this time Tilden was in New York, declaring the war a failure, and saying that Union soldiers were trespassers upon Southern soil. Is there a man here to-day who can hesitate for a moment in choosing between the two candidates?" [No, no, no.]

THE ABSURD ACCUSATION.

From the Springfield (Ill.) Journal.

Occasionally we see that some idiotic Tilden organ revives the story that Gov. Hayes is a Know-Nothing. In the face of the most conclusive evidence in disproof of the charge, only an idiot or a confessed scoundrel would make it. There is probably no name of an Ohioan better known to citizens of Illinois, and especially to Illinois soldiers, than that of Gen. R. V. Buckland, during a part of the war commander of the post and defenses of Memphis, under whom many Illinois soldiers served. In answer to J. E. McDermot, of Peoria, Gen. Buckland writes as follows in reference to the Know-Nothing charge:

FREMONT, Ohio, Oct. 23, 1876.

Capt. J. E. McDermot, Peoria, Ill.:

DEAR SIR: I take pleasure in acknowledging the receipt of and answering your letter of the 28th inst. The charge that Gov. Hayes was ever a Know-Nothing, or a member of any such society, is basely false. I have known Gov. Hayes intimately for about thirty years, and I know that he would not make a false statement to secure his election to the Presidency. I have it from him directly that he never was a member of a Know-Nothing organization, or any organization or society inimical to citizens of foreign birth. He has no more enthusiastic supporters anywhere than many thousands of citizens of foreign birth in Ohio, who know him well, and who know that all such charges are without the least foundation in truth. * * *

Yours, truly, R. V. BUCKLAND.

INDIANA STILL ENCOURAGING.

The Indianapolis Journal of the 2d inst. says: "We are in receipt of political advices from all parts of this State, and from other States, of the most cheering character, and can assure our Republican friends that the situation is such as to justify a very confident hope of the election of Hayes and Wheeler. In our own State the situation is improving daily. Neither fraud, corruption, or trickery can thwart the will of an aroused people, nor blind them to the dangers that threaten the Government. We desire the Republicans of Indiana to distinctly understand that a glorious victory is within their reach if they will but do their duty. Do not go into the fight as upon a forlorn hope, for it is not. The chances are to-day that we will carry the State. We certainly will if our whole October vote is gotten out, and the responsibility of this work rests on every Republican in the State. If we can bring out every Republican vote, and keep out every illegal vote, we shall assuredly succeed. We are fighting a corrupt and desperate party—the party that invented ballot-box stuffing in Kansas twenty years ago, and that has practiced it systematically ever since. By the aid of the rebels in the South it now hopes to capture the Government which it tried to destroy. Let the voices and votes of Indiana be recorded against the consummation of this infamy."

A SPEECH WITHOUT POLITICS.

Being one of an excursion party to Marion, Ohio, on the 1st inst., Gov. Hayes was called upon for a speech, and responded thus pleasantly:

MY FRIENDS: The closing observation of my friend would embarrass me if I proposed to say anything about it. I am here to-day with a number of gentlemen friends from Columbus, who thought it a good thing to make the trip with the first train over your new road. I recognize the fact that it is the duty of your Governor when called upon by any portion of his fellow-citizens to respond to their call. Our new road is an object that we are all interested in, and I think the people of Marion will find it of value to your growing village. Running from north to south, it crosses the four great leading lines of the nation—the New-York Central, or Lake Shore, at Toledo, the Baltimore and Ohio at Fostoria, the Atlantic and Great Western at this point, and the Pan-handle at Columbus. By crossing these thoroughfares it connects all along its line with the great routes of the country. It is interesting from another point of view. The work on this line was commenced, I believe, only a year ago last August, and now it nearly approaches completion throughout its entire length. To me the road is also interesting by contrast with the old modes of travel which it supersedes. My first acquaintance with Marion was by the old stage line of Neil, Moore & Co., when in good weather we could leave Columbus in the morning and reach Sandusky the same day. But I recall the fact that on one occasion in 1846, starting from Columbus, it took me two days and two nights to reach this place. Now we are able to accomplish the same distance in easy, comfortable cars in a couple of hours. I think I have recognized my unwritten duty as Governor to respond to the call of the people; and I also recognize another duty, that he should not detain them too long. I therefore bid you good day.

HAVE NO RIGHT TO VOTE.

A PARTIAL LIST OF PERSONS ILLEGALLY REGISTERED.

WARRANTS ISSUED FOR THE ARREST OF ALL WHO ATTEMPT TO VOTE ILLEGALLY—MR. DAVENPORT'S REGISTRY LIST CAREFULLY VERIFIED—A WARNING TO FRAUDULENT VOTERS.

A partial list is given below of the persons against whom warrants have been issued, directing their arrest by United States Marshals for registering fraudulently. These warrants will be put into the hands of the United States Marshals on Tuesday morning, and will be served upon such persons as may attempt to vote. The plain English of the matter is, that any man who attempts to vote illegally in New-York next Tuesday will do so at the risk of being placed under lock and key by the United States Marshals. It may also be stated that the possibility of a person's making a successful attempt at illegal voting is extremely slight. There are probably not 100 men who have fraudulently registered who have not been discovered by the United States officers, and against every one who has been discovered a warrant has been issued. The list below gives a few only of the names of persons covered by warrants in the Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Thirteenth, Seventeenth, Nineteenth, and Twenty-first Districts. The full list contains three times as many names. The Supervisor of Elections, Mr. Davenport, states that every name in the list has been carefully verified from two to four times, an average of three times to each name, each verification by an officer altogether independent of the other verifiers. He is convinced that the list is correct, and that no man whose name appears on it has a right to vote. He conceives, however, that mistakes may have occurred in a few instances, and he desires that any man named in the list who really has a legal right to vote shall call upon him to-day at his office in the Post Office building.

BOSTON WOOL MARKET.

BOSTON, Nov. 4.—The activity in the Wool market continues, and favorable advices reporting a decided advance in fine Wools in the English market had a tendency to strengthen ours. Fine fleeces in consequence are looked upon as a safe article to hold, and purchases can only be made at full current rates. The market is firm for other kinds. The sales of Ohio and Pennsylvania have been 181,000 lb.; medium and X at 40c.@45c.; XX at 46c.@47½c.; choice Pennsylvania XX and above at 48½c. Michigan has been in fair demand and firm. The sales have been 184,000 lb.; X at 38½c.@40c.; Wisconsin at 40c.@42c.; X and XX Vermont at 39c.; X and No. 1 New-Hampshire at 38c.@39c. Combing and Delaine is in demand, and prices are steady and firm. The sales have been 262,000 lb.; Washed at 44c.@55c.; Unwashed at 35c. The sales of Delaine were principally from 47@48c. California is in good demand; New Fall has been arriving quite freely, and sales of this description have been 403,000 lb. at 17@26c. The sales of Spring have been 184,500 lb. at 13½@29½c. Pulled is in fair demand and firm; sales 140,000 lb. at 25@45c.

MONDAY, Nov. 6—A. M.

The statement of the Associated Banks, issued from the Clearing-house on Saturday last, shows a decrease in surplus revenue of $1,041,275, and the banks now hold $9,942,175 in excess of legal requirements. The most important change in the statement is the loss of $2,508,200 in legal tenders, which, however, is partially counterbalanced by an increase of $1,487,400 in specie. The other changes are an increase of $843,400 in loans, $89,900 in deposits, and a decrease of $500 in circulation.

The following shows the condition of the banks on Saturday last, compared with the previous statement, and with the statement for the corresponding week last year:

	Oct. 28.	Nov. 4.	Nov. 6, 1875.
Specie	15,947,200	17,436,600	12,245,500
Legal tenders	48,862,000	46,353,800	51,314,500
Deposits	215,303,000	215,392,900	221,931,200

Total reserve	$64,809,200	$63,790,400	Dec. $1,018,800

The money market exhibited rather a hardening tendency on a more active demand. Early in the week, as high as 6@7 per cent. was paid for call loans, but the transactions at these rates were exceptional, the great bulk of the business being done at 3@4 per cent., and in the late dealings there were free offerings of capital as low as 1½@2 per cent.

The foreign advices reported a higher market for British consols and American securities, the improvement being mainly due to the growing impression among European capitalists that a pacific solution of the Eastern difficulty is certain. The report of the Bank of England for the week ending Thursday last showed a loss of £193,000 in specie, but the minimum rate of discount remains unchanged.

The sterling exchange market was weak and lower, there being scarcely any demand for bills, and actual business was done at quite a considerable concession from the nominal asking rates.

Gold was quiet on moderate fluctuations, the pacific tenor of the European dispatches tending to keep down the price. The highest and lowest quotations were 110⅛ and 109¾ respectively.

Government bonds were firm and in good demand. The changes were unusually slight, ranging from ⅛ to ⅜ ₱ cent. In railroad mortgages business was fairly active and well distributed. Toward the close there was an active demand for the Pacific issues, in which a general advance took place. State bonds were firm for Tennessees, and a fraction lower for Missouris, on a somewhat larger business than usual.

In Stock Exchange circles the principal event of the week was the failure of the representatives of the trunk lines to agree upon any basis for the settlement of their differences, which was generally regarded as indicative of an indefinite prolongation of the railroad war, and consequently resulted in a serious decline in the leading railroad shares, the rest of the market being weak in sympathy.

THE ELECTION TO-MORROW.

We ask all Republicans, in whatever part of our Union they may be privileged to vote, to cast their ballots early to-morrow. Let them examine their tickets carefully, in order to know exactly what they are voting, and see that they are in the box at the earliest possible moment. This will enable the party to get out its full vote, and a full vote means a decisive victory. With this single condition, there is now no doubt of the result. We are not given to either prophecy or boasting, but looking over the whole field and estimating the forces at work, we have not the slightest hesitation in saying that the Republicans have but to cast their full vote to elect their national ticket, Presidential and Congressional.

During the last two weeks several circumstances have strengthened the confidence we have felt from the first. Mr. TILDEN'S fatal admissions regarding the Southern claims have excited the gravest apprehension among business men. They see more plainly than before what danger of increased debt, certain inflation of the currency, and ultimate repudiation, would accompany Mr. TILDEN'S election. The business men, thus aroused, have made the working men understand that what would bring risk and loss to the former would bring prolonged idleness and suffering to the latter. If capital is alarmed, labor will not get employment.

The canvass has, moreover, created a steadily-growing distrust of both the Democratic candidates. There has been so much deception, so much trickery, intrigue, and demagoguery which have been completely exposed, that the confidence of sober men in TILDEN and his methods has been overthrown in many quarters and rudely shaken in others. Changes from TILDEN to HAYES have been very numerous within the last ten days.

Finally, the strong latent patriotism of the country is aroused. Every day has given new proof of TILDEN'S complication with the solid South, and of the wild hopes which the fire-eaters of that section have built on his election. The deep love of the Union and of liberty which sustained our people in the desperate struggle with rebellion has not, as the Tilden managers supposed, died out; and they will find at the polls to-morrow a host with whom they have not reckoned, but with whom they must yet reckon. Let every Republican, then, vote early, and give to the cause a fair amount of honest work for the remainder of the day, and a victory which will bless our country for many years will be the sure result.

Great stress is laid upon the fact that the fourteenth amendment forbids the payment of any debt or obligation incurred in support of the rebellion or for losses consequent upon emancipation. The feeling of the Democratic Party in regard to claims coming under either of these heads is apparent in the votes upon the amendment during its progress through Congress. Every Democratic Senator, including Mr. HENDRICKS, and every Democratic Representative, voted against the amendment. In the State Legislatures, when the amendment came before them for ratification, the Democratic members everywhere voted against it; and in Ohio and New-Jersey they subsequently voted to rescind the ratification which had been accorded. When the matter went back to Congress, to receive its formal declaration that the amendment had become a part of the Constitution, the Democratic members voted against the declaration. They said by their votes that the amendment was not a part of the Constitution. Not less marked was the opposition of the Democratic Party in Congress, and in the State Legislatures, to the fifteenth amendment, which guaranteed to all, black and white, equality before the law. The Democrats in the New-York Legislature voted in 1870 to cancel the ratification which the previous Legislature had passed in 1869. Moreover, the Democratic Party, by its National Convention, pronounced all the amendments enacted since the war unconstitutional and void. This is the attitude of the Southern Democracy in regard to them to-day. It is folly, then, for Mr. TILDEN now to pretend that any of the amendments would be a bar to the Southern policy if the Democrats acquired complete mastery of the Government.

"What the South most needs is peace, and peace depends upon the supremacy of the law. There can be no enduring peace if the constitutional rights of any portion of the people are habitually disregarded." These are just sentiments. They touch the marrow of the whole Southern question. They are the words of R. B. HAYES, Republican candidate for President of the United States. Can there be any doubt that in his administration the South would receive equal and exact justice? Can the Southern situation be more tersely put than in the few lines from his letter which we have above quoted? There must be peace before there can be prosperity. "Laborers will not go, and capital will not be ventured, where the Constitution and the laws are set at defiance, and distraction, apprehension, and alarm take the place of peace-loving and law-abiding social life." There is no menace in these convincing words. Gov. HAYES, as President of the United States, would endeavor to compose the difficulties and irritations which have made peace impossible in the South, and which have so alarmed the whole country. A triumph of the Democracy in this crisis would surely be the signal for more distraction, uneasiness, and panic.

BUSINESS AND POLITICS.

The anxiety with which the result of the election is watched by business men has been made apparent by the formal expressions of opinion which THE TIMES has published within the last ten days. They are not confined to any one class, or to any one section of the country. From New-York and Boston to San Francisco, these declarations have come with all the emphasis which well-known houses can give to them. Capitalists and merchants and manufacturers unite in setting forth the uncertainties which Democratic success would force upon the country, and the positive advantages which must follow an assured continuance of the Republican policy. On one side is doubt, with all its dangers; on the other, certainty, with all its gains. There is no misgiving as to the results that will follow the election of HAYES. No man is foolish enough to allege that that event will suddenly transform depression into prosperity—suddenly terminate the difficulties which hard times have entailed. These are things which must disappear gradually, as a consequence of slow but sure improvement, not as the effect of any magical change. The essential fact is that the improvement may be counted upon as a certainty under Republican administration. It is at work now. Every merchant, every manufacturer, sees it more or less in operation. An increase of confidence is manifesting itself in a hundred ways. That faith in the future which seemed to have perished under prolonged adversity, has reappeared. Influences already in play point to the approach of the period when a currency which fluctuates in value with every wind and wave of the financial world will give place to the equivalent of specie. That alone means the elimination of gambling from finance and of speculation as the substitute of honest trade. Elect TILDEN, and how different the prospect! We shall have certainty no more. The tendencies to improvement will be checked if not reversed. Growing confidence will give place to aggravated distrust. In addition to the ordnary causes of doubt, we shall have those which spring from a reopening of vital financial issues. Everybody, everything, will be at sea. The credit of the country will be at the mercy of those who have shown themselves its enemies. Resumption of specie payments will be indefinitely deferred. Currency inflation will be among the probabilities, and values will vary as arbitrarily as during the war. They who have money will cling to it; they who need money for the prosecution of industrial and other enterprises will seek it in vain. It is not surprising, then, that the business classes throughout the North realize the dangers incident to the contest, and are doing their utmost to avert them by rallying to the support of the Republican candidates.

The financial policy of the Democratic Party is tested more effectually by its votes in Congress than by its protestations in the midst of a campaign. The bill which was introduced into Congress, and passed, to strengthen the public credit, and pledging the Government to redeem its bonds in coin, was not only rendered necessary by the attitude of the Ohio Democrats, with Mr. PENDLETON at their head, but was opposed by the Democrats in the House and in the Senate. Every Democratic Senator voted against it, and of the 47 votes against it in the House, 34 were cast by Democrats; only a single Democrat supported it. The proposal made by MORGAN, an Ohio Democrat, in 1870, to pay the bonds in greenbacks, and to inflate the currency for the purpose, was supported by 34 Democrats, only 11 voting with the Republican majority. The Funding bill was, during the same session, strenuously opposed by the Democrats in both chambers. The Resumption act, enacted last year, was opposed by the Democrats in a body, not one of their number voting for it, and 74 voting against it. Finally, in the recent session, the Democratic majority gave effect to the wishes of Mr. HENDRICKS, and to the views of the St. Louis Convention, by passing Mr. COX'S bill to repeal the act providing for resumption in 1879. Thus, at every stage of the question in Congress, the Democratic Party has identified itself with propositions prejudicial to the public credit and inimical to the measure for restoring specie payments. Is it surprising that foreign capitalists hold that the accession of the Democrats to power would be fatal to the scheme for funding the debt at low rates of interest, or that home capitalists regard the same contingency as the sure precursor of panic and disaster?

In the Eighth Congressional District the Republicans have nominated for Congress Gen. ANSON G. MCCOOK. Gen. MCCOOK is a native of Ohio, and a member of a family which has become celebrated in peace and war. His race is renowned for its statesmen and soldiers, and it was in the ranks of the latter that ANSON MCCOOK gained his reputation. He entered the Army at the outbreak of the war, took part in the battle of Bull Run, and in all the battles of the Atlanta campaign, was at Lookout Mountain, and at Perrysville. For gallant and meritorious conduct he was brevetted Brigadier General. He has never held any political office. The district he runs in rightly belongs to the Republicans, for it has perhaps the most respectable constituency in the City. Gen. MCCOOK should receive a cordial support and will certainly be elected if he does.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

One of the most important results of the election to-morrow will be the determination of the character of the House of Representatives for the first two years of the next Presidential term. On that body will rest the gravest duties. It will have to supply the necessary legislation to carry out the pledge contained in the law of 1875, to resume specie payments on the 1st of January, 1879. To that end it will have to consider the funding of the legal tenders, the regulation of the coin reserves of the banks, the revision of the public revenues, and the adjustment of the appropriations violently and in bad faith deranged by the present House. The country must meet the pledge of resumption or suffer the stigma and disaster of repudiation. There is no question as to the candidates of which party will serve the nation best in this regard. The Republicans almost without exception are pledged to maintain the act of 1875. A large majority of the Democrats individually favor its repudiation, while the whole party is hopelessly committed to that shameful and ruinous policy. It is a question of self-preservation, therefore, for the business community to secure a Republican House.

The next House will also have to face the issue of general administrative reform, to which a growing and intelligent public opinion is giving constantly greater importance. A Republican House will deal with such an issue with far greater hopes of an honest and successful result than a Democratic House. The former would include many earnest reformers—all in fact that are named for Congress. The latter would be made up mainly of men eagerly intent on securing the spoils of office for their partisans. Any sensible man can see which would serve the cause of reform best.

It depends on the result of to-morrow's election also whether the South shall hereafter be treated with impartial justice, left free to exercise all the privileges it is entitled to under the Constitution so long as it observes its obligations, or whether it shall be given over to the usurpation of one class and race among its people, with license for unlimited violation of the liberties of the remainder, and with immunity from all duty to the principles of the fundamental law. A Republican House will secure the former; a Democratic House will do all it can to bring about the latter, result.

The voters of the Tenth Congressional District have a chance to recall an overzealous and somewhat unscrupulous demagogue, and to replace him by a modest and honorable citizen, by electing Mr. HAMLIN BABCOCK over A. S. HEWITT. In business capacity, in social position, and in culture, Mr. BABCOCK is Mr. HEWITT'S equal; in unobtrusive patriotism and in the quality of his political principles, he is greatly his superior. He has lived for more than thirty years in the Nineteenth Ward, and is a large property-owner there. He was prompt to offer his services to the Government at the outbreak of the war, and, on the memorable 13th of July, being at home raising a new battalion, he was placed in command of the City Arsenal, which, with its invaluable contents, he defended skillfully against the mob. Mr. BABCOCK'S friends are hopeful of a victory, and with good hard work to the close of the polls they will secure it.

In the Eleventh District, Mr. LEVI P. MORTON ought to be elected to Congress by a large majority. No more fit candidate could be presented for the suffrages of such a district. He has undoubted ability, large business experience, and commanding knowledge of the financial questions which must engage the attention of Congress. He would not only be an excellent representative of the peculiar constituency to which he is named, but he would command the respect and confidence of Congress in a marked degree. When a district so largely controlled by business men has an opportunity to elect such a conspicuously good candidate, it would be a poor evidence of the intelligence of its voters if it did not do so.

THE "SOLID SOUTH."

What is the meaning of a "solid South" in its application to the present contest? Why does the South separate itself from the rest of the Union, and reject all considerations not addressed to its special interests? For what reason did its delegates to St. Louis exact the nomination of a candidate specially identified with the views it cherished when it went into the rebellion? What has led it to put forward as candidates for State offices men who had made themselves conspicuous by their hostility to the Union, and by repeated displays of the old rebel spirit since the conclusion of the war? How are we to understand the violent and cruel methods it is employing to break down Republican majorities within its borders, and to produce the appearance of "solidity" in behalf of TILDEN and HENDRICKS? These cannot all be accidental coincidences. There must be some bond of unity in regard to principle and purpose, apart from the ordinary conditions of political agreement. What is it? The only answer which is admissible is that the South seeks to regain its old ascendency in the Government, and that, with this view, it avails itself of its old ally, the Democratic Party. But this explanation only in part explains. In the days before the rebellion, the South had obvious reasons for unity and for the desire to possess power. The institution of slavery furnished controlling motives. There was a vast property to be protected. There were the safeguards of the institution to be preserved. The conditions of its existence were resistance to legal encroachments and a perpetual struggle with territorial obstacles to its expansion. These incentives to unity have disappeared. We must, therefore, look in other directions for the causes which render the white South still a unit in the Presidential campaign. These have one general characteristic: they all point to the regaining of lost influence, not for the sake of sentiment, not even as a matter of pride, but with a direct reference to the reversal of the results of the war and the recovery of some of its pecuniary penalties. The South counts among its wrongs the fact that it was impoverished. It aims at the getting of compensation for property lost, and at acquiring from the National Treasury loans or gifts or guarantees that shall promote its material development and impart value to property now unavailable. In the pursuit of these objects it is unscrupulous. Poverty added to disloyalty has made it reckless. It feels no concern about the effect of its policy upon the national credit. The Confederate indebtedness having been annihilated, it has no regard for the obligations of the Union. To this repudiating temper it has given full scope in dealing with the debts of Southern States. It has "scaled" them and repudiated them to an amount exceeding two hundred millions, and is now ready to rid itself of national obligations without heeding the interests of creditors or the good name of the country. From two different points of view, then, the "solid South" is a menace to the national credit. The recognition of its claims to compensation would bankrupt the Treasury by doubling the debt, and drag down the North by heaping unsupportable burdens upon its tax-payers. If it fail to carry this point, the "solid South" will identify itself even more actively than now with the repudiating section of the Democratic Party.

Every consideration that ought to influence a constituency requires the return of Hon. S. B. CHITTENDEN to Congress from the Third District. He has served through two sessions with ability and fidelity. He is specially fitted to represent his district, which, with possibly one exception, has a larger interest in the sound administration of of the revenue and finances of the General Government than any other in the Union. Mr. CHITTENDEN is a firm advocate of specie resumption, and has a thorough command of the conditions of that difficult problem, which has given him unusual influence in the House, and would give him still more were that body controlled by a hard-money Republican majority. He is, moreover, a consistent believer in the principles of civil service reform. His opponent, Gen. DAKIN, although an estimable gentleman, has not the special qualifications of Congressional experience and knowledge of finance and commerce. A district of such extensive business interests as the Third ought not to hesitate in its choice.

No man has been named for Congress who deserves better to be beaten than Mr. BLISS, of the Fourth District. He is an absentee member of the present House, and has distinguished himself by his utter neglect of his duties. He is, moreover, as a politician, the product of Ring rule, and was one of the originators in the Water Board of the present corrupt machine. Mr. SOLOMON SPITZER, the Republican candidate, is well spoken of by his friends as a gentleman of excellent abilities and special knowledge of the important subject of the tariff. The district is, in ordinary times, Democratic, but it will speak very poorly for its discrimination if it returns so complete a failure as BLISS.

THE STATE TICKET.

It is hardly necessary to remind the people of the State of New-York that the Republican candidate for Governor is a man who stands head and shoulders above his competitor in all the requisites of ability, experience, and statesmanship. The best that can be said of LUCIUS ROBINSON is that he was once a Republican. Nothing much worse can be said of him than that he was made, in a somewhat contemptuous fashion, the second choice of a convention which had clamored for a "born Democrat;" that he was equally acceptable to JOHN KELLY and Gov. TILDEN; and that every Ring of jobbers in the State is working energetically for his election. The nomination of EDWIN D. MORGAN was a triumph of the same principles of progressive and intelligent Republicanism which secured the choice of RUTHERFORD B. HAYES at Cincinnati. His election will be, equally with that of Gen. HAYES, a pledge of the enduring supremacy of the highest and noblest elements of the Republican Party, as well as a security for a frugal, conservative, and statesmanlike administration of the affairs of this State. From the position of Assistant Alderman to that of United States Senator and Governor of the State of New-York, E. D. MORGAN has worthily discharged every trust confided to him by his fellow-citizens. He will bring to another term of executive office all the fruits of ripe experience, and all the advantages of a thoroughly trained judgment. In the most critical period of the history of the State he so discharged the delicate and difficult functions of Governor as to extort the admiration and win the respect of men of both political parties. There are thousands of old War Democrats whose votes will be cast to-morrow for EDWIN D. MORGAN in preference to the political nondescript whom TILDEN and KELLY have presented for the suffrages of their party. A great and successful merchant and a thoroughly trained and tried administrator, ex-Gov. MORGAN, represents the type of public man to which New-York used to be able to point with pride. His election will be a triumph of all that is best and most patriotic in his party as well as of the intelligence, probity, and respectability of the State.

It would be an insult to a lawyer so eminent and a man so blameless in character as SHERMAN S. ROGERS to compare him for an instant with a turncoat and trickster like WILLIAM DORSHEIMER. Of all the agents whom Gov. TILDEN has used to further his ambition, Lieut. Gov. DORSHEIMER has been one of the least scrupulous. He took but little character with him out of the Republican Party, and he has certainly gained none during his connection with Democratic politics. From his jobbery in mileage charges to his share in the latest State-printing swindle, Mr. DORSHEIMER has exhibited the characteristics of a man of elastic conscience and limited intellectual perceptions. Of the small men with whom Gov. TILDEN has been pleased to surround himself, he has certainly not been the greatest, and the best service which his fellow-citizens can render him is to relegate him to that obscurity whence he ought never to have emerged.

It may be that "Boss" MCLAUGHLIN has pressed his despotic rule too far in the Second Congressional District, where he has forced the nomination of Surrogate VEEDER on the "regular" ticket. Even the superserviceable party organ, the Eagle, kicks against this nomination. VEEDER has enjoyed a great deal of profitable patronage from the Democrats, and they feel that it is time he was turned away from their table. Col. JAMES CAVANAGH, an Independent Democrat, has been indorsed by the Republicans, and deserves their support. The district is at present disgraced by being represented by the notorious SCHUMAKER, of whom the best that can be said is that he seldom appears in his seat.

"If I were now to make a Constitution for the future government of rising States, I would put a provision in it whereby a certain number or proportion of the States might go out of their Union whenever they pleased." This was the declaration of that superfine statesman, Mr. CLARKSON N. POTTER, on the floor of the House nine years after the surrender at Appomattox. If the people of the Twelfth District agree with this absurd Bourbon's idea of the proper government for the American nation, they can vote for him for Congress. If they do not, they would do well to rebuke him by the election of Mr. GEORGE A. BRANDRETH

THE COUNTY TICKET.

We advise every Republican to look well to his ballots, and see that the name of SMITH ELY, Jr., be not substituted for that of JOHN A. DIX. Don't take it for granted that Gen. DIX must be beaten. Fifteen thousand Democratic votes in addition to his Republican strength would elect him, and it will be time enough to conclude on Wednesday morning that Independent Democrats prefer to hand over the City to the creature of JOHN KELLY, instead of voting for a man who would administer its affairs with a single regard to the interests of its tax-payers and the demands of public necessity. One who left the Governor's chair with a record so brilliant as that of Gen. DIX is a competitor whose merits ought, among all intelligent men, to overshadow those of a political trimmer and blundering bank Director like Mr. ELY. The election of the Kelly candidate would mean the beginning of another period of Tammany despotism, ending in the inevitable régime of systematic plunder and rascality. The election of Gen. DIX means security for property, protection for the public Treasury, and the purging of local offices from political bummers and sinecurists. Can the people who have anything to lose hesitate which to choose?

The division of the Democratic vote between REILLY and SAUER ought to help the Republican candidate for Sheriff, and no one who appreciates the importance of rescuing that office from the hands of the lowest order of Tammany politicians will neglect to work and vote for Mr. GEDNEY. If ex-Judge PEABODY be not elected Surrogate over Mr. CALVIN, it will be a very severe blow to the cause of good government in this City. CALVIN has proved himself incompetent or unscrupulous or both; while his opponent has the advantage of an unimpeachable character and a national reputation. This is a case in which Independent Democrats ought to put forward their entire strength, since Judge PEABODY is the nominee of all the elements honestly opposed to Tammany Hall. Should they fail to do so, the fact will greatly diminish their future chances of asserting their proper influence in City affairs. The nomination of WILLIAM H. STINER against RICHARD CROKER for Coroner is another case in which the German Independents have indorsed the Republican nominee. He should, and probably will, be elected. No man who values intelligence and independence on the Bench will hesitate to vote for SCUDDER in preference to FREEDMAN, or GOEBEL rather than SINNOTT. The entire county ticket presented by the Republicans is as obviously superior to the Tammany nominations as the State and National candidates of our party are superior to those opposed to them.

Gen. JOHN H. KETCHAM has been nominated for Congress from the Thirteenth District of this State—a district which he has already represented in the House for eight years. In the war he made a brilliant record; in Congress a good one. He took his seat in 1865, and was appointed a member of the Committee on Military Affairs at a time when the duties of that committee were little less important than they were while the war was in progress. When Mr. BLAINE became Speaker, he appointed Gen. KETCHAM Chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, and in that capacity he did some excellent work in the killing of jobbing bills. When the Washington "Boss Shepherd Ring" was overthrown, President GRANT appointed Gen. KETCHAM one of the Commissioners for the District of Columbia—an office he still holds. The General is deservedly popular in his district, and will undoubtedly be elected, His Democratic opponent is a respectable sort of gentleman, who has had no experience in public life, and was almost unknown, even to his own supporters, previous to his nomination.

Mr. JOHN A. KING, the Republican candidate for Congress in the First District, is a gentleman well known in the district, and possessing a popularity which he has earned by conscientious public service in the State Senate and by many private virtues. The district could not have a candidate who would more faithfully represent its best elements, or attend more closely to its interests. Mr. KING will repay the confidence of every good citizen.

THE NEXT ASSEMBLY.

We trust that Republicans will not overlook the importance of maintaining control of the State Legislature. The Senate is Republican; and if this City is to receive any benefit from the legislation of the next session, the Assembly should be Republican also. In the excitement of a Presidential election, when public interest is mainly concentrated on national issues, the Legislature is less likely than ever to receive the attention its importance deserves; but the experience of the past few sessions ought to be sufficient to awake people to the necessity of sending to Albany, representatives who are capable of performing the duties of legislation. Our City delegation has been steadily improving since the time when TWEED sent up his horde of corrupt and obedient ruffians; and we have this year, a number of excellent gentlemen on the ticket, who, if they are all elected, will raise the standing of the New-York delegation higher than it has ever been before. It ought to be understood by every voter, by every citizen, who has interests in this City, that the acts of the State Legislature have a more direct bearing upon, and therefore more importance for, them than the acts of Congress. Through the Legislature the old Tammany Ring held the City almost powerless while they robbed it; and until that Ring obtained control of the Legislature, the robberies which they perpetrated were impossible. TWEED, at least, was not blind to the importance of having the right men at Albany. It is gratifying to find that there has been a laudable effort on the part of Republicans in some of our up-town districts to put on the ticket for the Assembly gentlemen of high character who will be really representative of the constituencies which send them there. These gentlemen ought to be elected. It will be a serious misfortune if they are not; for it so happens that some of the best of the Republican nominees are opposed by the very scum of the Tammany Party—disreputable political hacks—who have an Assembly nomination tossed to them by JOHN KELLY. It has long been a reproach against the City Republicans that they never send to the Legislature men who are capable of leading it—representatives who can wield that influence which the importance of the interests they represent absolutely requires. We are improving in this respect, and the Republican delegation this year contains in it some men who will probably remove this reproach if they are given the opportunity. We ask every respectable citizen to acquaint himself with the character of the candidates for the Legislature who are seeking his vote, and to support that one who, by his standing, ability, and integrity, is really representative of the district in which he is running. Under the most favorable circumstances, we could not get a delegation of wholly respectable men. There are some districts in the City in which such a person would not get enough votes to know he was running; but what we do expect, and what the City needs, is that gentlemen of character and respectability should represent the districts in which the majority of the voters are of the same class. Let us have a good City delegation in the next Assembly; and we can have it if Republicans will do their duty.

TILDEN'S partisans continually complain of what they call "sectional feeling" in this campaign. Whatever of sectional feeling has been imported into the canvass has been placed there by the Democrats. The cry of "a solid South" was of their own invention. From the first they have claimed a solid Southern vote; and that vote is to-day almost the sole reliance of the Tilden party. They have forced the issue upon the people to the utter exclusion of other questions, and now they profess to deprecate the storm which they have raised. Their candidate is the Southern claim agent. Therefore he has a "solid South" behind him. And it is expected, apparently, that this conspiracy to loot the public Treasury can be carried out while the conspirators keep up a prodigious din about the wickedness of "sectional feeling in a national canvass."

Once more we would direct the attention of all voters, irrespective of party, to the importance of voting for the prison and canal amendments to the State Constitution. There seems to be some party or set of individuals endeavoring to secure their defeat, but it is not certain that they represent any but a small fraction of our voting population. Yet it would not be safe to trust too much to these important measures running through by absence of serious opposition. They are so important, such a long step in the direction of sound administration, that their defeat would be a public misfortune. The purpose and character of the amendments have been so often discussed in the press, it were useless at this time to say more than that they aim to secure a more honest and efficient administration of our State Prisons and canals, by concentrating the responsibility and power, instead of diffusing it, as is the present system. When the Governor of the State is made the direct instrument of governing these important interests, instead of shifting boards of officers, the people will know where the blame rests if things go wrong, and who should be rewarded when they go right. See to it that you have the amendment ballots, and vote them.

REPUBLICANS AND THE SOUTH.

The prominence which the Southern question has acquired in the canvass follows naturally from the tone adopted by the Southern Democratic leaders. Nothing could be more conciliatory than the views addressed to the South by the Republican candidate in his letter of acceptance. If ever the olive branch was held out to the Southern people in good faith, it was by Mr. HAYES. His colleague on the ticket, Mr. WHEELER, had demonstrated his good will by his efforts in bringing about the Louisiana compromise. The joint nominations were tantamount to a declaration by the Republican Party of its desire for the obliteration of sectional quarrels, and the alliance with the loyal North of Southern men willing to abide in good faith by the settlement which followed the war. How were these overtures met? What was the response of the Southern whites to the appeal thus addressed directly to them? In not a single State was there a sign of a friendly disposition. Friendly advances were met with insult and defiance. The suggestion that parties should be organized without reference to sectional peculiarities was answered with the declaration that the "solid South" would cast its votes for the Democracy. The South, therefore, has only itself to blame for whatever sectional animosities have displayed themselves. It revived the sectional issue—the South against the North, the South against the Union; and whatever be the consequences, it alone will be responsible for them. By pursuing persistently the same tactics in its treatment of resident Republicans, the South compelled the North to invoke the aid of Federal authority to secure electoral freedom and purity at the polls. Northern forbearance revealed itself in the unwillingness it showed to assert the supremacy of Federal power. Week after week, the hope was cherished that the Southern white leaders would check the excess of zeal on the part of their followers, and terminate the outrages by which the Democrats intended to coerce and intimidate the colored voters. The expectation was not fulfilled. Outrage followed outrage. Coercion culminated in murder. Intimidation assumed forms incompatible with even the semblance of liberty and order. White Republicans were proscribed. They were required to train with the Democrats, or to quit the South. Colored Republicans were assaulted, and shot, and hunted, as though, having ceased to be slaves, they had, by the mere fact of their Republicanism, been converted into wild beasts. When, at last, the question became whether the guarantees of the Federal Government should be annulled by the men but recently in rebellion—whether the enfranchised freedmen should be left helpless in the hands of those who would once more reduce them to bondage—the Federal Government interposed, not to force Republican majorities, but to secure for voters, white or black, the freedom and security they are entitled to demand in the exercise of their rights as citizens. The pretense that the South is wronged by this action is absurd. It arrayed itself against the loyal sentiment of the country and against the humane instincts of the American people, and it must be taught, if need be roughly, that the Union and its laws are supreme.

NOTES OF THE CAMPAIGN.

The plain English of what the State Rights Democracy North and South want is that the judgment entered in the case lately tried between the North versus the South shall be reversed. With this they want also a reversal of public opinion on the merits of the case. They want the majority to say that those who staid at home, discouraged enlistments, made copperhead speeches, and voted the war a failure, were right, and that those who gave their means, their limbs, and their lives to preserve the Republic were wrong. This is all the men who are solid for Tilden want.

Nothing but energetic and continuous hard work until the closing of the polls on Tuesday will render New-York certain for Hayes, Wheeler, and Morgan. By this we mean not active work by the leaders and managers only, but by the rank and file by all of the true Republican faith. Every reader of this paragraph can do something, win some doubtful voter over, or get some ill or absent Republican to the polls. This is the kind of work that counts, and that is why organization is so needful.

As Gov. Hayes once said, when the rebellion broke out it had just one chance for success—a divided North. At this time Tilden and his followers, then in rebellion, have just one chance for success—a divided North. If enough loyal States aid the lately rebellious South to get control of the Government and the nation's capital, so as to give that section a preponderance, the results of the war are reversed and treason is at last triumphant. It makes not the smallest difference to the solid South how it gets control of the Government, provided it gets control.

It fixing a date when the Government will pay its past-due debts—when it will begin to be honest—is an obstacle in the way of paying debts or being honest, Mr. Tilden, when he gives a written promise to return borrowed money, should always omit to say when. By this simple omission of date he has the option to return it when he pleases or when he gets ready. But there is a long-existing prejudice among bankers to mark down dates when notes are due, and to ask their payment on the specified days or dates. The date is of the essence, as lawyers say. If dates are of no consequence in Democratic finance in resuming cash payments, then the promissory note payable at the Day of Judgment has ceased to be a fiction.

Some illogical persons talk of voting for Tilden because they want a change. If a "change" is all that is wanted, nothing is easier to get. To elect Peter Cooper would give us a change. To get up a rebellion and overturn the Government would give us a change. To have New-York City burned down by a mob would be a decided change. To restore the South to power, as in the days of Buchanan, would be a quite perceptible change. To place the entire North in subordination to a resurrected Southern Confederacy, would be an awful change. But is this the kind of change wanted? We suspect not. A change for the better, not a change for the worse, is desirable. And this can only be obtained by voting for Rutherford B. Hayes.

Mr. Alexander Taylor, Jr., of Rye, who has received the nomination for member of Assembly on the Republican ticket in the Second District of Westchester County, is the senior member of the firm of Alexander Taylor's Sons, bankers and brokers, Broadway and Exchange place, and is a young man of good business reputation, liberal education, and of great personal popularity, and will make a most acceptable representative of the district. This district is claimed by the Democrats by a small majority, but it has frequently been carried by the Republicans. Mr. Albert Badeau, of New Rochelle, five years ago carried it by a large majority, and in the succeeding year Mr. Amherst White, of Rye, was elected by a handsome majority. Mr. Taylor's canvass so far has been highly satisfactory, and presages an easy victory.

Hon. Eugene D. Berri, the nominee of the Republicans and Reform Democrats of Brooklyn for County Clerk of Kings County, deserves the support of every honest man of both parties in that city. He served two years in the Assembly, where he persistently fought every corrupt measure of the Brooklyn Ring, and left behind him a record without spot or blemish. As between him and the dog-fighter Delmar, who is the Democratic candidate, no decent man in Kings County need hesitate which to choose. It is said that Delmar aspires to supersede McLaughlin as "Boss" of the Brooklyn Democracy, but respectable Democrats do not need a "boss," of any kind, and the best way for them to put down that kind of leadership is to vote for Mr. Berri, who is opposed to all bosses.

Gov. Tilden's friends have been repeatedly asked to point out one single movement for reform which the "life-long reformer" engaged in before 1871, when he was nearly sixty years old. Has any one seen an answer? Did the life-long reformer aid in giving us a paid Fire Department, a disciplined Police force in place of an unorganized mob of ruffians, a set of excellent Excise laws, (speedily repealed when TWEED became supreme,) an efficient and capable Health Board for the infamous old Tammany organization, the Registry laws, the Compulsory Education law, the comparatively recent Police Justices' act, or any other of the substantial reforms which have been worked out in this City since 1857? Mr. Tilden was here, he took part in politics, but it assuredly was not in the capacity of a reformer. To every one of these reforms he was either actively or passively opposed. The reform cry had not begun to elect men to office before 1871.

Referring to Gov. Tilden's relations as a "reformer" to our penal institutions, Mr. Dorman B Eaton points out that the Governor has never done anything for their improvement, or assisted others in their efforts in that direction, though he was brought up as a law student in the office of Judge Edmonds, the President of the New-York Prison Association. Beyond this, says Mr. Eaton, "only last Winter Mr. Tilden shocked the moral sentiment of the State by vetoing a bill which the real friends of reform had promoted and a Republican Assembly and Senate had passed for securing more constant and remunerative prison labor. Every man who regards Mr. Tilden as a reformer ought to read this veto Message and to look into the causes that produced it. I know nothing in executive literature more lamentable and indefensible—nothing that so much delighted those who have flourished on our Prison abuses, or so much discouraged those who have tried to reform them."

Hon. Frederick W. Seward, son of Secretary Seward, may be considered as the next State Senator from the Fifth District, formerly represented by the late James W. Booth. Mr. Seward's retiring disposition, and his inclination for the quiet pursuits of literature rather than the bustling affairs of political life, have combined to keep him out of the field of active politics. He has been a candidate for office on two occasions only. In 1874 he accepted the nomination for the Assembly from the Seventh District, and carried it by 600 majority, when at the same election Tilden carried it over Dix by 300 majority. Last year Mr. Seward ran against Bigelow for Secretary of State, and was defeated; but he ran 8,000 ahead of his ticket. His election on this occasion ought to be a surety. As Mr. Hamilton Fish, Jr., will certainly be elected to the Assembly, the next Legislature will have among its members the oldest sons of the last and the present Secretaries of the United States.

Mr. Tilden is, as is generally understood, Governor of this State, and as such bound to obey its laws and cause them to be obeyed. Yet he contrived to break, or to participate with others in breaking, two rather important local laws yesterday morning. On Saturday night he went to Brooklyn to review a Democratic torchlight procession. For all that any one could see to the contrary, the whole affair might easily have been over by 12 o'clock; but far into Sunday morning, in fact till near dawn, the processionists continued to march and countermarch before the Governor, who came out and waved his hat occasionally. As there is a strict and very proper law against processions on Sundays in Brooklyn, Gov. Tilden could scarcely be excused for encouraging by his presence this making the Sabbath morning hideous; and still less, when the crowd was filling all the whisky shops in the neighborhood, which, in full sight of the Governor and his attendants, were open and glaring with light in defiance both of the law and of decency. The spectacle of the Governor of the State attending a demonstration, two-thirds of the participants in which are at once breaking the laws and outraging decency, is not specially edifying.

One of the candidates for Coroner on the Tammany ticket is the notorious ruffian, Richard Croker. This man is not a favorite with his party; he is not popular with his associates; he is not a man who, under ordinary circumstances, could get a nomination at all; he is simply one of those cunning ruffians, in whom craft and brutality are equally mixed; and having obtained some kind of a hold on John Kelly, he compels the support of his party associates, even against their will. Now, there is simply this about his nomination. If he can be defeated and defeated decisively, not only is Richard Croker settled, but public morality gains by the blow given to the nomination of future Richard Crokers. What is wanted is to make it apparent that a man of his stamp shall not be put up for public office—that he is below the line where it is now drawn. We are drawing that line a little higher every year; the Tammany ticket is not half so bad as it was in the Tweed times; and there is no reason to believe but that both parties will show a steady improvement in the character of their nominees with each year. But to bring this about the worst man on a ticket ought to be scratched; and then the worst man next year will be better than the worst this. All respectable citizens are equally concerned in bringing this about. If a Democrat does not care to vote for a political opponent, he can scratch and let it go at that. This man Croker ought to be defeated, and certainly there are not many even of his own party who would be very sorely afflicted to get rid of him once for all.

The Sixteenth Assembly District is so overwhelmingly Democratic that no Republican nomination has been or will be made. Two Democratic candidates for the Assembly are running there. One is Mr. Francis Kearney, the other is Gen. Spinola. Mr. Kearney is a respectable business man in good standing, enjoying an excellent reputation among his neighbors, and he has been cordially indorsed by the Republicans in the district. Gen. Spinola is a person who has grown gray in the practice of political corruption of the smallest and meanest kind. During the flush Tweed times—when even the dogs grew fat on the crumbs which fell from the great men's tables—Gen. Spinola was in easy circumstances. He was a man of some importance, wore clean shirts, and generally had a dollar in his pocket. When Tweed fell, and the pickings were cut off, the wretched man got very low down. Instead of engineering big steals through the Legislature, as he used to in his days of prosperity, he has of late years hung about the lobbies, getting jobs in drawing up "striking" bills at $2 50 each. Since the constitutional amendment went into effect to pay Assemblymen $1,000 for the session, instead of $3 per day, Gen. Spinola has been trying to get a seat. This is the record of the man, and if the voters of the Sixteenth Assembly District won't believe it, and elect him, all they need to do is to go up to Albany after the General has taken his seat, and then they will believe it. As opposed to such a candidate, they have a respectable business man. The City will be the gainer by his election, no matter what his politics.

POLITICAL NOTES.

Florida Republicans promise 2,000 majority for Hayes and Wheeler, and hope to do even better.

The Democrats of Troy have nominated John H. Burns for Assembly. His name completes the list outside of this City.

N. B. Forrest, of Fort Pillow notoriety, is Chairman of Tilden's Democratic Executive Committee in Memphis, Tenn.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat says that the Tildenites in Missouri have renominated eleven of their thirteen ex-rebel Congressmen.

The Secretary of the Nevada Republican State Committee says that they feel confident of carrying the National and State tickets.

Illinois has over 600 working Hayes and Wheeler Clubs, and promises to roll up one of its old-time majorities for Hayes and Wheeler.

The Republicans of Kentucky say that they will hold the Congressional District they now have, and think they have a chance to gain two others.

Of course, Michigan will give its vote for Hayes and Wheeler. Our friends say the majority will certainly be 10,000, and that it may reach 18,000.

Gen. Roger A. Pryor declined an invitation to speak at a Democratic meeting in Petersburg, Va., last week, on the ground that the state of his health would not permit.

A recent note from the Secretary of the Oregon Republican State Committee says: "We are working diligently, and will have a much better organisation than ever before in this State; and it gives me great pleasure to inform you that Oregon will also stand in line, and can be counted on the side of the Union. Our majority will be in the neighborhood of 1,000."

The Democratic country papers are still publishing elaborate special dispatches, puffing Tilden into importance, and coming to them from New-York with all charges paid.

The North Carolina Republicans have made one of the liveliest and most energetic canvasses of the campaign. If they do not give Hayes 5,000 majority, they will be astonished.

Missouri has a solid Democratic delegation in Congress. The Republicans of the State believe that to-morrow they can break their ranks to the extent of five good Republicans.

Gov. Hayes still sensibly declines to make any personal appeals, or to make political speeches, although his zealous friends persist in serenading him whenever opportunity offers.

The Maryland Republicans expect to gain three members of Congress, and while they are not over-sanguine of carrying the State, do not regard it as out of the range of possibility.

Pennsylvania Republicans promise to keep up to their good record, holding their station as a stronghold of Republicanism, and giving an increased majority for the entire ticket.

Kansas Republicans are well organized, and have made a thorough canvass. They promise to redeem their Second Congressional District, and to give 20,000 majority for Hayes and Wheeler.

Gen. F. E. Spinner turned out with the Republicans of Utica, Thursday night, and excused himself from riding with the Grand Marshal because he preferred to march "with the rest of the boys."

Mr. P. R. Adams declines the Prohibition nomination for Congress in the Second District of Michigan, saying that he cannot do anything to weaken the Republican Party, in its great and honest effort for the welfare and prosperity of the nation.

The Democrats of Pittsburg, Penn., withdrew their acceptance of a challenge from the Republicans for a joint discussion, on the ground that "the crowd which would be likely to gather would make it unprofitable." Very likely it would have been—to them.

The Rochester Democrat says, that the Democrats of Albion, for the purpose of making believe they had some colored voters, blackened the faces of a squad of white men, and put them into the procession, to pass themselves off as genuine African followers of Tilden.

The Democrats in Chicago are charging a candidate for a petty local office with failure to pay his taxes, and saying that the man who refuses to pay his tax is not fit or honest enough to disburse other people's money. And in the next breath they try to get up some enthusiasm for Tilden.

The Boston Transcript of Saturday says: "The Republican campaign in Massachusetts progresses auspiciously. The only question is as to the extent of Hayes' and Rice's majority. In that majority will be comprised the suffrage of hundreds of men who have uniformly voted against the Republicans."

The Newark Advertiser of Saturday says: "Now, at this late hour of the campaign, when bragging is of small use, we predict for New-Jersey a clean and handsome Republican majority on the electoral ticket, a full majority in both houses of the Legislature, and a general success in all the local elections."

A morning paper is in error in its statement yesterday that West Virginia and Oregon have elected their members of the next Congress. Another, on Saturday, indicated its persistence in the delusion that the Governor of a State can permanently fill a vacancy in the United States Senate. Slight familiarity with the Constitution would have made it known that the Governor's appointment lasts only until the next meeting of the State's Legislature.

OBITUARY.

GEN. GILES A. SMITH.

The death, at Bloomington, Ill., of Major Gen. Giles A. Smith, is announced. Gen. Smith was born in this State in 1829. He entered the Army, in the late rebellion, under his brother, Morgan L. Smith, in the Eighth Missouri Infantry. Soon after, however, he resigned and was appointed by Gov. Richard Yates, Colonel of the Sixteenth Illinois Infantry. He served with distinction throughout the war. He was with Sherman at Vicksburg, and did excellent service by preventing the capture by the rebels of a fleet of Union gun-boats in Deer Creek bayou. He commanded a brigade in the Army of the Tennessee in 1863, and in 186 was with Sherman's Army as a division commander in its march to the sea. Subsequently he was promoted to the rank of Major General for "long and continued service, and for gallantry and competence as an officer during the Atlanta and Savannah campaign." During the war he was wounded three times, twice seriously. After the war Gen. Smith was appointed Second Assistant Postmaster General, which office he filled for nearly three years with credit to himself and to the country. His health would not permit of his remaining in the department, however, and he returned to his home in Bloomington. His disease was consumption.

LETTER FROM MR. BRISTOW.

In reply to a statement of the Evansville (Ind.) Courier to the effect that Gen. Bristow told his party friends in Hopkinsville that Tilden would be elected by the largest majority ever given to a Presidential candidate, the following letter is published by the Louisville Commercial:

I am informed that the Evansville Courier, of to-day represents me as having stated, to a party of friends at Hopkinsville, that Tilden would be elected. I have made no such statement to any one. On the contrary, I have too much confidence in the patriotism and sound judgment of the people to believe that they will elect Tilden over Hayes. Please show this to the editor of the Courier, who I am sure would not intentionally misrepresent me.

B. H. BRISTOW.

THE REBEL CLAIMS.

Northern Democratic papers assert that the Southern rebel claims cry is but a bugbear. And yet the Jackson, (Miss.) Clarion, a Tilden paper, in its issue of the 1st inst., says: "The readers of the Clarion will remember that years ago, we warned the Southern people that this very matter of paying Southern war 'claims' would prove the worst of all stumbling blocks in the way of the deliverance of the South and of the nation from Radical misrule, and we warned them against such action as would give rise to the very clamor that is now heard on that subject to the detriment of the Democratic cause all through the North. But we received no encouragement. When it was proposed that our Legislature should pass resolutions petitioning the refunding of the cotton tax, our voice was raised against it. We feared the consequences. What we then predicted and solemnly but ineffectually remonstrated against, has come to pass."

FEMALE PEDESTRIANISM.

Central Park Garden will be, during the present week, the scene of an effort on the part of Miss Bertha Von Hillern and Miss Mary Marshall to walk six consecutive days for a purse of $1,000. The fair contestants are not wholly unknown to fame in their peculiar sphere. Miss Marshall and Miss Von Hillern walked a match in Chicago last February, the result of which was by no means satisfactory, the affair ending in a dispute. This was the only occasion upon which Miss Marshall has appeared as a pedestrian in public. Miss Von Hillern, however, has walked several matches in Berlin—usually against time—and defeated a girl at Peoria, Ill., a short time ago. In personal appearance Miss Marshall has much the advantage. She is twenty-six years old, five feet three inches high, and weighs 135 pounds. Miss Van Hillern is much smaller. Both stepped on the track last night, or rather this morning, at 12:05 o'clock and began the march. The track is 240 feet long, 4 feet wide, and must be gone over twenty-two times before a mile is compassed. It is made of earth and sawdust, and is quite elastic—much too elastic for a male pedestrian. The judges for the occasion are Messrs. Y. J. Hopkins, F. F. Baird, Frank Brown, and Henry Kludel. Drs. Flemming and R. Taylor will be in attendance upon the contestants during their walk.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

THE PROPOSED CONFERENCE OF GUARANTEEING POWERS—THE DEMARKATION BETWEEN THE ARMIES.

PARIS, Nov. 5.—The Moniteur, the organ of the Minister of Foreign Affairs, says it appears probable that all the guaranteeing powers will agree to the proposal for a conference at Constantinople. Reuter's telegram from Ragusa states that the French and Italian Commissioners have proceeded to the Turkish and Montenegrin camps to fix the line of demarkation. Places blockaded by the Montenegrins will continue under blockade during the armistice, but may be revictualed sufficiently for immediate wants.

LONDON, Nov. 6.—The Times in a leader says: "We think with the majority of our countrymen that the chances are in favor of peace, and of such peace as may assure the well-being of the regions concerned, by removing every pretext for agitation."

A Belgrade dispatch to the Times says it is reported that Gen. Tchernayeff will sojourn in Russia during the armistice. Russian officers express the belief that thousands of Russians have fallen in the Valley of the Morav alone. They openly accuse the Servians of bayonetting Russians who attempted, revolver in hand, to urge them to attack the Turks.

The Standard's Belgrade correspondent reports that some wounded Russian officers have been robbed and hacked to pieces by the men appointed to carry them to the rear.

The Vienna despatch of the Times says except Germany, which probably will not interfere, all the Powers have appointed commissioners for drawing the line of demarkation. Turkey and the majority of the Powers think the line should be fixed by the positions actually held by the opposing armies when the armistice was agreed to, but Russia seems disposed to ask the Turks to withdraw to the frontier.

THE ITALIAN ELECTIONS.

POLITICAL COMPOSITION OF THE CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES—LARGE NUMBER OF UNDECIDED BALLOTS.

ROME, Nov. 5.—The election of members of the Italian Chamber of Deputies took place to-day. As far as the results are known at this hour, 141 Progressists and 28 Moderates have been returned. Second ballots will be necessary in 101 districts. Among the distinguished persons elected are Signori Mancini, Coppino, and Correnti, each of them from several different places, and Signori Deputies Nicotera, Zanardelli, Maiorana, Minghetti, and Ricasoli. A second ballot will be necessary in Milan to settle a contest between Signori Correnti and Visconti-Venosta. Garibaldi will also be obliged to stand for a second ballot in Rome, but his election is certain

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

FRENCH COMMUNISTS PARDONED — CUBA AND SPAIN—AN OFFICIAL DECLARATION.

PARIS, Nov. 5.—Decrees were issued to-day pardoning or commuting the sentence of fifty-two Communists.

MADRID, Nov. 5.—Prime Minister Canovas Del Castillo, addressing a meeting of 250 Deputies, declared that it was the determination of the Government to retain Cuba at any cost.

THE INDIAN FAMINE.

SUMMARY OF THE EXTENT OF THE SUFFERING APPREHENDED.

LONDON, Nov. 6.—An Indian newspaper, the Pioneer, sums up the prospects as to the famine in Bombay as follows: Famine in Sholapore, extreme dearth at Poonah, great scarcity in six other districts. All these districts will yield only a fraction of their ordinary revenue. It is hoped that the distress may be relieved at a sixth of the cost of the Bengal famine.

MR. REVELS NOT SUPPORTING MR. TILDEN.

The Jackson (Miss.) Times of the 2d inst. thus puts at rest a slanderous statement concerning ex-Senator Revels, which has been repeatedly printed in Northern Democratic papers: "We have the best possible authority—Mr. Revels himself—for stating that there is not the slightest foundation in truth for the report to the effect that the ex-Senator is supporting Tilden and Hendricks. On the contrary, we know that he regards them as two of the most politically corrupt and dangerous men in the country. Mr. Revels has acted independently within his own party, but he has never voted a Democratic ticket, and we do not believe that he ever will. Being President of an institution of learning—Alcorn University—Mr. Revels is not now active engaged in political affairs."

FATAL FIGHT BETWEEN ROUGHS.

UTICA, Nov. 5.—At the conclusion of the Democratic procession in this city on Friday night, Thomas McDonough, a torch-bearer, aged 21 years, of this city, went to the depot to see some of his friends off. While at the cars, after a fight, McDonough was hit on the head by a lump of cinder, it is alleged by Joseph Hayden, aged twenty-four years, another torch-bearer, of Rome, and died from the effects of the wound at 1 o'clock this morning. Hayden left Rome for Ann Arbor, Mich., at 6 P. M. yesterday, and it is thought he may stop at Auburn or Buffalo. The Police are in pursuit.

It is sometimes said of great people, "Not to know them is to argue one's self unknown." When B. T. BABBITT'S BABY SOAP gets fairly placed on the market, not to recognize its supreme merits as a toilet soap will argue one a heathen. Babies rejoice in it, and strong men rub their hands in glee. No bed or bath-room should be without the finest of saponaceous compounds. It's pure, sweet, and strong, and is destined to drive the artificially scented soaps out of the market.—Advertisement.

DEIRDRE.

POLITICAL.

TO THE VOTERS OF THE ELEVENTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

We most urgently bespeak your support, without distinction of party, for Mr. LEVI P. MORTON, as a member of the next Congress.

Mr. MORTON is a citizen of the highest character and intelligence, and well fitted for the discharge of the duties of the office. He has never sought or held any public position, but has now reluctantly, and at great personal sacrifice, accepted a nomination, forced upon him by his fellow-citizens, who desire to place their interests and those of the country, as administered in Congress, in safe and competent hands. His long and honorable career as a banker, and his intimate acquaintance with the history and necessities of the national finances, enable him to bring to the service of the country a sound judgment enriched by a large experience.

The people of the district ought not to lose the opportunity now offered them of being represented at Washington by a first-class business man, and should turn out in force to secure his election.

NEW-YORK, Nov. 2, 1870.

MR. LEVI P. MORTON, A GENTLEMAN personally known to me as a business man, and in whose character, integrity, and judgment I have perfect confidence, has been nominated as the Representative in Congress of the Eleventh District.

As an old resident of the District and City, and as a gentleman long identified with the business interests of the City of New-York, I feel that I can commend him to the support of my friends, and am assured that his election, apart from all questions of party politics, will assist in securing in the future sound and practical legislation, valuable to the country at large, and especially to the interests represented in this District.

THE VOICE OF BUSINESS MEN.

WHY THE PROSPERITY OF COMMERCE AND INDUSTRY DEPENDS UPON THE ELECTION OF TILDEN AND HENDRICKS.

To the Business Men of the United States:

Every industrial and commercial interest of our country is languishing. Neither prudence, industry, nor experience any longer receive their legitimate rewards. While the sources of individual and national prosperity have been drying up, and the value of all kinds of property shrinking in a corresponding proportion, the burdens of taxation, through peculation and wasteful expenditure, have been steadily increasing. Unnecessary and improvident public buildings have been undertaken; our public lands, as well as our national credit, have been squandered upon railway jobbers; offices and public trusts have become articles of commerce in which Cabinet Ministers have participated and which the Executive protects.

These facts are notorious and alarming, and are the natural and inevitable results of conspicuous administrative incapacity at Washington, and of official corruption throughout the land.

A change in the character of the men and the policy of the Federal Administration is an imperative public necessity. To tolerate the follies and the crimes of the Republican officials by deliberately prolonging their power, is to make ourselves parties to their guilt.

In obedience to the dictates of a great national necessity, the Democratic Party has nominated for the Presidency one whose name is identified by memorable triumphs with all those measures of administrative reform for the want of which the country is now in distress. His long public career has been a continued illustration of economy in the public expenditure, a jealous care of the national credit, a courage ever ready to defy the giant of corruption in his strongholds, the widest experience in public affairs, and an unequaled command of the resources of statesmanship. His signal success in purifying the Government of New-York City; his able and successful war upon the Canal Ring of this State and its confederates; his reduction of our State taxes about one-half in less than two years; and his own unsullied personal character, satisfy us that he is pre-eminently the man for our Chief Magistrate in the present crisis of the country; and we therefore recommend to your cordial and zealous support at the approaching election the Electoral ticket representing SAMUEL J. TILDEN AND THOMAS A. HENDRICKS.

For Congress—Eleventh Congressional District,

HON. BENJAMIN A. WILLIS.

The undersigned electors and tax-payers, residing in the Eleventh Congressional District, do heartily and cordially recommend Hon. Benjamin A. Willis, the nominee for Congress in this District, as a candidate worthy of the confidence and support of all good citizens, irrespective of party.

In his Congressional career thus far he has by his fearless devotion to just principles, his absolute independence, and his strict attention to the business interests of this City, completely justified the hearty support given him when a candidate two years ago, and has shown himself fairly entitled to the praise bestowed on him, at such time, by the New-York Tribune: "A gentleman of untarnished reputation, a lawyer of good repute, a soldier with an admirable record, and a man of ability and integrity."

A CARD FROM MR. SMITH ELY, JR.

I notice in your columns to-day that you quote from the minutes of the Board of Supervisors of Dec. 27, 1869, some bills of Keyser, Miller, Ingersoll, Garvey, and others, aggregating $630,000, to which my name is affixed as having voted in the affirmative. I never voted for any such bill or bills, and thinking possibly that those who are strangers to me may desire something more than a simple denial, I affix hereto my affidavit. During the last four years of my service in that board I sat with Mr. Tweed without exchanging a word with him, and I have never spoken to him since. The minutes of the board were kept by the clerk on detached pieces of paper, which sometimes were not copied into a book until weeks or months after the meeting. My name was appended to the bills you quote either carelessly or by malicious design.

SMITH ELY, JR.

City and County of New-York, ss.—Smith Ely, Jr. of the City of New-York, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he did not vote for the bill or bills of Keyser, Garvey, Ingersoll, and others, as published in The New-York Times newspaper of this date, and deponent further says that he never during the said year, or during the year that preceded or followed it, voted for any bill of said contractors, but that he invariably voted against all such bills. And he further says that any record or minutes to the contrary are utterly and absolutely false, and without any foundation in truth.

SMITH ELY, JR.

Sworn to before me this 23d day of October, 1876.

CHAS. P. DALY,
Chief Justice of the New-York Common Pleas.

NEW YORK, Oct. 31, 1876.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE FIFTH SENATORIAL DISTRICT:

The undersigned, residents in and electors of the Fifth Senatorial District, take pleasure in announcing the nomination of Col. ALFRED WAGSTAFF, JR., for the Senate.

Col. Wagstaff has already served two terms in the Assembly, with much credit and honor to himself and to the entire satisfaction of his constituents. He is a gentleman of energy, capacity, and character, with large experience in Legislative affairs, and the best interests of the City of New-York will be promoted by his election. From our knowledge of Col. Wagstaff, we have the fullest confidence in his honesty and integrity, and cordially recommend him to your suffrage.

TO THE PUBLIC.

The attention of voters is urgently called to the important bearing which the two pending amendments to the State Constitution have upon the commercial and general welfare of this City and State.

The continuance of commercial supremacy to the City of New-York is largely dependent upon an economical and honest management of the canals of the State, which can only be permanently insured by a change in the organic law, making extravagance and corruption impracticable.

The amendment relating to the canals provides for such a change, and that relating to the prisons is of the same general tenor. The questions involved are so well understood that we do not deem it necessary to particularize, but desire to admonish all voters, irrespective of party, to guard against canceled ballots, prepared with a view to defeat the amendments, and to provide themselves with ballots FOR THE AMENDMENTS.

To the People of the United States:

Reduced June 30, 1875, to	2,099,439,344 99
A reduction during this period of eleven years since the war of	$656,992,246 45
The annual interest charge for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, was	133,067,741 69
For the past year, ending June 30, 1876	100,243,271 23
A reduction in the annual interest charge since 1866 of	$32,824,479 46
The annual expenditures of the Government in 1876, as compared with 1866, show a reduction of	262,349,619 56
And in federal taxation more than	300,000,000 00

Other great results of this financial policy have been that, despite an indebtedness of more than two thousand millions, and while diminishing taxation, the credit of the country has been raised to the unprecedented point that its four and a half per centum bonds, issued in redemption of the six per centums, have been selling rapidly, at home and abroad, above par in gold; and the Government has been enabled every year since 1866, not only to keep within its income, but to apply an average annual sum of $56,742,284 20 toward the payment of its indebtedness.

A careful consideration of these results of judicious management of the National Treasury during Republican administration of the Government, induces the undersigned to express their confident belief that a continuation of the same general policy which has so well sustained our commercial honor, and aided so powerfully in the preservation of the Union itself, would be best promoted by the election of General Rutherford B. Hayes and William A. Wheeler to the offices of President and Vice-President of the United States.

For more than thirty years a resident of the Nineteenth Ward, he needs no commendation to the old residents of the district. His known integrity and fearlessness of character, his inflexible uprightness, his watchful and intelligent devotion to the interests of the City and of his district caused him to be selected in 1859 and 1861, and marked him as the champion of honesty and economy in the Common Council. At the outbreak of the rebellion Mr. Babcock went to the front and participated in the war for the Union.

Never seeking office, Mr. Babcock has not been a candidate for other positions. In the interim of fourteen or fifteen years, he has devoted his time to active and lucrative business pursuits, and will, if elected, bring to the discharge of his official duties the same intelligence, fidelity, and integrity which have always characterized his career, with the addition of the riper experience, keener foresight, and sounder judgment of maturer years.

Public Exhibition

OF

A. T. Stewart's

Garden City Water Works,

THURSDAY, Nov. 9, 1876

There will be an EXHIBITION of the WATER WORKS recently constructed at GARDEN CITY, on THURSDAY, Nov. 9, at 12 o'clock. THE AUTOMATIC WORKING of the MACHINERY by the SIMPLE OPENING of a HYDRANT upon any of the LINES of PIPES throughout the village WILL be SHOWN, and the CAPACITY and USEFULNESS of the SYSTEM WILL be ILLUSTRATED by THROWING SIX ONE-INCH STREAMS of WATER, at the SAME TIME, ONE HUNDRED FEET HIGH, and ONE TWO-INCH STREAM OVER TWO HUNDRED FEET HIGH.

APART from the INTERESTING NATURE of such an Exhibition, the WORKS, consisting of the "HOLLY PUMP," with all the new improvements, automatic attachments, &c., &c., can be seen in operation, showing their perfect adaptability for supplying water for fire and domestic purposes.

A SPECIAL TRAIN will leave HUNTER'S POINT at 10 o'clock A. M., and RETURNING will leave GARDEN CITY at 2 o'clock P. M. The WATER WORKS are LOCATED NEAR the STATION.

VISITORS can find ACCEPTABLE ACCOMMODATIONS on the GROUNDS, and LUNCH MAY BE HAD at the HOTEL RESTAURANT.

LOCAL POLITICAL TOPICS.

A REBUKE TO TILDEN.

THE RIDICULOUS LIST OF INDORSERS OF THE CHAMPION FRAUD—PORTERS AND ERRAND BOYS SERVING FOR "GREAT MERCHANTS"—MR. CLAFLIN'S HOUSE REALLY FOR HAYES.

The action of the Liberty Street Literary Bureau in publishing the fraudulent call in behalf of Tilden and Hendricks, purporting to be signed by about two hundred of the solid business men of New-York, has proved very damaging to the cause of the Democracy, particularly in this City. Among the names appended to the call were those of seventeen of the employes of H. B. Claflin & Co. The majority of these names were of men holding inferior positions in the establishment, such as porters and errand boys. In order to show the feeling of the best men in the employ of the firm, a Hayes and Wheeler address was circulated in the establishment on Saturday, and the result is given below. The signers, 150 in number, desire it to be stated that the list contains no names of porters or errand boys. Every man whose name appears is a citizen of New-York and a legal voter. Following is a copy of the address and signatures.

We, the salesmen and clerks in the employ of H. B. Claflin & Co., do hereby signify our intention to vote for Hayes and Wheeler, believing that the safety and prosperity of the nation depend upon their election:

THE BALLOTS FOR REPUBLICANS.

INFORMATION FOR REPUBLICAN VOTERS—HOW TO AVOID DEMOCRATIC TRICKS—THE STRAIGHT REPUBLICAN TICKETS.

Each voter, to-morrow, is entitled to cast eight ballots, indorsed on their backs as follows:

PRESIDENT, NUMBER ONE.
GENERAL, NUMBER TWO.
CONGRESS, NUMBER THREE.
SENATOR, NUMBER FOUR.
ASSEMBLY, NUMBER FIVE.
CITY, NUMBER SIX.
ALDERMEN AT LARGE.
CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

These ballots are to be voted throughout the County, and for the purpose of giving every Republican voter an opportunity of comparing any ballot presented to him with the ballots adopted by the National Republican, New-York State Central, and New-York City Central Committees, which should be deposited by all Republicans. Fac similes of the insides or faces of the Republican tickets are herewith given:

PRESIDENT—NUMBER ONE.

For Electors of President and Vice President of the United States.

Nathan D. Wendell,	Norman M. Allen.
Benjamin F. Bancroft.

For Governor,
EDWIN D. MORGAN.
For Lieutenant Governor,
SHERMAN S. ROGERS.
For Canal Commissioner,
DANIEL D. SPENCER.
For Inspector of State Prisons,
CHARLES T. TROWBRIDGE.
For Associate Judge of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Robert Earl, appointed in the place of Martin Grover, deceased, GEORGE F. DANFORTH.
For Mayor,
JOHN A. DIX.
For Sheriff,
WILLIAM H. GEDNEY.
For County Clerk,

LOUIS S. GOEBEL.
For Surrogate, in the place of Delano C. Calvin, appointed in the place of Stephen D. Van Schaick, deceased,
CHARLES A. PEABODY.

ALDERMEN AT LARGE.

For Aldermen at Large,
JOSEPH C. PINCKNEY.
RUFUS B. COWING.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

"For the propositions in this ballot, which are not canceled with ink or pencil; and against those which are so canceled."

"For the proposed amendments to section 3, article 5 of the Constitution, relative to the appointment of a Superintendent of Public Works and the abolition of the office of Canal Commissioner."

"For the proposed amendment to section 4, article 5 of the Constitution, relative to the appointment of a Superintendent of State Prisons and the abolition of the office of Inspector of State Prisons."

These suggestions leave to be mentioned the tickets indorsed:

CONGRESS, NUMBER THREE.
SENATOR, NUMBER FOUR.
ASSEMBLY, NUMBER FIVE.
CITY, NUMBER SIX.

These are all distinct tickets.

The Congressional Districts are the Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh.

In the Fifth Congressional District the Republicans have indorsed Col. James E. Kerrigan, and in the other districts have made the following nominations:

Sixth—A. J. H. Duganne.
Seventh—Wallace P. Groom.
Eighth—Anson G. McCook.
Ninth—George W. Da Cunha.
Tenth—Hamilin Babcock.
Eleventh—Levi P. Morton.

Dist.
I.—
II.—
III.—John C. Brogan.
IV.—August Schaffel.
V.—George W. Betts.
VI.—James J. Scully.
VII.—Isaac I. Hayes.
VIII.—Samuel Engel.
IX.—William H. Corson.
X.—Joseph Hoffman, Jr.
XI.—Elliot C. Cowdin.
XII.—Herman Wolf.
XIII.—Robert H. Strahan.
XIV.—George McKee.
XV.—William N. Loew.
XVI.—Frank Kearney.
XVII.—William T. Graff.
XVIII.—Christopher Pullman.
XIX.—Simeon E. Church.
XX.—I. Albert Englehart.
XXI.—J. C. J. Langbein.

The indorsement, "City, Number Six," is on the District Aldermanic tickets, and following are the Republican nominees:

Fourth District—Morris Friedsam.
Fifth District—John De Vries and John J. Morris.
Sixth District—Ferdinand Ehrhart and Friedrich Finck.
Seventh District—Henry E. Howland.
Eighth District—Henry C. Perley, Louis J. Phillips, and Stephen N. Simonson.

A very important matter to Republicans is to be on their guard against bogus electoral and general tickets. The former contains the names of the Presidential Electors, and the latter the names of the State, County, and Judiciary nominees, and, unless careful examinations of the numerous names on these two tickets are made, a Republican voter may be betrayed into voting for Democrats whose names have been substituted for those of the regular Republican nominees. A comparison of tickets with those given above will prevent mistakes and Democratic frauds.

HOME WORK.

Hon. J. H. Littlefield, of Brooklyn, who studied law with Abraham Lincoln, will address the Lincoln Hayes and Wheeler Campaign Club, (colored,) at Bethel Hall, No. 106 West Thirtieth street, at 8 o'clock this evening.

The colors which were competed for on Friday night by the different uniformed political organizations, it is generally understood, has been awarded to the Orion Battery of Jersey City, which created such enthusiasm along the line of march.

Orders have been issued from the head-quarters of the New-York Division Boys in Blue, to officers commanding organizations attached to that division, to hold their commands in readiness to parade after election, the time to be designated in future orders.

The Anthony H. Hills Association of the Twenty-first Assembly District, named in honor of one of the most active Republicans in the Nineteenth Ward, is doing good service to the Republican cause. Mr. Hills declined the Assembly nomination in favor of Mr. J. C. Julius Langbein, a rising young lawyer, whose election is beyond a doubt.

TILDEN TACTICS IN NEW-JERSEY.

HUDSON COUNTY LIQUOR-DEALERS' ASSOCIATION,
JERSEY CITY, Nov. 2, 1876.

DEAR SIR: At a regular meeting of the above association, held at the Avenue House, Five Corners, on Wednesday, the 1st inst., the following was unanimously adopted, viz.:

Resolved, That the Secretary notify each and every member of the trade to use his influence in defeating the election of the following nominees for members of the next General Assembly: Mr. Lewis, in the First; Mr. Tilden, in the Third; Mr. Bingham, in the Fifth Assembly District of Jersey City, as they are opposed to the liquor trade.

Attention to this will promote your own interest.
Respectfully yours,
FREDERICK RUEMPLER, Secretary.

MR. PEABODY'S ACCEPTANCE.

The following note from Mr. Charles A. Peabody, accepting the Republican nomination for Surrogate, was received by Mr. Benjamin K. Phelps on Saturday evening:

NEW-YORK, Nov. 3, 1876.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter informing me of my unanimous nomination by the Republican County Convention of the County of New-York for the office of Surrogate. I beg to assure you that I appreciate the honor of such nomination, and readily comply with your request that I accept it.

I am, gentlemen, very truly yours,
CHARLES A. PEABODY.

BENJAMIN K. PHELPS, Esq., Chairman; WILLARD BULLARD, Secretary.

THE HIGH BRIDGE SUICIDE.

WILLIAM HILDEBRANDT'S DEAD BODY AND WHAT WAS FOUND ON IT—WHAT PROMPTED THE DESPERATE MAN TO TAKE HIS LIFE.

Coroner Ellinger yesterday assumed charge of the body of William Hildebrandt, who shot himself on Saturday, the junction of Jerome and Sedgwick avenues, near High Bridge. Besides a brief note, written with a pencil, explaining why he was prompted to commit the rash act, there were also found on the body several documents of an interesting character relating to a law suit which Hildebrandt instituted in the Supreme Court several years ago against William B. Ogden, of High Bridge, whom Hildebrandt charged with the seduction of his wife. The note explaining why he committed suicide, which was found in the hat worn by the deceased, read as follows:

"Please call William B. Ogden, (alias Tompkins,) High Bridge. He can identify me. He is the Ruin of my famil e, and the fault of my suicide, he keeps me out of my money wrongfully. God says I dont wish the death of the sinner but that he may live. I hope he may be merciful to my soul and receive me in mercy."

Between the leaves of a much-worn and soiled diary for 1873 a note certifying that William Hildebrand was affected "with cataracts in the eyes to such an extent as to disable him from obtaining a living by his own labor," was found. This note, which was signed with the name of Arthur Mathewson, M. D., Surgeon to the Brooklyn Eye and Ear Hospital, had evidently been used by Hildebrandt to excite the sympathy of charitable persons in his behalf. A slip clipped from the columns of the New-York Sun, which was also found in the diary, reported a motion before Judge Barnard for leave to file a supplementary complaint in the action of William Hildebrandt and wife against William B. Ogden, "involving the seduction of the plaintiff's wife, birth of an illegitimate child, and alleged published libels." The following bill against Ogden, evidently drafted shortly before the death of Hildebrandt, was found among the documents in his possession:

Note due Aug. 6, 1866	$4,000
Simple interest on note from Aug. 6, 1866, to Aug. 6, 1876	2,800
Bonds	14,000
Interest on bonds at seven per cent. annually from Aug. 6, 1866, to Aug. 6, 1876	9,800
Total amount	$30,600

Six months interest has been paid on bonds.

According to the slip cut from the newspaper referred to it appears that previous to the motion the suit of Hildebrandt against Ogden had been compromised for the sum of $20,000, of which $4,000 had been then paid by Ogden. The bill against the latter was enclosed in a common yellow envelope and addressed to "Mrs. Mariana Ogden, High Bridge." All the circumstances surrounding the suicide point to the supposition that Hildebrandt had been to the Ogden residence for money, and that in consequence of noncompliance with his demands he was rendered desperate, and while in that condition shot himself on reaching the public highway. The body of the suicide was yesterday removed from the Morgue by order of the Coroner and taken in charge by an undertaker, who was instructed to prepare it for burial.

OFFICER BROCK'S MURDERERS CONVICTED.

The trial of Charles Oschwald and Thomas Ryan, charged with the murder of Officer Brock, in Newark, on the morning of Aug. 3, last, was concluded in the Essex County Court of Oyer and Terminer, yesterday. The case was given to the jurors at 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoon. At midnight they had not agreed, and Judge Depue left for home. At 9 o'clock yesterday morning notification was sent to the Judge that an agreement had been reached. He soon arrived, and the jurors were conducted into the court-room. In answer to the usual questions, they announced that they had agreed upon a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree against both the prisoners. They were polled and each announced that that was his verdict. The prisoners received it with a nervous, anxious air, and were remanded to the County Jail to await sentence.

AN HISTORICAL SERMON.

The West Twenty-third Street Presbyterian Church was well filled yesterday morning, upon the occasion of the delivery of a historical sermon by Rev. Dr. Erskine N. White, the Pastor. The service was opened with singing and prayer, which was followed by Scripture reading and special prayer for the Church by Rev. James C. Edwards. After the singing of the 1,123d hymn, Dr. White read a carefully-prepared history of the growth of the church since its organization by Rev. Mr. Edwards, Feb. 9, 1834, written in accordance with an invitation from the late Presbyterian General Assembly. The eighth anniversary of the institution of the Sunday evening prayer-meetings was celebrated in the evening with appropriate services.

TILDEN'S FALSE ISSUES.

"IS IT SAFE" TO TRUST HIM?

REASONS WHY HONEST MEN SHOULD NOT SUPPORT MR. TILDEN—THE PERSISTENT VIEWS OF SOUTHERN STATESMEN SHOW THAT THE SOUTH WOULD RULE A DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENT.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Grave fears were expressed by the capitalists and bankers of New-York in their letter to Mr. Evarts that the country is in peril. Those fears have been re-echoed by the merchants in other cities. And they are now stated with stronger emphasis in the address from leading firms and companies to the manufacturers, mechanics, and working men of New-York.

Mr. Evarts, in his conservative and guarded speech, avoided a particular discussion of the dangers that might attend a return to power of the party which went out with Mr. Buchanan. He remarked, however, that in the struggle for national integrity, which we had won by the sacrifice of hundreds of thousands of our bravest and best—our heroic and cherished dead, and at the cost of hundreds of millions of treasure, we had had a tremendous eye-opener, and that we ought not soon to require another. This thought, which keenly touched his hearers, suggests a careful remembrance at this time of the historic facts that explain our recent past and which may have their bearing on our immediate future, to the end that, in the guidance of our Ship of State, our dearly-bought experience may not be, as Coleridge says, "like a lantern on the stern that shines only on the waves behind it."

Mr. Evarts did allude to the Southern claims, which, as they exceed in amount our funded debt, seem worth considering, by remarking that those who are saying "Anything for a change," may not in fact desire a change likely to double the national debt and re-open at the same time the issues of the war. Mr. Evarts' story of the Scottish boar-hunt, with the moral that if the veto broke we would find out what was the matter, receives new point from the announcement that the general amnesty has restored the Solid South to a basis of loyalty, so that they will all be loyal citizens who are to claim damages for what they suffered while waging war against the Union. It is also announced that Southern newspapers protest against Mr. Tilden's pledge to veto claims which Southern members of Congress are specially pledged to support.

But another point, closely akin to the Southern claims, and of yet larger moment, hardly seems to have received the consideration to which it is entitled. Certain of our citizens, Republican as well as Democratic, gentlemen of substance and intelligence, have announced their intention to vote for Mr. Tilden as the reform candidate. They do not profess to approve of Mr. Tilden's indorsement at the beginning of the rebellion of the right of secession and the unconstitutionality of the coercion of seceding States. They give as the reason for now supporting the Democracy, that the interest and honor of the country demand a government with a higher tone socially, intellectually, and morally, than that which has been sometimes exhibited by the present Administration in its civil service at home and abroad—that the Administration was bound to reflect the integrity, the intelligence, and the culture of the American people, and that as it had failed to crown the heroic record of the Republican Party with the severest civic virtue, that party should be dismissed from power for a season that after four years of enforced retirement and reflection it might return chastened and purified to resume the guidance of the great nation which it had saved from dissolution.

The whole argument rests upon the assumption that should Messrs. Tilden and Hendricks be elected, we might expect, as certainly as in the olden time, that if, at the end of their four years' term, a Republican President should be chosen, the Solid South would accept with docility that decision of the country, and promptly resign the national power and the national capital to the new representatives of the will of the nation.

There are some familiar historic facts which seem to bear upon this point as illustrating the clear, earnest, and persistent views of Southern statesmen from generation to generation, on their right to become independent at pleasure, and illustrating also the acquiescence in these views of the Northern Democratic leaders.

The report of Mr. Madison on the resolutions of 1798–9, for which that eminent publicist later in life expressed his regret, regarded the Constitution as formed, not by the people of the United States, but by "the sanction of the States given by each in its sovereign capacity," and recognized the right of each State to nullify all acts which it might hold to be unconstitutional. This was the doctrine which called forth Washington's letter, shortly before his death, to Patrick Henry, declaring his fear, and his words should command attention in this Centennial year, that the tranquility of the Union was "hastening to an awful crisis."

In 1832, when South Carolina made an attempt to enforce that doctrine, Gen. Jackson put it down, on the ground that "disunion by armed force was treason;" and in his letter to Mr. Howard, May 1, 1833, he said: "The tariff was only the pretext, and disunion and a Southern Confederacy was the real object. The next pretext will be the negro or slavery question." Gen. Jackson's view of the intention of the movement is confirmed by the facts stated by Mr. Pollard, in his Southern History of the War, that in 1832 a medal was struck inscribed: "John C. Calhoun, First President of the Southern Confederacy."

In 1852 the Democratic party, under the guidance of its Southern leaders formally adopted the Kentucky and Virginia resolutions of 1798 and 1799, "as constituting one of the main foundations of its political creed." It was then, in accordance with that creed, that Mr. Tilden said in his letter to Hon. William Kent, Oct. 26, 1860—a letter written in advance of Mr. Lincoln's election, and in which Mr. Evarts said he set the copy for Mr. Buchanan—"A State may snap the tie of the confederation as a nation might break a treaty, and repel coercion as a nation might repel invasion."

In 1856 the Richmond Enquirer declared: "If Fremont is elected, the Union will not last an hour after Mr. Pierce's term expires." In 1860, in the South Carolina Convention which passed the ordinance of secession, Mr. Rhett said: "The secession of South Carolina is not the event of a day. It is not anything produced by Mr. Lincoln, or by the non-execution of the Fugitive Slave law. It is a matter which has been gathering head for years." Mr. Keitt said: "I have been engaged in this movement ever since I entered public life." Messrs. Parker and Inglis made similar declarations—and Mr. Everett stated of his own knowledge, "that leading Southern politicians had for thirty years been resolved to break up the Union as soon as they ceased to control the United States Government, and that the slavery question was but a pretext for keeping up agitation and rallying the South."

How far the war so bravely and persistently fought by the South, and its results as exhibited to-day in emancipation and equal suffrage, with no conditions of military service, education, or taxation any more than in New-York, have begotten a new devotion to the Union and the Constitution, and have changed their desire and resolve to establish their independence when they no longer control the national Government, may possibly by some persons be considered an open question.

But the utterances of Southern statesmen of the class represented by Mr. Hill and Mrs. Toombs do not indicate the "docility" which has been so confidently ascribed to them; and it would seem that the doctrine of secession has not been settled by the war to the complete satisfaction of the Northern Democracy. One of its most prominent and able representatives, Hon. Clarkson N. Potter, declared in Congress as late as 1874, "If I were now to make a Constitution for the future government of rising States, I would put a provision in it whereby a certain number or proportion of the States might go out of the Union whenever they pleased." The fact that Mr. Potter is to-day the Democratic candidate for Congress in Westchester shows no disapproval by his party of his advocacy of the advantages of secession in opposition to the Republican doctrine based upon the views of Washington and Webster.

When the rebellion of 1860 began, there was no "Solid South" to sustain it. In Georgia it was precipitated on the people, and as to Virginia and Maryland it was admitted that they were to be coaxed or dragooned into the movement. The original programme did not contemplate a war; but Maryland, as soon as she might secede, was to pass an act rescinding the act of cession to the United States of that part of the District of Columbia on which Washington stands. Washington was then to be seized under color of right as belonging to the State of Maryland, and the Southern Confederacy was to be improvised with the Constitution and laws as they stood, with a single amendment allowing masters to hold their slaves where they liked. The new confederacy was to be proclaimed the United States de facto; the allegiance of the Army and Navy was to be claimed; recognition by the foreign Governments represented at Washington was to be demanded; an invitation was to be extended to the Northern and Western States, excluding New England, to resume their places in the new confederacy, on the same terms as in the old. That invitation it was thought would be sooner or later accepted, and the Government was to move on.

That programme, the exactness of which was certified to after the war by Gen. Scott, who had been early advised of the plans of the Southern leaders, was defeated in its most important feature—the possession of Washington—by the accidental discovery by a gentleman of this City of the secret intention of the Maryland leaders to make their Legislature pass an act of secession the moment it should meet. Of this intention Mr. Lincoln was at once advised and by his order Gen. McClellan arrested in advance of its assembling the members of the Legislature. The failure to secure the national capital with its muniments of title increased the difficulties of the movement, and the Sovereign Pontiff alone of the powers of Europe extended to the Southern Confederacy an official recognition. Imperial France was strongly hostile to us, and only the prudence of England prevented her accession to the proposition of Napoleon for a joint recognition.

If successful in the present contest, and enabled to wield again the national power, to reorganize the Army and Navy, which a foreign war, or the fear of one, might perhaps enlarge, and to direct the diplomacy of the Republic, it seems clear that if the desire for Southern independence, which has inspired Southern statesmen from generation to generation, has not been extinguished, its skillful and experienced leaders, taught by the lessons of the last war, and controlling this time "a solid South," will scarcely omit to avail themselves of the opportunities of preparation afforded by a four-years' term.

When, under Mr. Buchanan, the secession leaders were asked if they deemed it consistent with their characters as gentlemen to betray the country which they were professing to serve, and to violate the Constitution they had sworn to support, they answered without hesitation that all was fair in war, and if they were at war with the American people in 1860, is it impossible that they may regard that war as continuing to-day? The last Message of Mr. Jefferson Davis declared "the undying, unconquerable resolve to be free," and the Southern people are described as being more than ever united in what their President called "a common and holy cause."

Looking at the possibilities, it may be rash to remember that in their scheme of national dissolution, the Southerners had ardent supporters at the North. The correspondence of Jefferson Davis showed that Mr. Franklin Pierce had predicted that the fighting would be in our own streets. Mr. Vallandigham recommended his Southern friends to fresh victory on Northern soil. Ex-Gov. Rodman M. Price, of New-Jersey, said that his State "would go with the South from every wise, prudential, and patriotic reason." And Hon. Fernando Wood, as Mayor, in May, 1861, after announcing his view that ours was "a Government created by opinion." and which "could not be held together by force," recommended that New-York become "independent," and "a free City."

Mr. Tilden, in his letter to Mr. Kent, said that if the Republican Party should acquire complete possession of what he called "the Federative Government," "to the people of fifteen States it would be a foreign Government."

If the Governor, in this view, correctly represents the South, of which he stands, to-day the conspicuous representative, his Excellency's words would seem to promise for a Republican President who might be elected to succeed him a reception at the capital, not as the constitutional Executive of the nation, but as an invader and foreign foe. If the view of the Governor be correct, might not his Republican successor, before taking his seat at Washington, be compelled to overcome the resistance of the solid South, no longer as a slave confederacy, but as a compact power, recognized abroad as the United States de facto in possession of the Capitol and all the muniments of the Republic, and with an Army and Navy and national machinery reconstructed for the Southern Government. I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
JOHN JAY.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, Nov. 4, 1876.

THE KELSEY MURDER MYSTERY.

The impression which has gone abroad that at the recent term of the Circuit Court for Suffolk County, on motion of District Attorney Wickham, a nolle prosequi was entered in the cases of Rudolph and Royal Sammis, indicted for complicity in the murder of Charles G. Kelsey, is incorrect. The facts are that Mr. Wickham stated to the court that in his opinion the defendants were not guilty of the crime. He had been advised by Gen. Barlow, in April last, to have a nolle prosequi entered, but did not then wish to take the responsibility, as the case was not properly in his hands. Since then, however, the Attorney General had committed the case to him, and he felt that he could not go to trial with any certainty of conviction. If a nolle prosequi were entered now, a new indictment could be found at any time when new evidence might warrant it; but if the indictment went to trial and an acquittal should result, no further proceeding could be taken, no matter what evidence might be discovered. Judge Barnard, however, viewed the matter differently, and advised that the case be brought to trial, that the accused might be relieved from the odium of having the indictment remain any longer. He consulted with his associates on the Bench, and the unanimous conclusion was against permitting the nolle prosequi to be entered. The Judge then said that Mr. Wickham could have the benefit of Judge Dykman's order, made in April, that the defendants be discharged on their own recognizance, and Mr. Wickham concluded to accept the proposition. Judge Barnard accordingly directed an order to be entered releasing the bail and discharging the defendants on their recognizance, in the sum of $1,000 each, no proceeding to be taken against them except after sixteen days' notice.

MONEY OBTAINED BY FALSE PRETENSES.

William Jacobs, of No. 157 Smith street, Brooklyn, was arrested by Detective Zundt, of the Brooklyn Central Office Detective Squad, on Saturday night, on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses. The prisoner, who is a German, aged sixty-two years, and who formerly kept a lager-beer saloon on Atlantic avenue, is said to have been for some time engaged in the business of black-mailing liquor dealers who have been complained of by Oliver Cotter. Whenever he learned that one of the fraternity was in trouble, he would go to him and offer to help him on payment of $10. Augustus Francks, who keeps a saloon at No. 1,766 Fulton street, was complained of recently for selling liquor on Sunday, and Mr. Jacobs went to him and kindly offered to "see him through" for $10. Mr. Francks suspected something wrong, and went to Superintendent Campbell, who told him that if Jacobs came again he should pay him the money, and send word to the Superintendent. Jacobs came again, word was sent to Head-quarters, and Detective Zundt was detailed to take charge of the case. The bargain was all completed, and the money paid, the detective meantime watching the whole transaction from his hiding-place behind a screen. Putting the $10 in his pocket, Jacobs walked out of the saloon, assuring the proprietor that it was all right. Detective Zundt followed Jacobs down the street, and engaged him in conversation until they arrived opposite the Twelfth Precinct Station-house, when he invited him inside and asked him to hand over the $10 he had just received from Francks. Jacobs handed over the money without saying a word, after which he was locked up in one of the cells. He will be arraigned for trial this morning.

THE HOBOKEN FIREMEN'S TROUBLES.

During the fire at Busch's Hotel, Hoboken, last Summer, one of the firemen was arrested for climbing a ladder to rescue a lady from the burning building. The Fire Department preferred charges against Officer Michael Kevlon, who made the arrest, and demanded his dismissal. The Board of Police Commissioners refused to comply with the demand. On Saturday night the members of Washington Hook and Ladder Company had a meeting and disbanded the company. The doors of the fire-house were locked and the keys given to Chief Curran. Hoboken Engine Company No. 1 will meet to-night and will probably follow the same course. The disbandment of these companies leaves only one fire-engine company in active service in the city. The propriety of organizing a paid fire department is being agitated.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

Mr. Edwin Booth has commenced proceedings against Messrs. Jarrett & Palmer in reference to the use of his name as applied to the theatre.

Mary Scolen, aged thirty-five, of No. 27 Washington street, was last evening severely cut in the face with a razor by Mary Sheridan, who was arrested.

John Shea, aged thirty-five, residing at No. 1,136 Third avenue, made an ineffectual attempt at self-destruction, last night, by cutting his throat with a razor. He was removed to Bellevue Hospital.

A German carpenter, named August Richter, aged fifty, committed suicide yesterday in his room at No. 50 Stanton street. Abandonment on the part of his wife is believed to have been the incentive to the act.

George Sweeny, a sailor, residing at No. 42 Hamilton street, was committed for trial in default of $1,000 bail yesterday morning, at the Essex Market Police Court, on the charge of carrying concealed weapons.

The congregation at the Sunday morning Service of Praise in Chickering Hall was the largest of the season. Rev. Samuel Colcord made an address on "The Joy of Salvation." Rev. Dr. Wedekind preached in the afternoon.

On Saturday last the New-York Enamel Company, No. 103 Chambers street, sent their errand boy, John O'Brien, aged seventeen, to the Shoe and Leather Bank to cash a check for $140. O'Brien, after obtaining the money, absconded.

Ann Burk, a homeless woman, who was arrested for intoxication by an officer of the Sixteenth Precinct last evening, was discovered to be in a dying condition at 9:50 P. M. Dr. McLeod was summoned to attend her, but she expired a few minutes before his arrival at the station.

While John Lang, of No. 340 Pearl street, and Cornelius Crowley, of No. 300 Pearl street, were engaged in an affray at an early hour yesterday morning, Lang struck his antagonist on the head with a glass tumbler, inflicting a wound which made the removal of the injured man to the New-York Hospital necessary.

The body of an unknown man was found yesterday morning in the East River, at the foot of Seventeenth street. The man was apparently about thirty-two years of age, wore a red mustache and "imperial," and was attired in dark diagonal suit, white shirt and calf-skin shoes. The body was removed to the Morgue.

Services in memory of the late Mrs. Emily Bliss Gould, well-known as the founder of the Christian Schools in Rome, Italy, whose remains have been recently brought to this country, will be held at the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church, (Fourth avenue and Twenty-second street,) on Sunday afternoon next, at 3 o'clock.

The Sunday evening meetings for the benefit of the "street boys" were recommenced last evening at the Rivington Street Lodging-house of the Children's Aid Society. A large number of homeless boys were present, and listened attentively to earnest addresses by Messrs. Henry E. Hawley, Manning Merrill, and Dr. C. E. Lockwood.

John Hock, thirteen years of age, who resides at No. 619 Sixth street, was arraigned before Justice Smith, at the Essex Market Police Court, yesterday morning, on the charge of stabbing a lad named Gottlieb Eanholm, of No. 609 Eighth street, in the back, inflicting a severe wound. The prisoner acknowledged his guilt, and was held in $500 bail to answer.

In response to a general order sent out to the various precincts on Saturday night, the Police Captains assembled at head-quarters yesterday, and were strictly enjoined by Superintendent Walling to watch places where Croton water is used for other than domestic purposes, and to prevent, as far as possible, all waste of the same during the present emergency.

George W. Fisher, aged fifty-five, of No. 112 Charles street, and Shubal Downes, aged sixty, residing at the corner of Perry and West streets, at 2 A. M. yesterday accidentally fell through a hatchway, from the second floor of a stable at No. 172 Charles street. Fisher was instantly killed, his head having struck with terrible force against the flooring beneath. Downes was very badly injured on the back and hips, and was conveyed to a hospital.

While August Stockel, a wood dealer of No. 248 West Fifteenth street, was walking along East Houston street toward the Bowery, about 11 o'clock on Saturday night, he was assaulted by a man named John Hayes, a sailor, who resides at No. 156 West Twenty-eighth street. Hayes first struck him on the chest, and, seizing his gold watch and chain, valued at $100, ran toward Second avenue closely pursued by Mr. Stockel, whose outcries attracted the attention of Officer Stepper, of the Seventeenth Precinct, who joined in the pursuit and succeeded in capturing the prisoner. Upon being taken before Justice Smith, at the Essex Market Police Court, yesterday morning, the prisoner denied the charge, but it was proved to the court by two witnesses, one of whom saw him strike the blow, and the other saw him throw away the watch, which was afterward recovered, that he was the guilty person, and he was held to answer at the General Sessions in $2,000.

BROOKLYN.

The son of Samuel Bowen, five years old, residing on the Jamaica plank road, shot and killed himself yesterday, while playing with his father's pistol.

The butcher's shop of Jacob Fassnacht, No. 1,856 Fulton street, was entered by a sneak thief, on Saturday afternoon, during the temporary absence of the proprietor, and robbed of $25.

Rose Duffy, aged seven years, whose parents reside at No. 114 Eighteenth street, South Brooklyn, while playing with matches yesterday, set her clothes on fire, and was fatally burned.

The Coroner was notified yesterday, to hold an inquest on the body of Margaret Short, whose parents reside at No. 314 Flushing avenue, who was found dead in her bed yesterday morning.

Patrick Cox, aged three years, was badly burned about the head and body yesterday, while playing with other children around a bonfire at the corner of Fourth avenue and Douglass street.

A carpet-bag, the contents of which were valued at $50, was stolen from the front of No. 298 Lafayette avenue, on Saturday, where it had been left temporarily by its owner, Mr. D. C. Barnard.

Groceries and table cutlery, valued at $13 80, were stolen from the store of John Farrell, corner of St. Mark's and Washington avenues, on Friday night, by a thief who gained admission through a rear window.

Simon Calvin, the driver of a truck owned by the De Bostie Glass Company, was arrested on Saturday night, charged with running over and killing George Morgan, aged twelve years, residing at No. 684 Hicks street.

Ellen Martin, of No. 274 Division avenue, Eastern District, fell out of the third story window of her residence yesterday while intoxicated, and was severely injured. She was taken to the Eastern District Hospital in an ambulance.

The first cricket match of the season will take place to-morrow, on the Prospect Park ground. The match has been arranged by the Manhattan Club to enable business men to participate after casting their votes, as it is presumed that the day will be observed as a partial holiday.

Mr. and Mrs. Crawford, of No. 253 Washington street, were out riding yesterday in Sixth avenue, when their horse took fright and ran away, upsetting the wagon and throwing them both to the ground, injuring Mrs. Crawford seriously in the left side. She was taken home in an ambulance.

James Farrell, aged forty-three years, residing at No. 184 Hamilton avenue, quarreled with his wife on Saturday night, during which she assaulted him with a knife, and attempted to cut his tongue out. The injured man was taken to the St. Peter's Hospital, in Hicks street, where his wound was dressed. His wife was not arrested.

Detective Curran, of the First Precinct, yesterday recovered the following property, which has been identified as a portion of that stolen from the residence of P. Hartman, No. 134 Johnson street, on Friday: A muff and boa, valued at $50; a diamond ring, $150; a gold ring, $65, and a gold breast-pin, $25; total, $260. The total value of the property stolen was about eight hundred dollars.

LONG ISLAND.

The sloop Louise, of Greenport, Long Island, Capt. George Tuthill, when between Block Island and Montauk Point on Saturday, bound home light, was thrown on her beam-ends. The crew were taken off by a smack from the island, and subsequently landed at East Hampton. The Louise was taken in tow by the schooner Isaac Eaton, and towed to Newport.

NEW-JERSEY.

Mrs. Mary McCluskey, while crossing Boyden street, Newark, on Saturday night, was run over and fatally injured.

James Masson, one of the victims of Friday night's stabbing affray in Newark, was very low last night, and his physicians said he could not live through the night. Charles Weber, who was also dangerously cut, will recover.

Larry Holton, formerly a Police Officer of Newark, became engaged in an altercation some time ago with one Patrick McManus, and was bitten by his opponent on the thumb, the wound extending to the bone. Lock-jaw has set in, and Holton, it is said, lies at the point of death. McManus has been arrested.

THE MAILS FROM EUROPE.

THE SERVICE FROM ENGLAND—NEW ARRANGEMENTS TO BE MADE BY LORD MANNERS—THE UNITED STATES PLAN ADOPTED.

From the Manchester Examiner.

For a considerable period a feeling has existed among the leading steam-ship companies trading between Liverpool and New-York that they have not been treated quite fairly in the matter of the Post Office service. The contract has hitherto been given for a term to a particular company or companies—in the present instance it is held by the Cunard and Inman Lines—and the British Post Office pays to them subsidies amounting to upward of £100,000 a year. There was a time when such an arrangement was not only equitable but in all respects desirable; but steam-ship lines have recently increased in number, and as the new ones possess boats which have made passages no less rapid, if not quicker in some cases, than the vessels of older companies, the opinion has gained ground that all should have an equal share of the mail service and the advantages attaching to it. After holding the subject for a long while under consideration, the Postmaster General has taken a step which is intended to secure the desired end. From the statement of our London correspondent yesterday it appears that Lord John Manners has resolved not to renew the contracts, which expire this year, with the Cunard and Inman Lines. Instead of contracting with one or more companies, the Postmaster General will invite all the lines in the transatlantic trade to send in at the beginning of each month a list of their sailings for that month, and a copy of the log of the three previous voyages. The Post Office authorities will thus be able to judge of the comparative time of the different voyages. The lines which make the quickest passages will receive the mails, and the privileged company will be paid for the actual weight of letters, newspapers, and book packets they carry. The plan, in fact, is that which has been adopted in the United States, and it has been attended there with marked success. A slight difficulty, however, is expected to arise out of a circumstance which only applies to mails dispatched from this side of the Atlantic. Mail steamers are required by the conditions of the Post Office service to call at Queenstown on the outward voyage, and are thus compelled to submit to a delay of seven or eight hours. It is feared that the sum to be paid for the conveyance of the mails will not induce the best lines to submit to this detention. They have their character for speed to maintain, and may not care to risk their reputation for the sake of the sum which the Post Office is disposed to pay. Of course the best lines are those by which it is most desirable the mails should be carried, and all the advantages of the change would be neutralized if the amount of payment is insufficient to attract the highest class of service. But it is hard to conceive that a difficulty so trifling will not be overcome, and we are sure that if reasonable representations are made to the Postmaster General he will discover a means of arranging terms that will be satisfactory to the steam-boat owners, as well as to the public interested in the rapidity and economy of the ocean postal service.

A MYSTERY EXPLAINED.

The body of Phillip Ottman, the missing Fulton Market butcher, for whose recovery alive a reward of $2,000 was offered, was found yesterday morning floating in the East River at the foot of Twenty-fifth street. As the body bore no marks of violence, and a valuable watch which Mr. Ottman usually wore was found in his pocket, it is supposed that he was accidentally drowned.

INTIMIDATION IN LOUISIANA.

WHITE LEAGUE EFFORTS TO DISFRANCHISE THE COLORED MEN—MEN FROM ARKANSAS AND MISSISSIPPI PICKETING THE GREAT REPUBLICAN COUNTIES—THE COLORED MEN GATHERING AT THE PARISH SEATS TO EVADE THEM—DISPATCH FROM GOV. KELLOGG TO MR. CHANDLER.

The following dispatch was received yesterday by Hon. Z. Chandler, at the Republican National Committee's head-quarters, Fifth Avenue Hotel:

To Hon. Z. Chandler:

Dispatches from Ouachita and Morehouse Parishes, near the Arkansas line, and West Feliciana near the Mississippi line, report that these parishes are now patrolled by the White League, reinforced by armed bodies from Arkansas and Mississippi. Most of the Republican leaders have been driven away or murdered. Under the State law voters are entitled to vote at any poll in the parish in which they reside. The colored people generally are attempting to reach the parish seats of those parishes in order to vote under protection of the authorities. Numbers of them have been intercepted by the White League pickets, and their registration papers destroyed. In some instances they have been terribly beaten. Some six hundred colored men who have managed to evade these picket and reach the town of Monroe, Ouachita Parish, have been ordered by a proclamation of the Democratic Mayor to leave the town immediately. In West Feliciana several hundred colored men have come in, in like manner, to Bayou Sara, the parish seat. The White League of that parish, aided by armed bodies from the adjoining counties in Mississippi, have picketed the approaches to the town to prevent others coming in. These parishes are very largely Republican, but in spite of the intimidation thus practiced, I believe there is no doubt that the overwhelming Republican majorities in other parishes will give us the State.

WILLIAM P. KELLOGG.

COLORED VOTERS ROBBED OF THEIR REGISTRATION PAPERS—THE NEGROES IN MONROE READY TO PROTECT THEMSELVES.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 6.—A special to the Republican from Monroe, La., says: Colored people coming here to vote are stopped by armed men and their registration papers taken from them. The State Supervisor of Registration has been instructed to issue duplicates. J. Edwards Leonard, Republican candidate for Congress from the Fifth District, has been appointed by Gov. Kellogg, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of this State, vice Taliferro, deceased. The city is unusually quiet to-night. A special to the Democrat from Bayou Sara says Capt. Thomas C. West, the Democratic candidate for Sheriff, who was ambuscaded and shot yesterday, died this morning.

A dispatch from Monroe, La., says a large body of armed negroes entered that city on Sunday night, secreted their arms, and remained there. To-day the Mayor issued a proclamation commanding them to take their arms and return to their homes. They were about to comply when Hamlet, the negro Sheriff, collected about 300 negroes in the city limits, and advised them not to obey the Mayor's proclamation. The negroes took the Sheriff's advice and concluded to remain. They say they will have another company join them to-night.

A REASON FOR VOTING EARLY.

The polls are likely to be crowded late in the day. Don't wait. Vote at the earliest possible moment. Polls open at 6. You decide to-day who shall be Chief Magistrate of one of the most powerful nations in the world. Don't put off exercising the privilege.

GREAT EXCITEMENT IN CAROLINA.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBIA, Nov. 6.—There has been great excitement throughout South Carolina during the day and night, but no serious disturbances have been reported. The United States troops are scattered all over the State in small squads, and it is now believed that their presence will insure a quiet election. At the request of the Democratic Committee, Gen. Ruger sent two companies to Charleston to-day. The officers have in every instance been instructed to do their duty, and give protection to all citizens, without regard to party or color. Gov. Chamberlain has official information that the rifle clubs are armed and riding in the back counties, but it is believed that they have not attempted to molest the negroes.

LOOK OUT FOR IMPORTED VOTERS.

THE SITUATION IN PENNSYLVANIA—HOW THE DEMOCRATS OBEY ORDERS—PHILADELPHIA ROUGHS COMING TO THIS CITY TO VOTE—THE TACTICS OF TILDEN AND HIS FOLLOWERS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 6.—The situation on the last night before the election is not changed from the favorable position which was described last night. The confidence heretofore felt by the State Committee is confirmed by examination of the Democratic Committee estimates of the country, which have been obtained from all important points. These figures give the State to Hayes by a good majority. Nevertheless, in pursuance of the order from New-York, the Democratic politicians are claiming the State, fixing Tilden's majority at 30,000. Senator Wallace, usually a modest enough man, is as loud and blatant as anybody. What can be gained by this course nobody can see, unless their prophecies and predictions are to be boasted of after election, in case their contemplated frauds should succeed well enough to give them the election in some decisive State, and their assumed confidence be made a cloak for crimes against the people.

To-night twenty roughs are to leave for New-York at midnight. They are from one ward, and their intention is to work half a day at repeating in New York, and then return here in time to vote, where they are too well known to get in more than one ballot each. The necessary "spotters" accompany the gang, and it is to be hoped they will fall into the hands of Supervisor Davenport.

Another scheme for the use of the Philadelphia repeaters, since the seizure of the tax-receipt paper has taken away their occupation here, is for a crowd of them to vote early and leave at once for Wilmington, the home of the pure Mr. Bayard, where the Republican city ticket is likely to win in a fair vote. The Democrats control the polls, and can admit these reform votes often repeated. This plan has been attended to by Republicans as well as possible. The sending of men to New-York as above noted should cause double vigilance there, as it shows the attempt to cast the votes on the names fraudulently registered is not abandoned.

THE OUTLOOK IN INDIANA.

A REDUCED VOTE FROM THAT OF OCTOBER EXPECTED—THE REPUBLICANS WELL ORGANIZED AND DETERMINED—THE CHANCES OF SUCCESS ABOUT EVEN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 6.—The vote will be at least fifteen thousand less than in October. The Greenback vote will be probably one-half less. The State will be close, with the chances evenly divided. The Republicans are well organized and determined, and the sanguine ones claim the State by from two to five thousand. The Democrats rejoice greatly, but none claim an increase over the October plurality. With the reduced vote and the spirit of Republicans, and in the absence of helps which the Democrats had in October, there is certainly an even chance for Republican success.

THE PROSPECTS IN CONNECTICUT.

THE STATE CONCEDED BY THE DEMOCRATS TO BE VERY CLOSE—GEN. HAWLEY'S ELECTION TO CONGRESS CERTAIN—DEMOCRATIC "MULES."

Among the telegrams received by the National Republican Committee last evening, was the following from H. T. Sperry, Chairman of the Connecticut State Committee:

HARTFORD, Nov. 6, 1876.

Hon. R. C. MCCORMICK:

We get good reports from all parts of the State. The Democrats concede that the State is very close. I think Hawley is sure to be elected in this district. The weather is threatening. A fair day will give us a thousand more votes, and there is a strong feeling that we shall carry the State for Hayes. Congressman W. H. Barnum is giving away "mules" in Hartford, New-Haven, Bridgeport Norwich, Meriden and New-London.

H. T. SPERRY.

REPEATERS IN THE BORDER TOWNS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TITUSVILLE, Nov. 6.—I have positive information that thirty-six Democratic repeaters left here this afternoon for Dunkirk. Would it not be well, through your valuable paper, to caution the Republicans to look out for frauds of this description in all border towns?

B. H. HURD,
Vice Chairman Republican County Committee.

THE CAMPAIGN IN NEW JERSEY.

A DEMOCRATIC MEETING IN PASSAIC—THE SPEAKERS PRAISING HAYES AND WHEELER—BLASPHEMOUS UTTERANCES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PASSAIC, Nov. 6.—The Democrats made a death-struggle effort to-night to strengthen their cause here by holding a meeting in Whitehead's Lyceum Hall. John M. Falk, of New-York, was the first speaker. He praised our Army officers, and declared Charles Francis Adams to be the greatest statesman by far in this whole country. He said that the Southern wing of the Democratic Party which left the Union was a mere faction, led only by the devil and his imps. "The mass of the Republican Party," said he, "are honest men. The Democrats have three candidates,—Tilden, Hendricks and Reform. Rutherford B. Hayes is an honest, upright, good man, as far as I know, who did his duty faithfully. The speaker tried to excite enthusiasm ever the names of Charles Francis Adams, Frank W. Bird, and Lyman Trumbull, but they fell as flat as cold pancakes. He told the old story of Hans Schneider, the miller, who judged himself fit to enter heaven, "mit a tight squeeze," and then in the same breath closed his address with the boast that Samuel J. Tilden would go to the White House to-morrow. Esquire Fonda, of Paterson, followed. He said that during the war there were only two parties, one North and one South, and then declared that the Democratic Party had existed in unbroken vigor since the days of Jefferson. He further declared: "I was a Republican once, but while the lamp holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may return. I have no fault to find with Republicanism, which I honor, but with Grantism I do find fault." Before he was half through his praise of Hayes and the old Republican Party, as he called it, the President of the club had to request the members to be quiet and not disturb the speaker by leaving.

Early in the evening copies of the Paterson Guardian, containing a most outrageous untruth about the riotous outrages which were going on all over Passaic during the Republican parade on Saturday last, were circulated through the hall. The truth is a party of Democratic roughs came on the train with the Guards from Paterson, and did insult some ladies and do a little damage, but were promptly suppressed by our Police. This is the second time that the Guardian has tried to make political capital by maligning Passaic City. Mr. Fonda read from this sheet an article entitled "Things for Tax-payers to Remember," interpolating this piece of blasphemy: "Thomas D. Hoxsey, B. Weller Hoxsey, T. Frank Hoxsey—Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, all in a row." This meeting will make a large number of votes for the Republican ticket.

THE ELECTION TO-DAY IN VIRGINIA.

PRECAUTIONS TAKEN BY THE PRESIDENT TO PREVENT VIOLATION OF THE ELECTION LAWS AT PETERSBURG.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

RICHMOND, Nov. 6.—Judge R. W. Hughes, of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, and the Marshal and United States Attorney of the district, have each received the following order from the President, and have gone to Petersburg in obedience to it:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, Nov. 4, 1876.

SIR: Whereas, I have reason to believe that offenses are likely to be committed within the above named judicial district, against the provisions of chapter 7, title crimes, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, you are, therefore, hereby requested and directed to attend at Petersburg, Va., on the 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th days of November, current, for the purposes mentioned in section 1,988 of said Revised Statutes.

U. S. GRANT.

The section referred to, 1,988, says: "Whenever the President has reason to believe that offenses have been, or are likely to be, committed against the provisions of chapter 7 of the title crimes, within any judicial district, it shall be lawful for him, in his discretion, to direct the Judge, Marshal, and District Attorney of such district, to attend at such place within the district, for such time as he may designate, for the purpose of the more speedy arrest and trial of persons so charged; and it shall be the duty of every Judge or other officer, when any such requisition is received by him, to attend at the place and for the time therein designated." Chapter 7 of the Revised Statutes relates to crimes against the elective franchise and the civil rights of citizens.

MR. MORTON FOR CONGRESS.

The betting in the pools last evening on the result in the Eleventh Congressional District averaged 100 to 75 in favor of Levi P. Morton.

A VILLAINOUS DEMOCRATIC PLOT.

An attempt at fraud on the part of the Democratic State Committee of New York was discovered yesterday forenoon. The fraudulent attempt, had it been successful, would have lost the Republican national ticket from ten to twenty thousand votes in this State. It was ascertained that the Democratic State Committee had sent into very county in the State, outside of New-York and Kings Counties, a fraudulent electoral ticket, resembling the Republican ticket in every way, except in respect of the least obvious feature, the names printed on it. It is the Republican ticket with Democratic Electors. The purpose of this ticket was to deceive Republican voters, and lead them to cast it instead of that containing the names of Republican electors. Upon the back of the genuine Republican ticket there is an elaborate fanciful design, printed in blue ink, with a star for its centre-piece, with the words "Electoral Ticket" printed over the top in ink of the same color. The face of the ticket is printed in red ink, with the names of the Electors in double columns. The ticket was intended to be issued by the State Central Committee to the various County Committees at the latest possible minute, and every effort was made to keep the knowledge that a ticket of peculiar design had been prepared from reaching the Democratic Committee. It was feared that the very trick that was discovered yesterday would be perpetrated. But, despite the utmost secrecy, the wily Democratic Committee found out that this ticket was in existence, and, after an immense deal of scheming, got possession of a sample ticket. Information of this piece of knavery reached the State Committee Sunday afternoon. It was stated that the bogus ticket was being sent out from the Democratic State Committee by private messengers, as secretly as possible, all over the State. It was known that large numbers of copies left New-York on the various Sunday night trains, and that others would be sent out yesterday. Col. Drake De Kay, Adjutant of the Veterans' Association of the Boys in Blue, Department of the United States, took it upon himself to intercept a package of tickets on its way from the Democratic Committee rooms to the person designated to receive it. He requested the services of an officer from the Twenty-ninth Precinct, and, in response to his request, Capt. Williams detailed one of the detectives attached to his precinct. The officer was stationed near the Everett House, and watched steadily from 1 o'clock yesterday morning until noon. All the time men were leaving the Everett House at frequent intervals, who were supposed to be carriers of tickets. But there was a degree of risk in arresting and searching a man not known to have tickets in his possession. Should it turn out that he had no tickets, the attempt to discover the fraud would be exposed and frustrated. It was not till 12 o'clock that James Purcell, who was known to be a messenger of the Democratic Committee, and who was confidently believed to have a bundle of tickets about his person, came out of the Everett House and started down town. The officer followed and arrested him, and took him at once to the Twenty-ninth Precinct Station-house, on Thirtieth street. He was searched, and upon his person was found a bundle about eight inches long, wrapped in brown paper, and sealed carefully at the ends and along the sides with red sealing-wax. Around one end was a printed label, which read:

"TO BE DELIVERED WITHOUT FAIL MONDAY, NOV. 6."

The address upon the bundle was as follows:

HON. ERASTUS BROOKS,
Evening Express Office,
RICHMOND COUNTY.

Capt. Williams was consulted as to the next thing to be done, and advised that the prisoner and the bundle be taken before a United States Commissioner, who alone had authority to open it. Col. De Kay forthwith proceeded to the office of the United States District Attorney, in the Post Office Building, and there made affidavit that to the best of his knowledge and belief the bundle found upon the prisoner contained counterfeit United States securities, or other counterfeits, which were intended for distribution, against the peace and dignity of the United States. A warrant was then made out by United States Commissioner Deuel, and the bundle was immediately opened. It contained between seven and eight hundred of the tickets described above, printed in sheets of twelve tickets each. Inclosed in the bundle was found an envelope containing a printed circular, of which the following is an exact copy:

NEW-YORK, Nov. 4, 1876.

Herewith I send you a package of Electoral tickets, which are fac-similes of the Republican Electoral ticket, which will be voted in a large number of the counties of this State, they having been furnished by the Republican State Committee.

If the Republicans use a ticket similar to this in your county, the inclosed tickets, which have the Democratic Electoral ticket printed on the inside, may be a convenience.

Warn our friends to look out for spurious tickets in their respective election tickets, and instruct them to watch the canvass closely, and see that our tickets are correctly counted. Yours truly,

WILLIAM W. GORDON.

It having been ascertained that the bundle contained nothing which could properly be called counterfeits under the United States law, Commissioner Deuel declined to hold Purcell. He restored to him the 800 bogus tickets and the printed circular, and suffered him to continue on his way to Hon. Erastus Brooks, editor of the New-York Evening Express, who it is understood has agreed to see that the tickets are well distributed in Richmond County, where he resides. It is not likely, however, that the knavish purposes of the Democratic Committee will meet with much success, for Col. De Kay has notified by telegraph every prominent Republican on Staten Island; and has received replies from every town on the Island, stating that the Republicans will be wide awake to-day, and will not suffer a single Republican to be humbugged by the bogus tickets. Word has also been sent to the County Committees all over the State, and though the bogus ticket may do harm, it will fall far short of being so effective as its authors expected it to be.

WHITE LEAGUE TACTICS IN NEW-YORK.

The methods to which the Democracy will descend in its endeavors to bully, bribe, and intimidate colored citizens into voting for Tilden, or in abstaining from voting for Hayes, is shown by the following letter recently addressed to a well-known and respectable colored resident of the Second Assembly District. If this sort of thing is practiced openly in the North, what must be the condition of the colored voter in South Carolina and Mississippi?

EVERETT HOUSE, Nov. 6, 1876.

Mr. Perkins:

SIR: I hereby give you notice that unless you renounce your intentions of voting to-morrow, I will hand you over into the hands of the law to be dealt with accordingly. By order of the Chairman.

ROBERT C. FERGUSON, pro I. K.

DEMOCRATIC NATURALIZATION COMMITTEE, CENTRE STREET.

DEAR SIR: Having heard that you swore under oath to have resided in this State twelve months, when registering your name as a voter, I caution you to be prepared to answer all questions that I may ask you on the eve of election.

JAMES BYRNE, Secretary, pro C. F.

To M. PERKINS.

LARGELY INCREASED REGISTRATION.

NEWBURG, Nov. 6.—The total registration in this city is, this year, 4,496; last year, 3,850; in 1872, 3,985.

WATERTOWN, Nov. 6.—The registration in this city is 2,700, several hundred more than ever before.

SCHENECTADY, Nov. 6.—The total registration of this city is 3,531.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 6.—The registration here is unprecedented, in view of the election to-morrow. Including those listed to-day, there are 55,000 names on the great register, and it is expected this city will cast 40,000 votes. Several parties were held to answer to-day for fraudulent registration, and arrests are still being made. It is believed that frauds will be pretty effectually suppressed. Ample preparations have been made for preserving order.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 6.—Seventy-nine out of ninety-four precincts in this City have reported their registration, which is 55,822. Counting the others in the same ratio would make a total registration of 67,007.

SECESSION IN NEW-MEXICO.

THE SPANISH ELEMENT HOSTILE TO THE AMERICAN.

A PROJECT TO SPLIT UP THE TERRITORY—WHY THE COUNTRY SHOULD NOT BE ADMITTED AS A STATE—A LAND OF ROCKS AND DESERTS—DEMOCRATIC STATE-MAKERS DISGUSTED.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

SANTA FE, New-Mexico, Saturday, Oct. 28, 1876.

The people of New-Mexico do not blend well. They are about seven parts Spanish, more familiarly known as "greasers" to two parts civilized Indian and one part American. The latter element is the smallest and noisiest. It seems to be a thorn in the flesh of the native Mexican, and the latter employ much of their time these days doing political penance. The American element has got pretty much the control of territorial and county affairs, and for several years has had the delegate to Congress. Santa Fé is the head-centre of political Slate-making, and it is here that candidates are created. The Mexicans have stood it as long as possible and now break out into open revolt. The nominations just made by both parties for delegate to Congress are from the old Spanish families, the Democrats naming Pedro Valdez and the Republicans Trinidad Romero. Congress will have to get a Spanish interpreter to guess what the nominee says if he ever says anything. Having selected one of their own stripe for delegate, the natives have formed what they call a people's party in each county, generally in opposition to the Republican ticket, and usually with some very bitter resolutions about what they call the "Santa Fé ring." In caucus and convention they are getting up a good many schemes, the latest being a secession movement, which proposes to have the territory divided up; and politicians and papers are stirring up a revolt of the southern counties. Grant, Dona Anna, and Lincoln are to be cut off and ceded to Arizona. The reason assigned is, that these counties have been denied a fair representation in the councils of the Territory by the selfish action of the politicians composing the Santa Fé Ring. Colfax County, in the north, is also among the seceders, and its people want to be annexed to Colorado. It is said that the southern counties, if unable to carry out the scheme for annexation to Arizona, will ask to be formed into a new territory, with a strip off of Arizona to make up a desirable area. The section in which this revolt is warmost is peopled almost exclusively by the descendants of the old Spanish families. They do not like to be interfered with, and cling to their old customs and traditions. They prefer not to know anything new under the sun. They were bitterly opposed to State admission, and make the meddling of the Americans in this matter an additional pretext for seceding. They also complain of bad laws and heavy taxes. By annexation with Arizona, they blend with a people after their own heart, and are not likely to be dragooned into statehood. They claim that Arizona has better laws and lower taxes. And one of the organs that has done most to foment this secession movement contends that "emigration to Arizona is greater than to New-Mexico. Her mining, sheep, and cattle interests yearly attract more capital from the Pacific Coast than we can hope to bring from the States for years to come, and a railroad will traverse her plains long before one will penetrate our Territory. Her American people are alive to the necessities of educating the rising generation, and the English-speaking Legislature has already created a public-school system equal to any in the States, directed by well-paid and talented teachers; while New-Mexico, from the prejudices of her Legislature, is without any school system worthy of the name."

It is generally understood that the bill for the admission of New-Mexico, which passed the House at the last session of Congress, is to be urged again with new advocates and a strong lobby at the coming session. But should it by any means get through the Senate with amendments, and go back to the House, it is not likely to meet with the same favor as was shown it last Spring. The Democrats who so generally voted for the Colorado bill were assured by the Democratic delegate then representing that Territory in Congress, that there was not a particle of doubt but that the new State would go Democratic, and send two Senators and a Representative to swell the list of Confederates in Congress; and the same promises almost secured the passage of the New-Mexico bill. The late election in Colorado has been a clean Republican sweep, and the disgusted opposition will not at present be found trying their hand any more to create Democratic States out of our Western territories. There are several good reasons why New-Mexico should not be admitted as a State. Its people do not desire it, and its population and progress are not sufficient to justify it. It is in no sense a progressive State. Its people are not of us. It is pretty much what Daniel Webster pictured California to be when in 1850 the bill for admitting that State was under discussion—"A land of rocks and deserts with rattlesnakes enough to fence it." Some extravagant statements have been made in support of the fitness of this Territory for admission. Her population, which the census of 1870 placed at 91,870, (including 30,000 Indians,) has been figured out to be 140,000 white citizens in 1876. Any one who has been in the habit of making trips through the settlements and plazas is fully aware that if there has been any change in population at all in the past six years it has been a falling off instead of a gain. There are fewer Americans than there were in 1872, and the natural increase among the Mexican families has been offset by the emigration into old Mexico. There are not over seventy-five thousand residents, Mexican and American, in New-Mexico, and of this number not one-half exercise the rights of citizenship. They are generally content to live in their adobe huts and till their ranches or tend their flocks without neighbors to annoy them, using their hired help as slaves, never reading books or newspapers, and never so happy as when in ignorance of what is going on in the world. The most numerous inhabitants are the joint offspring of Peons and Indians, with an abhorrence of schools, and knowing but one religion, the Roman Catholic. If the estimates of population are as presented, less than one-tenth of the children attend school. And as for the argument of the newspaper heading the revolt, that Arizona will give them better school and other privileges than they are afforded under the laws of New-Mexico, it is only just to say that this is the merest pretense. The seceders don't want better schools. They prefer no schools, and would like very well to become "a law unto themselves." It is a clannish feeling, more than anything else, that started and promotes the secession efforts in New-Mexico. The people are not well to do; they are not making anything of their opportunities. The reports show that the valuation of property in 1874 was $7,603,772, with, as the politicians claim, a population of 140,000. Colorado, an adjoining Territory, had in 1870, with a population of only 39,000 and no railroads, a valuation of $16,000,000. Most of the native leaders are opposed to progress. A bill to improve the public school system, and to exclude sectarian instruction, was introduced into the Territorial Legislature last Winter, and was defeated by a lobby of Jesuit priests. A Santa Fe paper, alluding to the matter at the time the bill was under debate, says: "Saturday morning's coach ominously brought from Las Vegas, the boss Jesuit, Father Gasparri; and the parish priest Truchard was on the street yesterday morning button-holing members, and impressing that liberty-destroying dogma of their 'obligation to the Roman Catholic Church,' over that of any civil government."

The inhabitants of New-Mexico make a living by wool-growing, "ranching," and mining. The profits from their sheep and crops, including the vintage, give the "grandees" an opportunity to gather a good deal of wealth, which is generally shown in their vast estates, and not by an elegance of buildings or "style" in living. The average citizen gets on in about the same old way, never richer and never poorer, while the lower element, the men who hire out, are but little better off than slaves, receiving scant wages for hard work. The rich quartz gold mines in different parts of the Territory have at times been a good deal talked about, and capitalists would have aided to develop them had they been sure of protection. As it is, but few skilled miners dare venture in to work. According to figures obtained at the Executive Department, the following was the mining product of New-Mexico for the year ending June 30, 1876:

County.	Gold.	Silver.	Total.
Colfax	212,500 00	......	212,500 00
Balance of Territory	20,000 00	2,500 00	22,500 00
Total	$282,861 36	$425,329 45	$708,190 81

This is a showing of $200,000 better than that of 1874. There is to be added to the mining product above stated 208,000 pounds of copper, chiefly from the Santa Rita mines, the only copper produced in the Rocky Mountains.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

PROBABILITY OF A DIRECT UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN RUSSIA AND TURKEY—ATTITUDE OF GERMANY.

LONDON, Nov. 6.—Reuter's dispatch from Paris says: "Private advices from Constantinople represent that negotiations are going on for a direct understanding between Turkey and Russia, which would render a European conference unnecessary."

BERLIN, Nov. 6.—Minister Von Bulow, Chief of the Foreign Office of the Empire, in a speech before the Reichstag to-day on the Eastern question, declared that the affairs of Turkey were not likely to affect Germany directly or indirectly. The policy of the Government was that Germany should always remain a firm bulwark of peace.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—The Vienna correspondent of the Standard says the Porte, yielding to the demands of Russia, has agreed to relinquish the positions captured by the Turks since the night of Oct. 31; hence the evacuation of Deligrad.

The Post in a leader announces that England has proposed a conference at Constantinople. The conference is summoned on the basis of the integrity and independence of the Ottoman Empire. The programme will be identical with Lord Derby's peace proposals. The powers participating will be required to pledge themselves to renounce selfish objects of territorial aggrandizement.

The Standard's Paris dispatch confirms the foregoing announcement.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times says it is certain that Russia is preparing for all eventualities. Russian officials, who have hitherto been anxious to deny all military preparations, now maintain that the whole army is on a war footing. This sudden frankness may possibly be by command.

The Telegraph's Vienna special says it is reported in political circles that Prince Gortschakoff has assented to England's proposal that a conference be held at Constantinople.

A Daily News' dispatch from Paratchin reports that the Servian Army can hardly be said to exist. It is utterly disorganized. The roads are covered with snow. Fugitives and soldiers are dying like rotten sheep.

CONVICTION OF STROUSBERG AND OTHERS IN MOSCOW—IMPLICATION OF MANY DIRECTORS OF THE MOSCOW COMMERCIAL LOAN BANK.

MOSCOW, Nov. 6.—The jury in the Strousberg and Moscow Commercial Loan Bank trial found Dr. Strousberg and M. M. Handen, Poljanski and Soumacher guilty. The other accused parties were acquitted. Sentence will be pronounced to-day. The number of persons accused was very great. Seventeen members of the Council of the Moscow Commercial Bank were charged with having presented a fictitious report for the years 1873 and 1874. Two of the Directors were accused of having accepted bribes from Strousberg, to advance him some 7,000,000 roubles without sufficient security, and of having presented to the shareholders and published in the newspapers a false balance sheet up to Oct. 1, 1875, and fifteen members of the council were charged with having, either by negligence or connivance, facilitated these and other nefarious transactions.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—The Times' dispatch from Berlin reports that Dr. Strousberg has been sentenced to perpetual banishment from Russia.

CURRENT TOPICS ABROAD.

FRENCH DUTY ON FOREIGN SALTINGS—CARDINAL PATRIZI SAID TO BE DYING.

HAVRE, Nov. 6.—The merchants of this city dealing in salt provisions have petitioned the Senate to abolish the duty of four per cent. which was added in 1874 to the duty of foreign saltings. Their petition especially refers to saltings from America.

LONDON, Nov. 6.—A dispatch from Rome to Reuters Telegraph Company reports that Cardinal Constantine Patrizi, Vicar General of the Pope, is dying.

The American schooner Delia O. Yates, Capt. Yates, from Liverpool, sunk after being in collision soon after leaving port. Her crew have landed at Holyhead.

The Russian bark Berger, bound from Philadelphia for Antwerp, was spoken Oct. 25. She had lost her mainmast.

ROME, Nov. 6—Signor Sella has been re-elected at Sparenia, and Signor Saintbou has been defeated at Pozzuoli.

American coin to the amount of $95,000 was withdrawn from the Bank yesterday for New-York.

REVIEW OF THE ENGLISH AND CONTINENTAL GRAIN TRADE.

LONDON, Nov. 6.—The Mark Lane Express of this evening, in its weekly review of the British corn trade, says: "The cold but seasonable weather of the past week has been favorable for field labor. A large quantity of wheat was sowed under satisfactory conditions. The potato disease has not assumed alarming proportions, though certain localities have suffered severely. Irish advices are less gloomy. At the principal provincial markets holders of wheat strenuously resisted any decline. In London a slight concession was necessary to effect sales. Foreign wheat was not so firm, and part of the advance produced by political influences has been lost. The imports last week were unusually light, and although stocks are still large, the rate of importation is far less than the estimated requirements of the country, and the considerable diminution reported from Liverpool attests the inroad made into stocks. Maize remains about the same. Other feeding stuffs are slightly cheaper. It is not unlikely that this decline will shortly be more than recovered in consequence of the increased Winter consumption. The floating cargo trade has been quiet in the absence of arrivals at calling ports. Silver to-day is quoted at 53⅜d.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—The President to-day appointed Isaac F. Sheppard, of Missouri, to be United States Consul at Hankow, China.

Samuel R. Smith was to-day appointed Revenue Storekeeper for the Seventh District of Kentucky.

The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $617,969 36, and from Customs, $364 495 31. The following balances were in the United States Treasury to-day at the closing hour: Currency, $12,248,524; special deposit of legal tenders for the redemption of certificates of deposit, $41,805,000; coin, including $33,521,700 in coin certificates, $75,658,077; outstanding legal tenders, $368,537,716.

THE ELECTION AND THE DEPARTMENTS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—The Executive Departments present a dull appearance to-day. Only the merest routine work is being attended to, and the election to-morrow is an absorbing topic of conversation. There is a very noticeable lack of Centennial visitors in the city. The Executive Mansion, which was crowded every day through the Summer and Autumn, is to-day comparatively deserted.

A LIFE INSURANCE RECEIVERSHIP.

ALBANY, Nov. 6.—The order requiring the Continental Life Insurance Company of New-York to show cause why it should not be dissolved and a Receiver appointed to supersede the one now in possession was returnable to-day. Counsel appeared before Justice Osborn, and by mutual consent the matter was allowed to stand over until a week from to-morrow.

DISTURBANCES IN RALEIGH, N. C.

RALEIGH, Nov. 6.—To-night, as a Democratic procession was passing down Fayetteville street, it was assaulted by a negro mob. The Police interfered, and were attacked by the negroes with pistols, knives, clubs, and stones. Two policeman were badly injured and several other white persons were hurt. Order has since been restored.

THE CLOSING EXHIBITION.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 6.—To-day's admissions to the Centennial Exhibition are reported at 77,957, of which 1,304 were at half fee. The grand total of cash admissions to date foot up: At fifty cents, 6,738,402; at twenty-five cents, 733,005; total, 7,473,406. The total cash receipts at the gates were $3,553,702 50.

The poultry show closed this evening, and the work of removing the specimens will begin to-morrow, when the list of special prizes will be announced.

Company M, of the Third United States Artillery, which has been on duty at the Exhibition since the opening, will remain at the grounds until the 18th instant, when one half of the force will be returned to their posts. The others will remain until all the Government exhibits are removed. The detachments of the Engineering Corps, Ordinance, Signal Service, and Medical Departments, comprising 95 men, all under the command of Capt. Warner, will also remain on duty at the grounds until the exhibits in their charge shall have been returned to Washington. As the lease of the International Stock Yard has not yet expired, and as the yard is of no further value for exhibitors who have had their packing-boxes burned, the latter will, therefore, be able to manufacture new cases under cover without being compelled to build sheds for the purpose. The large amount of surplus lumber remaining in the stock-yard is to be utilized in the erection of a grand stand for the accommodation of participants in the closing exercises on Nov. 10, as it has been determined, in case the weather is propitious, to hold the ceremonies in the open air. This stand is to occupy the open space on the west side of the Main Building, and will have a seating capacity of about three thousand. In case of rain, the ceremonies will take place in the Judges' Hall, instead of the Main Building, as was originally proposed.

The President, Mrs. Grant, Secretary and Mrs. Fish will arrive on Wednesday to participate in the closing ceremonies on Friday.

In regard to the exportation of goods on exhibition, notice has been received from the Treasury Department requiring the usual export bond where goods are to be transported over other than bonded railway lines to the port of final departure, and thence by other than the regular lines of steamers.

MADISON BARRACKS BURNED.

THE OFFICERS' QUARTERS DESTROYED—THE QUARTERMASTER'S PAPERS LOST—LOSS, $50,000.

Madison Barracks, at Sackett's Harbor, were partially destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon. The fire broke out in the officers' quarters, and was confined to them. The Fire Department of Watertown, N. Y., was called on for assistance, and responded, but, owing to the inability to procure railroad transportation, did not go. Gen. Ayres' quarters were saved, but badly damaged. The Quartermaster's papers were all destroyed, and a large amount of property. The loss is estimated at $50,000. There is no insurance. The cause of the fire is unknown.

OTHER FIRES.

The Hengle House, a second-rate German boarding-house at the north end of Rock street, in Little Rock, Ark., was destroyed by fire at 3 o'clock Sunday morning. Two stone-cutters, named Patrick Shea and John Cooney, perished in the flames.

Benson Block, in Edgefield, Tenn., was destroyed by fire yesterday morning. The loss is estimated at $16,000, and is covered by an insurance of $3,500.

A fire yesterday morning in Concord, Ky., destroyed Taylor & Carr's store and warehouse, and the Odd-fellows Hall. The loss is not given.

The residence of Mrs. Gerry, in Newton Centre, Mass., was damaged by fire yesterday to the extent of $5,000: partly insured.

Seven small houses were burned at Sugar Notch, near Wilkesbarre, Penn., on Saturday, causing a loss of $3,000.

Boyce's flax factory, at Muncie, Ind., was burned on Saturday night. The loss is $25,000; insurance, $15,000.

BY MAIL AND TELEGRAPH.

One thousand troops arrived at Havana from Spain on Saturday last.

A daughter of David Donovan was burned to death at Rockland, Mass., on Sunday.

Mrs. F. F. Johnson was killed at Mareboro, Mass., on Sunday night, by falling down stairs.

Walter J. Wilson, Democratic candidate for the Legislature in the Second District of Luzerne County, Penn., died in Wilkesbarre on Sunday.

By a collision of vehicles at Lonsdale, R. I., on Sunday evening, Mrs. Mary Keogh was fatally injured and died yesterday morning. Miss Mary Ann Moran, aged 17 years, was also injured, it is feared fatally.

ILLEGAL REGISTRATION IN NEW-JERSEY.

Philip McGrane, of No. 15 Learing street, Newark, N. J., was arrested at Orange, N. J., yesterday for illegal registration, and is now in jail at Newark. Warrants have been issued for forty others known to be illegally registered, and will be served to-day at the polls if the men attempt to vote.

A SHERIFF'S POSSE FIRED INTO.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 6.—A special dispatch to the Picayune from Vicksburg says a Sheriff's posse, sent from Fayette yesterday to arrest a negro for shooting another, was fired into by negroes from an ambush, and two of the posse mortally wounded. The posse was unarmed.

A RUN ON A BANK.

TITUSVILLE, Nov. 6.—The Producers' and Manufacturers' Bank closed its doors this morning. There has been a run on the bank during the past week in consequence of the failure of the Pennsylvania Transportation Company. The assets of the bank are considered ample to meet all its liabilities.

THE YELLOW FEVER IN GEORGIA.

SAVANNAH, Nov. 6.—The total number of interments to-day was nine, of which six were from yellow fever. Adolph Gomm, of the firm of Gomm & Leffler, died to-day.

The Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution says: "The warnings which have from time to time been telegraphed from Savannah as to the danger of returning to that city seem to have little or no effect upon many of those who fled to escape the terrors of the yellow fever. No sooner does the news come from the stricken city that the disease has sensibly abated than those who escaped the pestilence by going to a healthier climate make all possible haste to return. Such a course is suicidal. The very air is impregnated with disease, and those who have been living in a different and a purer atmosphere are the very ones most likely to become fatally infected. We have seen a postal card from a prominent citizen of Savannah to a friend in this city in which he advises him on no account to return to the plague-beleaguered town for at least a fortnight. He states that the fever is still very prevalent, and that the new cases are confined mostly to those who have been foolish enough to return. Our advice to refugees is to remain away until the air has been purified by a black frost."

CALIFORNIA WEAKNESSES.

THE VANITIES OF SAN FRANCISCO.

A MANIA FOR SPECULATION AND GAMBLING AMONG ALL CLASSES—EXTRAORDINARY TASTE OF THE PEOPLE WHO HAVE AMASSED SUDDEN WEALTH—INFLUENCE OF THE MINING ELEMENT ON THE BUSINESS COMMUNITY.

SAN FRANCISCO, Friday, Oct. 27, 1876.

The wild determination of all Californians to bray themselves, their country, and their institutions ahead of all creation, made so strong an impression upon my mind that I have diligently been seeking a solution for this mystery. It seems to me that this Californianism springs primarily from the influence which the mining element has upon the social features of the Pacific Slope. The men of '49 regard everything that can now be found in California as the work of their own hands. The most besotted old bummer that limps paralytically through San Francisco has a fixed idea that he helped to build up the magnificent State whose future developments promise such wonderful things. And those who have maintained themselves above the surface, and have not been drowned by rum, arrogate to themselves a superior standing, a higher level in society, upon that very ground. It makes no difference whether they be rich or poor, all the early settlers alike claim for themselves that they built up the Pacific Slope. The trouble is that their claim is allowed. There are curious wrecks of humanity floating about this great city, clad fantastically and half insane, who are certain of half dollars and quarters from numerous people, simply because they came here in the early days and helped to build up the country. Should an eastern man be present when one of these forlorn creatures in his old frowsy uniform comes upon California street, the Wall street of San Francisco, and express his surprise at the general recognition that is extended to the unfortunate, his Californian cicerone will surely say, "Ah, of course you don't understand this, nor do we expect you to appreciate our feelings, but we have the deepest sympathy for those who helped us to build up the country, no matter how foolish or vicious they may have become."

The mining element controlled affairs in those early days, and appears to control things now. Everything seems to be subordinated to the mining stocks and to speculation in mining. Here they are not satisfied with one board, but must have three, although the population of San Francisco is barely 270,000. There is the Pacific Board, the California Board, and the San Francisco Board, each of which has its Stock Exchange and is independent of the others. This is pretty much as if there should be in New-York City an Atlantic Stock Exchange, a New-York State Stock Exchange, and a New-York City Stock Exchange. But, though the business transacted in Gotham represents a population of over two millions, one Stock Exchange has hitherto been found amply sufficient. It is obvious from this one fact that gambling in mining shares must be a very general pursuit, and indeed it is. The man who resolutely confines himself to the strict channels of his immediate business is looked upon by the community with those mingled feelings of contempt and admiration which a thorough-paced drunkard feels for a teetotal friend. He envies his vigorous health, and admires the calm blood that courses through the unfevered veins, yet, after all, he thinks the man is a milk-sop, too cowardly to know the joys of Bacchus. So here in San Francisco, everybody takes a nibble at the treacherous bait. The merchant down town, whose capital is just sufficient for his importing business, is on the sly bearing Ophir, while the wife of his bosom has bought the same stock for a rise. His clerks are all embarked on small speculative ships of the same kind, and condemn themselves to voluntary poverty in hopes of making a great raise and then going into business for themselves. Even the very cook in the kitchen is enabled through the discriminating business tact of some brokers to share in the delirious dance, for with so small a sum as a dollar one can venture in.

The method by which the single dollars of the poorest classes of the community are raked in by the sharks of Leidersdorff and California streets, is the familiar put and call of Wall and Broad in our own delightful City. Here you can have a put or a call upon a single share of Ophir or any other stock in the market for one dollar. The consequence is that the minds of almost the entire adult population are riveted upon mining stocks. Bulletins of the prices current are circulated every half hour, exposed in all the brokers' offices and in all the money exchanges, and sent to all the leading hotels. The large broking offices, where business is done on a grand scale, are furnished with enormous blackboards, on which the different stocks are painted in legible white characters, and the fluctuations are marked in chalk every hour. In front of these offices hundreds of men gather every day, coming as early as 9 o'clock and lingering until the final quotations are marked, when they slowly retire. Sometimes, when there is great excitement in the mining shares, there are thousands of such loiterers, the sidewalks are choked, and to pass on one must walk in the street itself among the bustling vehicles. They are essentially a queer crowd, composed of speculators and loafers. Not that there is any intrinsic difference between them, for the speculator of this character is simply a loafer who has raised a stake and is awaiting results, and the loafer is a speculator who is penniless and is awaiting a stake from some fortunate comrade. You may know easily the men who are in luck from those who are out. The former have decent habiliments, and heavy watch-chains of gold quartz in broad setting; the latter are clad in rusty Western cloth from which the dye has faded, leaving the color an indescribable kind of purple. They have neither watches nor watch-chains, and dinner is a problem to be solved either by abundant cheek or by the spirit of camaraderie which such a pursuit is calculated to evolve. There they stand, the lucky and the penniless, in rain or sunshine, during the livelong day, watching that miserable speculative pot boiling. So long as they can make a lucky hit or two, or can borrow from others, they continue this extraordinary kind of life. When they are what is emphatically called "played out," the enterprising seek the mines, and the shiftless drift into crime.

This is evidently worse than the lotteries, for with them the gambler's energies are not paralyzed, and he can work for his living, and buy lottery tickets, too. But here it is not so. The mere fact that a man has got a put upon some favorite stock seems to entitle him in his own mind to a positive respite from any active occupation until the turn is decided for or against him. The sentiment of all lawyers of eminence has been steadily against the legalizing of lotteries, and in most countries they have ceased to exist from a conviction of their demoralizing tendencies. Here, however, in California is something worse than lotteries, and instead of being frowned upon it seems to have the cordial sympathy of all classes in the community. No matter how important are other interests—and upon them, in the opinion of the judicious, the future prosperity of the Pacific slope really depends—there is not one of them which can command the attention of the public, or the purses of capitalists to the same extent. For a new mine, for a new departure in mining machinery, or for anything that is connected with mining, any amount of capital can readily be obtained. But for the most important enterprises, for even the water-works upon which the future of this city must hang, it is so hard to obtain any investments that the promoters are beginning to look to New-York and to London. And yet, in spite of this prevailing sentiment in favor of mining affairs, the majority of well-informed men do not hesitate to tell the stranger that the whole business is a rascally one, and that the public, who hold mining investments in a bona fide way, are skinned in the most deliberate fashion.

Without naming any mines, or any individuals, let me record what I have learned on this subject with regard to mines that are actually producing silver; for out of the entire stock list there are only three or four in this category. I am told that these valuable mines are invariably controlled by two or three individuals, who operate them in this way. They purchase the reduction mills in which the ore is converted into bullion, and as the transaction is made by themselves, with themselves, they deliberately charge for reduction just double the legitimate price. Silver ore can be reduced for $6.50 per ton, and they charge $13. Besides this monstrous fraud upon the shareholders, they have another method of profit in what is called tailings. By their process of reduction it is estimated that only sixty-five per cent. of the silver is obtained. The thirty-five per cent. which remains is the perquisite of the reduction mills. Now, as the valuable mines hoist up day for day 500 tons of ore, Sundays and all, it is obvious that during the two years or so of a mining productiveness a very pretty heap of tailings must accumulate. When it is the interest of the manager to make the tailings as rich as possible, it seems highly probable that thirty-five per cent. would not be the maximum amount of silver contained. Very possibly this portion of the silver may present itself in a more obdurate form than the other moiety, but I do not see how that can furnish any argument for its becoming the property of the mill, instead of the shareholders of the mine. It this abuse of tailings were altered, I am convinced that the dividends would increase in a very disproportionate ratio, for human nature tells us that when the cook has the drippings for a perquisite, and is uncontrolled, there won't be much fat left in the roast. And when the mills are owned by the controlling spirits of the mine, the tailings will probably be inordinately rich. It has been found necessary to have a Superintendent of Insurance and another of Banking in New-York State, to prevent certain evils. I am certain that a Superintendent of Mining is far more necessary here than either of these was in our own State. And I do not believe that in New-York City there will be any serious attempt to do anything with the Mining Board until there is some such official; for at present mining is about as honest and honorable as John Morrissey's skin game of faro.

The people who have succeeded by luck and the exercise of such arts as I have mentioned in amassing colossal fortunes are generally from the lowest orders, and their expenditure is usually of a very peculiar and marked kind. I have visited various furniture ware-rooms in this city, notably those of the West Coast Furniture Company, and from what I saw must believe that the homes of the mining kings (and queens) must be fearfully and wonderfully ornamented. Bright blue and red American Brussels carpets, Oriental rugs, furniture of a deep purple plush, heavy curtains of old damask, auction pictures, the most staring and odious vases of majolica, seem to be the staple articles. Regarding the pictures a story is told here of a mining sultan who, at the instigation of his wife, bought a large number of pictures at an auction. Next day a young man called, and requested to see the potentate of the silver world on important business. He was admitted into the plainly-furnished sanctum, which female taste had not yet decorated. "Jedge," said the young man, "if it's a fair question, how much did you pay for them picturs?" "Well," said the gentleman, "I gave on the average about seventy-five dollars a piece for the twelve." "Jedge," said the young man, with tears in his voice, "I painted them picturs, and only got $10 apiece; and if this is to be a fair deal I think you ought to tell Mr. —— [the auctioneer] to give me ten dollars a piece more." The gentleman declined to conduct the negotiation, and the young man retired exclaiming at the terrible way in which men of genius were judged by capitalists, and threatening to stick to his coach-painting and never do another "picture" for love nor money. The mining element greatly admire these works of art, and rather sympathize with the young man who did them; but he ought to have had a little more solid pudding, for the empty praise which they give him is not satisfying. But in some way which I fail to appreciate, the happy owner looks upon himself as having made some very valuable acquisitions in the art line, and other prides himself upon having furnished his walls so cheaply.

The influence of the mining element is also plainly visible in the stores of the leading jewelers. These people address themselves almost entirely to the instincts of the successful miners. They display huge gold watches, with enormously thick cases, which appeal strongly to the sterling sense of their favorite customers. Their chains are a kind of cable, in which quartz gold is strikingly conspicuous. Even their rings have the same substantial character. I saw a diamond solitaire, not more than three quarters of a carat, which was set in a ring half an inch broad and a quarter of an inch thick. The poor diamond twinkled feebly amid that mass of gold, and was about as perceptible as the morning star shining through a yellow mist. They deal extensively in cluster rings, too, and in huge pins, and they have a large assortment of stones off color, but of considerable size. But the greatest feature of the jewelers' stores is unquestionably the admirably ingenious manner in which they work up the gold quartz. Some of these devices are so pleasing, and display the beauty of the material so forcibly, that the majority of visitors from the East and the Old World never fail to purchase specimens. For the mining aristocracy the favorite form, after the watch-chain, is the locket, and some of these are so ponderous as to astonish a weak-minded traveler. The popular shape appears to be a gold horse-shoe, exceedingly solid, inclosing a mass of quartz, either rough or polished. Some of the rough masses, especially those where the gold is in thick pieces, and the quartz is of the rose pink variety, are very pleasing, and would surely find a ready sale East if the settings were not so very heavy. But there are some forms which delight the miners and which are very ridiculous, such as cigar-cases, and chewing-tobacco boxes. I have even seen toilet-caskets of it, but the gold-setting in every instance is of the heaviest possible style. This mania for big things is observable in everything. I asked Warren Leland, of the Palace Hotel, why he had such enormous steaks and such immense dishes of corned-beef hash. "Obliged to"—he said, "obliged to. Miners would leave if they didn't have twice as much as they can eat. They like to see plenty of everything. It makes them feel good." And yet, by a queer contradiction of sentiment, some of the wealthiest will not leave their small, poky, narrow houses, but have added on to them palatial structures, where they receive their guests. If you are a friend, you go to the old quarters; if only an acquaintance, you are ushered into the tomb-like drawing-room, where the vulgar magnificence makes you giddy you are inclined to be bilious. GERMS OF PESTILENCE AND DEATH.

From the Edinburgh Scotsman, Oct. 20.

The first of a series of science lectures to be given in Glasgow during the Winter months, was delivered in the City Hall last night by Prof. Tyndall, the subject being "Fermentation." Prof. Tyndall, who was received with applause, said that in a book with which they were all familiar, it was said "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and thou shalt find it after many days." and in more senses than one that precept was illustrated by his presence that night. First, and in a general sense, he stood indebted to the historians, the poets, and the philosophers of Scotland, and above and beyond all, to that venerable and illustrious man whom he was proud to call his friend—Thomas Carlyle; and second, and in a more especial sense, it so happened that one of the first rootlets of his scientific life derived nutriment from the City of Glasgow. It was by reading the Practical Mechanics' and Engineers' Magazine, a periodical published in Glasgow, that he yearned to have such apparatus as Leslie and Davy had, to enable him to make such experiments, and the very apparatus, similar and identical to those he first saw in the pages of that magazine, were those with which he illustrated his lectures in London. It was his intention to speak about fermentation, not in a metaphorical, but in the real sense, and he was perfectly certain that the only thing needed to make the subject interesting was suitable treatment. Our knowledge of fermentation and the ground it covered was augmented greatly of late, and every fresh acquisition confirmed the hope that its final issues would be of incalculable advantage to mankind. One of the most remarkable characteristics of the age was its tendency to connect itself organically with the preceding ages. Our forefathers may have been savages, but they must have been clever and observant ones—[laughter]—having fully explained the process of fermentation. In Pasteur's researches the bacterium remained a bacterium, the vibrio a vibrio, the penicillium a penicillium, and the torula a torula. Sow any of these in a state of purity in an appropriate liquid and you get it, and it alone, in the subsequent crop. In like manner sow small-pox in the human body, your crop is small-pox; sow scarlatina, and your crop is scarlatina; typhoid virus, your crop is typhoid; cholera, and your crop is cholera. The disease bears as constant a relation to its contagium as the microscopic organisms enumerated do to their germs, or as a thistle does to its seed. No wonder, then, with analogies so obvious and so striking, that the conviction was spreading and growing daily in strength, that reproductive and parasitic life is at the root of epidemic disease. The living ferments finding lodgement in the body, increase there and multiply directly, ruining the tissue on which they subsist, or destroying life indirectly by the generation of poisonous compounds within the body. This conclusion, which came to us with a presumption almost amounting to demonstration, was clinched by the fact that virulent infectious diseases had been discovered with which living organisms were as closely and as indissolubly associated as the growth of torula is with fermentation of beer; and here, if they would permit him, he would utter a word of warning to well-meaning people. They had now reached a phase of this question when it was of the very last importance that light should once for all be thrown upon the manner in which contagious and infectious diseases took root and spread. To this end the action of various ferments upon the organs and tissues of the living body must be studied; the habits of each special organism concerned in the production of each specific disease must be determined, and the mode by which its germs were spread abroad as sources of further infection. It was only by such rigidly accurate inquiries that we could obtain final and complete mastery over these destroyers. Hence, while abhorring cruelty of all kinds; while shrinking sympathetically from all animal suffering—suffering which his own pursuits never call upon him to inflict—an unbiased survey of the field of research now opening out before the physiologist, caused him to conclude that no greater calamity could befall the human race than the stoppage of experimental inquiry in this direction. A lady, whose philanthropy has rendered her illustrious, said to him, some time ago, that science was becoming immoral; that the researches of the past, unlike those of the present, were carried on without cruelty. He replied to her that the science of Kepler and Newton, to which she referred, dealt with the law and phenomena of inorganic matter, but that one great advance made by modern science was in the direction of biology or the science of life, and that in this new direction scientific inquiry, though at the outset pursued at a cost of some temporary suffering, would in the end prove it a thousand times more beneficent than it had ever hitherto been. He said this because he saw that the researches which the lady deprecated were leading us to such knowledge of epidemic disease as would enable us finally to sweep these scourges of the human race from the face of this earth. The very first step toward the extirpation of these contagia was the knowledge of their nature. The question then, which he wished to submit to their judgment was this: Was the knowledge which revealed the nature and which assures the extirpation of a disorder not well worth the price paid for it? It was exceedingly important that assemblies like the present should see clearly the issues at stake in such questions as this, and that the properly informed common sense of the community should temper, if not restrain, the rashness of those who, meaning to be tender, would virtually enact the most hideous cruelty by the imposition of short-sighted restrictions upon physiological investigation. It was a modern instance of zeal for God, but not according to knowledge. The excesses which zeal committed, public opinion must correct. There were other reflections connected with this subject which, even were he to pass them over without remark, would sooner or later occur to every thoughtful mind in that assembly. He had spoken of the floating dust of the air and the means of rendering it visible, and of the perfect immunity from putrefaction which accompanied the contact of germless matter and moteless air. Consider the woes which these wafted particles during historic and prehistoric ages have inflicted on mankind; consider the loss of life in hospitals from putrefying wounds; consider the loss in places where there are plenty of wounds but no hospitals, and in the ages before hospitals were anywhere founded; consider the slaughter which has hitherto followed that of the battle-field, often producing a mortality far greater than that of the battle itself; add to this the other conception that in times of epidemic disease the self-same floating matter has frequently, if not always, mingled with it special germs which produce the epidemic, being thus enabled to sow pestilence and death over nations and continents—consider all this, and you will come with me to the conclusion that all the havoc of war ten times multiplied would be evanescent if compared with the ravages due to atmospheric dust. This preventable destruction is going on to-day, and it has been permitted to go on for ages without a whisper of information regarding its cause to the suffering sentient world. We have been scourged by invisible thongs, attacked from impenetrable ambuscades, and it is only to-day that the light of science is being let in upon the murderous dominion of our foes. Men of Glasgow, facts like these excite in me the thought that the rule and governance of this universe are different from what we in our youth supposed them to be—that the inscrutable Power, at once terrible and beneficent, in whom we live and move and have our being and our end, is to be propitiated by means different from those usually resorted to. The first requisite toward such propitiation is knowledge; the second is action, shaped and illuminated by that knowledge. Of the knowledge we already see the dawn, which will open out by and by to perfect day, while the action which is to follow has its unfailing source and stimulus in the moral and emotional nature of man in his desire for personal well-being, in his sense of duty, in his compassionate sympathy with the suffering of his fellowmen. From the vantage ground already won I look forward with confident hope to the triumph of medical art over scenes of misery like that here described. The cause of the calamity being once clearly revealed, not only to the physicians, but to the public, whose intelligent co-operation is absolutely essential to success, the final victory of humanity is only a question of time. We have already a foretaste of that victory in the triumph of surgery as practiced at your doors.

FISH IN THE MOBILE MARKET.

The Mobile (Ala.) Register says: "It was once the pride of Mobile that her fish market was equaled by few upon the American coast and surpassed by none. Mobile Bay was, up to the close of the war, 'brim-full' of choice species of the finny tribe. Of late years, however—and, notably, just after the war—there was lack of numbers, while some species had disappeared altogether. It has been suggested (and the theory is plausible) that the cannonading and torpedo explosions during the war drove off the most delicate species, which are generally the shyest and most timid. We are informed, however, that they are returning, and that there is promise at an early day of ante bellum quantities and qualities of fish in our bay. No article of meat diet is more wholesome—especially in a warm climate—than fish, and an abundant supply is an abundant blessing to rich and poor alike."

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

SUCCESSFUL SILK BURGLARY.

THE STORE OF E. OELBERMANN & CO., ON WORTH STREET, ROBBED OF $10,000 WORTH OF SILKS.

At 8 o'clock yesterday morning, when the porter in the employ of Messrs. E. Oelbermann & Co., silk importers, who occupy the upper floors of the building Nos. 64 and 66 Worth street, opened the store, he was surprised to find scattered about the floor the paper wrappers which had been removed from pieces of silk. A hasty glance convinced him that the place had been visited and robbed by burglars during the interval between Saturday afternoon and yesterday. When the members of the firm arrived, an examination of the stock was made, and it was found that sixty pieces of black silk of the brand known as "Golden Wheel," and valued at between ten thousand and twelve thousand dollars were missing. Capt. Caffrey, of the Fifth Precinct, was notified, and instituted an investigation. On ascending to the top floor of the building, the scuttle was found open, and a closer examination showed that it had been torn open from the outside, and that a great deal of force had been used in tearing it from its fastenings. At the foot of the stairs leading to the scuttle were found a large sectional "jimmy," a brace, and bitt, two large bags made of india-rubber cloth, and several sandwiches. The building runs through to Thomas street, and the scuttle is situated in the centre of the structure. An examination of the adjoining buildings disclosed the fact that the burglars had unlocked the front door of the building at the corner of Church and Thomas streets and ascended through the upper floors which are chiefly occupied as offices for out of town firms, to the roof. They then traversed the roofs of the buildings Nos. 66 and 68 Thomas street, until they reached the building occupied by Messrs. Oelbermann & Co. It is probable that the burglars entered the building at the corner of Thomas and Church streets on Saturday evening, and locked themselves in, and occupied the Sabbath in breaking into and rifling Oelbermann's store. No clue to the thieves or the property has been obtained.

FUNERAL OF WILLIAM WHEATLEY.

The funeral of the late William Wheatley took place yesterday morning from the Church of the Messiah, corner of Thirty-fourth street and Park avenue. The edifice was well filled with the friends of the deceased, comprising a large representation of the dramatic profession. Upon the pulpit were several choice pieces of floral art, among which was one from Messrs. Jarrett & Palmer, consisting of a bank of white flowers, upon which a cross was diagonally wrought in violets, the whole being surmounted by a crown. On either side were a cross and anchor of immortelles. Upon a little table in front of the pulpit was a floral book, across its open pages being the word "Rest," wrought in violets. Large floral crosses stood on either side of the pulpit stairs. In the central aisle, at the base of the pulpit, was a bier covered with a pall. At 10:30 o'clock the funeral cortegé arrived. The casket containing the remains of the deceased was placed on the catafalque, the lid was thrown back, and upon it was laid a large and beautiful variegated floral cross and a wreath. The features of the dead actor bore a peaceful expression. The body was dressed in a suit of black broadcloth, and the hands were crossed over the breast. The casket was of rosewood, covered with black cloth, and mounted with silver-bar handles. The interior was lined with white satin, and on the inner surface of the lid was an oval silver plate, bearing the inscription, "William Wheatley, born Dec. 5, 1816; died Nov. 3, 1876; æt. 59 years, 11 months, and 59 days." As the cortegé entered the church, the organist, Prof. Edward Howe, played the funeral march from Beethoven's sonata, in A flat. After the coffin had been deposited on the catafalque, the chant, "Lord, let me Know mine End," was rendered by a quartete, comprising the following artists: Miss A. M. Wells, soprano; Mrs. Minnie Coit, contralto; Mr. M. B. Wood, tenor; and Mr. W. D. Marks, basso. A brief address was next delivered by Rev. Mr. Alger, who conducted the services. The deceased, he said, was a man of singular gentleness of manner, and of most estimable character. Possessed of a deep sensitiveness, he was always ready to assist the unfortunate, and to comfort the sorrowing. He was a great reader and a deep thinker, and while he took, comparatively, a slight active interest in the daily routine of affairs, he was, nevertheless, alive to the duties of a citizen, and performed his part faithfully, though in an unostentatious manner. He had been so much accustomed to submitting to the will of Providence, that when death warned him of his approach, Mr. Wheatley felt no terror, but looked upon it as another act in the great drama; the soul flew out of its casket to meet its Maker, the God who gave it. "Let us lay upon his placid brow the wreath of our love and approval," said he, in conclusion, "and learn from the lesson how brief is man's existence, and how swift and sure is the shaft of death." The choir sang the hymn, "I would not live alway," after which the burial service was read. It differed little from the ritual of the Protestant Episcopal Church. At its conclusion, an anthem for soprano solo and chorus, entitled "Beyond the smiling and the weeping" was rendered. The congregation was next permitted to view the features of the deceased for the last time, after which the remains were conveyed to Green-Wood Cemetery for interment. Among the members of the dramatic profession present, were Miss Mary Wells, Mr. Milnes Levick, Mr. Louis Aldrich, Mr. Henry C. Jarrett, Mr. Henry G. Palmer, Mr. John Vincent, Commodore Joseph H. Tooker, Mr. J. W. Colyer, Mr. R. Staples, Mr. Harry Watkins, Mrs. Eldridge, Mr. James Seymour, Mr. William Davidge, Mr. Bensen Sherwood, Mr. S. Hotheimer, Gen. G. W. Gile, President of the "Active Order of Friendship;" Mr. Louis Mestayer, Col. T. Allston Brown, Miss Louise Sylvester, and many others. There were no pall-bearers, and the ceremony was characterized by extreme simplicity.

A CLEVER SWINDLER.

Mrs. Mary A. Gibson, alias Hanson, who is charged with having defrauded Samuel Garretson and Horace Farrier and others out of large sums of money by false representations that she had fallen heir to an estate in Baden-Baden, bequeathed by Archbishop Wolff, of Freiburg, and which she was to acquire through the intervention of Cardinal McCloskey, had her final examination before Justice Keese, in Jersey City, yesterday afternoon. The main feature of the proceedings was the presence of Cardinal McCloskey in the Police Court as a witness for the prosecution. Isaac Parmenter testified that when, after her arrest, he told her that it was mean for her first to partake of the Farriers' hospitality, as she had, and then to beat them, she cried, and said she would pay the money back to them. Mr. Garretson testified that, but for her claim to large estates in Germany, he would not have made to her the large and numerous advances which he had made. Cardinal McCloskey, who had been sitting in the Justice's private office, was next introduced to the witness stand. Mrs. Gibson was directed to stand up, and then to walk toward the Cardinal, that he might the more easily see her. She walked with a face full of shame to a position in front of him, and the Cardinal testified:

I never saw her before; I don't know her; I know of no Bishop Wolff, of Freiburg; I can't say that there never was such a dignitary of the Church, but I never heard of him; I know of no estate which this woman is to receive from Germany through me.

Mrs. Gibson's counsel moved that the complaint be dismissed on the ground that as her representations had not been made for the purpose of inducing the advances made by Garretson, she could not be held. Justice Keese refused to grant the motion, and Mrs. Gibson announced that she desired to make a statement. She said that at the time Mr. Garretson made the first loans to her, nothing had been said about her estate. Mr. Garretson loaned the money because of his friendship for her. He had been partaking of her hospitality, and said that he felt under obligations to her. When applying for subsequent loans she made no representations of vast wealth. "If it comes down to a fine point," she said in conclusion, in broken English, and with a well-assumed air of indignation, "I think Mr. Garretson and his friends got all their money back in what I spent on them for wines and champagne suppers and carriage rides, and such like." She stated that she was born in Baden-Baden, and is thirty-nine years of age. She is a coarse, vulgar-looking woman, with no attractions of person, of manner, or of address. Justice Keese fully committed her for trial, and she will be lodged in jail to-morrow.

Inspector Murphy supplies a list of persons who have been victimized by Mrs. Gibson. The New-York persons whom she has succeeded in swindling are: T. H. Barry, No. 118 Broadway; Miss O'Neil, No. 322 West Fourth street; F. F. Bunnell, No. 13 East Twenty-seventh street; Mr. Sampson, No. 120 East Twenty-third street; Mr. Hartman, proprietor of a hotel opposite the Bowery Theatre; Louis Herman, No. 545 East Thirteenth street; Mrs. Wirl, No. 31 Fifth street; Mr. Lang, No. 697 Third avenue; Mr. Roggerman, No. 341 Thirty-second street; Mrs. Young, No. 697 Third avenue; Mr. Sullier, No. 230 East Forty-seventh street; Mr. Koblentz, No. 48 Fourth street; E. Miners, No. 155 Lewis street; Mr. Hotchkiss, No. 36 East Twenty-first street; Mrs. Alster, Forty-ninth street, between Second and Third avenues; F. J. Rahskopf, No. 650 Third avenue; Mr. Rocker, No. 339 Broadway; and Mr. S. P. Bixby, No. 8 Astor place. The largest of these are those of Mr. Bixby, amounting to $2,100, and Mr. Rahskopf, amounting to $2,000. The others range from $100 to $1,000. Cardinal McCloskey stated that she had succeeded in victimizing the Catholic clergymen of Philadelphia to the extent of thousands of dollars.

THE ANNUAL MIRACLE AT NAPLES.

DESCRIPTION OF THE RELIQUARY—THE EFFECT OF THE MIRACULOUS PROCESS ON THE PEOPLE.

The following is a true account, by a devoted eye-witness, of the last performance of the annual miracle at Naples. It is taken from a Naples correspondent of an English Roman Catholic newspaper. After giving an account of his going to the Cathedral, and his introduction to one of the Canons, the correspondent says:

"You cannot imagine the cries and the almost shrieks and screams of the people that were going on all this time. And when the priest held it up and cried out 'E duro'—'It is hard'—there was such a cry of 'San Gennaro, Nostro protettore, nostro padrone! fate ci il miracolo,' and they began to weep and wail on all sides in the true Neapolitan style.

But for five, ten, fifteen minutes there, was not the slightest sign of any liquefaction taking place. I had the greatest possible opportunities of examining the reliquary, for the Canon held it just before my eyes several times for some seconds, while another priest held a lighted taper behind the glass to allow me to see plainly the bottles inside. The reliquary is an old-fashioned silver one of an oval shape, surmounted by a silver cross about four or five inches long, by which the priest holds it. Thick glass is let into the sides, so that you see the interior plainly when held up to the light; and to show you more clearly the bottles inside, a priest holds a small lighted taper behind, by aid of which you see two small 'ampullæ,' or cruets, the larger one containing about an ounce and a half of some obscure congealed substance of a brownish tint, not unlike to that of clotted blood when it has been exposed a long time to the air. It is quite hard, for the priest reverses the reliquary, and not the slightest motion is visible in the dark matter which fills about two-thirds of the vial. The glass of this bottle is curious, not like ordinary glass, but with that peculiar tint and roughness of unpurified glass, resembling the bottles you see in the Roman museums, which have been taken from the tombs of the martyrs in the Catacombs. The other and smaller vial, not unlike a small smelling-bottle, contains a mere stain of blood and some little pieces of black sticking to the sides, which have never been known to liquefy; these are supposed to be little pieces of sponge, or earth soaked with blood, sticking to the sides of the glass. Both bottles appeared to be hermetically sealed. Another little thing that caught my attention was, that resting on the outside of each bottle was that peculiar fine, thin dust which collects on objects even closed in cases, showing they must have been left undisturbed for a very long time. These phials appeared also to be resting on what appeared to me to be some wadding, dusty and discolored, and between the top of the reliquary inside and the phials there was another similar piece of dark wool or wadding. The reliquary itself is soldered up on all sides, and you must break it to open it.

Twenty minutes had passed away, and not the sign of any movement appeared: there was the dark brown substance filling up two thirds of the vial, forming a straight line across it, still immoveable. The groans, the cries, and the tears of the people were increased, their supplications and petitions became louder, and even the most indifferent of these around seemed to be moved. The priest laid the reliquary down on the altar, and began aloud the Apostles' Creed, and then an invocation to St. Januarius; and after that a prayer begging that God would allow the miracle for His greater honor and glory, and for the good of His people. He then once again took it in his hand, and showed it to me, kneeling on the step, but it was the same as at first, not the slightest change having taken place.

He had taken it all round, had shown it to the many kneeling there, and had then lifted it up for the people outside to see, when he once more lowered it and put it before my eyes. I was not certain, but it seemed to me that as he held the reliquary upside down the straight line which was formed across the bottle was breaking on one side, and that the substance commenced to move slowly. I am sure my excited face and the paleness I felt coming over me must have shown the Canon what had happened, for he looked at it and said it had commenced, and then once more showed it to me. Yes! there it was, slowly moving down on one side of the bottle, a few reddish brown drops. He held it aloft to the people, and cried, 'E squagliato,' 'It is liquefied.' The organ immediately commenced the Te Deum, and the choir and people, taking up the alternate verses, sang it with all their souls in thanksgiving to God that He had allowed yet once again this miracle. I joined, too, with all my heart, for I cannot express to you the strange feeling which crept over me when the Canon again showed me the reliquary, and slowly turned it round. I saw the blood flowing inside the larger vial as freely as water; there only remained a dark globule in the centre which was not liquefied; all the rest in the vial was perfectly liquid. Perhaps this globule also became so; I, however, did not see it again, for when I had kissed the reliquary the Canon took it round to the others that they might have a like happiness."

COST OF DEMOCRATIC RULE.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat has this suggestive statement: "Looking at the situation of this commonwealth, it would seem as if it were much easier to manage public matters honestly and efficiently than dishonestly and inefficiently. Its revenue is very small, and one-half of that is so provided for by the Constitution that the State Government has no control over it. During the six years in which it was under radical rule, every trace of the war had disappeared, its unnatural investments in bank and railroad property had been disposed of, its war claims had been adjusted, its debt reduced; and when the rebels were enfranchised and the Government of the State handed over to them, they were put in possession of a property so securely guarded that only gross mismanagement could check its growth and increase. If it is any credit for those who are intrusted with power to claim that they have not broken into the Treasury and gutted it, we cheerfully accord that credit to the Democracy, the state of opinion being such in Missouri that open robbery is not among the contingencies of State Government. But whatever the Democracy could do short of open robbery, to show its contempt for the safeguards of good government, it has done. Its first choice for Governor was an attorney who had distinguished himself by resigning a county office to secure the passage of a county subvention for a contingent fee; its most brilliant stroke of policy was the appointment of a War Claims Committee who audited fraudulent claims by the bushel; its one constitutional reform has been the abrogation of that restriction which required that those who proposed to vote upon public questions should know enough to give an intelligent vote. Has Democracy achieved anything valuable to offset these blots? Following a party which had steadily reduced the expenses, it has steadily increased them; protesting against the multiplication of offices, it has multiplied them at every opportunity; while the State bonds, which were beyond its control, have steadily improved in value, the Treasury warrants, which are entirely under its control, have been hawked about at a discount to enrich the dishonest officials who knew when to buy them and when to sell them. It has mismanaged the Penitentiary, worried the Supreme Court, confused the statutes, encouraged outlawry; it has not even had sense enough to exchange a thousand new bonds for a thousand old ones without losing money by the trade."

THE WEST VIRGINIA CLAIMS.

The Wheeling (West Va.) Intelligencer of Saturday, says: "We gave a bill of particulars a day or two ago showing the amount of claims that had been introduced by each member of the West Virginia delegation into Congress. The whole amount thus far is $303,087 10. Of this amount Col. Wilson has introduced bills covering $204,600. The Weston Democrat looks upon these claims as establishing a claim on Wilson's behalf upon the support of the people who are to be directly or indirectly benefited by them. It says that the Colonel hopes to put them through the 'next' Congress. He hopes, in other words, that the 'next' Congress will be of a character to enable him to put his bills through. But we have shown that in order to get his bills through, the Colonel must vote for every other Congressman's bills. The programme must needs embrace the most stupendous log-rolling scheme ever known in Congress. In order to get two or three hundred thousand dollars for this district, he must vote for an amount of bills for other districts and other States such as would make the benefit to his constituents a mere drop in the bucket compared with the burden that would be laid upon them in common with the whole country."

THE DROWNING OF PHILIPP OTTMANN.

Acting under instructions from Coroner Eickhoff, who took charge of the case of Mr. Philipp Ottmann, the wealthy Fulton Market butcher, whose body was found in the East River at the foot of Twenty-fifth street on Sunday, Dr. Marsh yesterday made a post mortem examination of the remains. A rumor to the effect that incised wounds had been found on the back of the deceased on the occasion of a superficial examination of the body having gained currency during the forenoon, a large number of persons visited Dhiel's undertaking establishment, No. 133 Essex street, where the body lay, but no one was permitted to view it. Dr. Marsh, who made the autopsy, announced that he found no evidence of violence, and that death was undoubtedly due to asphyxia by drowning. The day on which the inquest will be held was not determined on.

EGYPT AND ABYSSINIA.

THE BATTLE IN THE GREAT PLAIN OF MAREBO.

KING JOHN AND THE KHEDIVE—THE LATTER'S ATTEMPT TO CONQUER THE FORMER—DESPERATE RESISTANCE ON THE PART OF THE KING—BRAVE EGYPTIANS OVERWHELMED BY NUMBERS—A TERRIBLE SLAUGHTER—GRAPHIC ACCOUNT OF THE AFFAIR.

The correspondent of the London Times of Oct. 25 writes: "Some friends of truth have furnished me with evidence as to the origin of the Egyptian expedition, and only yesterday I met one of the traveling companions of M. de Sarseck, the French Consul at Massowah, who entered Abyssinia on Sept. 28, 1875, and left it on the 6th of December following, thus being in the best possible position for witnessing that strange and fatal adventure styled the first Egyptian expedition into Abyssinia. The facts, then, I am about to relate are taken from notes written from day to day by an attentive but disinterested spectator who has authorized me to publish them, but certainly while writing them had no idea that his notes would ever attain publicity. * * * On the 13th of October M. de Sarseck arrived at Samara, in the Province of Amacine, where he was very cordially received by the Dedjaz Gabron. He then crossed the Provinces of Serai and Chiri, and arrived in the neighborhood of Adowa. On the 25th of October, as he was unaware of the rumors spread in Egypt, he was not at all astonished to find all these Provinces entirely without soldiers, and the Governors with only their usual military escort. As he approached Adowa, a Fitaoraris, or General of the Vanguard, came to tell him that King John desired his presence, but at this moment M. de Sarseck observed that he was in the midst of a kind of popular immigration, and he learned that the Egyptians were at Ghinda; that they were going up to Amacine, and that King John having ordered everybody to fall back, the inhabitants of the Amacine, of Serai and Chiri—men, women, and children—driving before them their cattle and carrying the remains of their property, were falling back on Adowa. On Oct. 27 M. de Sarseck entered Adowa, and was conducted before the King. He was introduced into the Royal palace and brought into the presence of King John, a man of about thirty years of age, of middle height, slim, his hair of deep black, worn after the Abyssinian fashion, his eyes energetic, his nose a little curved, his mouth small, his complexion bronzed brown as an old Florentine statue. He is extremely agile, successful in all games, brave to temerity, as impassive as a Hindu, and the best rider in his country. When M. de Sarseck entered, King John was seated in the Ethiopian fashion, squatted on a red and gold dais ascended by nine steps in a hall forty metres long. He was enveloped in a large cloak of cloth of gold, and wore on his head the triple crown of Ethiopia, resembling the Crown of Solomon, such as it is painted on the walls of the churches and the Imperial Palace of Gondar. Around him were the Raz or feudatory Princes, in rich white and purple garments, each wearing a light crown of gold on his head. On both sides of the hall, according to rank, were the great vassals of his Crown, and to complete this thoroughly Oriental picture, on one of the steps was reclining Agos, one of the four lions which, according to etiquette, precede the King in combats, and to which King John has given the name of one of his brothers killed in fighting. M. de Sarseck was struck by the thorough impassiveness of this monarch, who, in the midst of this State audience, seemed to have forgotten that an implacable enemy was treading the soil of his country. On the 30th of October it was known that the Egyptians had invaded the Amacine and the Serai, and a letter from the commander of the hostile expedition was handed to the King. In this letter the Khedive was described as having always been a friend to King John, but as obliged to protect his territory against the want of discipline among the Abyssinian Princes, whose incursions King John could not prevent. His army had not come to take possession of Abyssinia, but had entered the country to establish internal peace and to correct the bad administration. In fact, one would almost say Prince Milan copied the declaration of war from this letter. Turning to M. de Sarseck, "You see," he said, "I have only my guard around me; my country is invaded without cause or provocation, and I should like to know what the King of Egypt would say if I said to him he was the executioner and plunderer of the fellah." On the 2d of November the King was informed that his country was definitively invaded, that the Egyptian Army had arrived at Addihoala, the last village which precedes the Valley of Gondet, and that the vanguard had penetrated into that valley. King John then mounted his horse to proceed to a camp whither he had convoked the warriors of all Abyssinia. The Khédive had thought that the Negus was going to call on the Princes, his vassals, to supply the contingent due, but as these Princes had been secretly hired by the Khédive to revolt, John saw they would refuse to obey, and that he would be powerless. He therefore preached the Holy War. The Abouna, the religious chief of Abyssinia, had ordered a three days' fast, to which the King himself submitted, and had commanded all the warriors of the country, under penalty of excommunication, to be present during it, and at its expiration, at the given place, John mounted his horse at the gate of his palace, north of Adowa, at the foot of Mount Challoda. Just as he was about to give the signal of departure, and when all the inhabitants of Adowa and the invaded provinces were assembled, there was a formidable earthquake. Men and beasts were thrown down, the roofs of several houses were displaced, and from the summit of the Challoda blocks of stone and torrents of dust were precipitated to the feet of the King. Every one was alarmed. A moment of hesitation on the part of the King, and the terror would have spread over all Abyssinia, and left it to the mercy of the invaders. But John, jumping from his horse, flung himself on the ground, and cried enthusiastically, 'I thank God for these signs of protection, which show me that the day has at length come when the ancient land of Ethiopia shall ingulf her invaders.' A shout of joy welcomed these words, and the King remounted his horse and left Adowa amid the warm and prolonged applause of the multitude. On the 8th of November M. de Sarseck proceeded to the King at the camp, where he had called his warriors together, and his astonishment may be imagined at seeing the Negus, who on the 2d of the month had only a few hundreds of cavalry, in command of an army of 70,000 men. All Abyssinia had responded to his call. A nation essentially feudal, divided into a warlike aristocracy and an inferior class, the nobles and the princes are prompt to respond to a call to arms, and six days had sufficed to collect this formidable army.

The Negus, from whom M. De Sarseck requested a letter in reply to that of the President of the French Republic, and who had verbally consented to all required of him, did his utmost to retain the French Consul about him. He would have liked to be able to affirm that he rejoiced in the protection of France, showing the official agent near him in the midst of his warriors. But M. De Sarseck declined, returned to Adowa, and came back after three different attempts without having been able to obtain the letter. At length, on the 17th, just as he was making up his mind to return, for the King still remained, he received the following curious letter, of which my informant obtained and preserved a copy, a translation of which he was kind enough to communicate to me:

'From John, by the Grace of God King of the Kings of Ethiopia and of all its dependencies, to the Consul of France, M. De Sarseck. How are you? My soldiers and myself, thanks to Heaven and the intercession of the Saints and the God of Armies, are safe and sound. Good news! I have conquered. By the grace of God I have beaten my enemies. Of all the Egyptians who invaded my country not one has survived. All are dead. My heart rejoices. Thou, my friend, come now without loss of time. Written at Addihoala, 9 Hedarde of the year 1868, (30th November, 1875.)'

M. De Sarseck's amazement may be conceived, for he had believed the King to be in the camp, and learned from the bearer of the royal letter that John had quitted the camp on the 15th, and that on the 16th, in two engagements at a few hours' interval, the Egyptian Army, first at Kherad Iska and next at Gouda Gouddi, had been signally defeated, and that leaders and soldiers were all killed. M. De Sarseck left Adowa on the 22d, and, losing his way, reached the banks of the River Laiha. During the 24th, having been obliged to stop, he was told that a man in a dreadful state had been found under a tree, who had pronounced his name. He went to the spot and found a man whose right arm was torn, whose skull was laid bare, who was otherwise covered with wounds and coagulated blood, who through his obstructed nostrils uttered his name—it was Count Zichy. This wreck had for nine days been dragging himself along the road, drinking at the rivers, nourished by the women of the country with flour moistened in water, and holding out against death, of which he was a horrible picture. M. De Sarseck took him up, stanched his wounds, placed him on a litter, and carried him with him. This man of extraordinary energy revived in a marvelous way, recovered his senses, and, to the amazement and almost the terror of the escort, on the evening of the same day he hummed fragments of 'Belle Hélène' as he tossed about on his litter. The prospect of life had revived him. Unhappily, all this had delayed M. De Sarseck, and when he reached Arato, at the entrance of the Valley of Gondet, he received a message from the King, who had been unable to wait for him, and begged him to return to Adowa. M. De Sarseck left Count Zichy at Arato, under care of a European man and woman, and returned to Adowa, where for three days the King delayed giving him his farewell audience. The King had permitted them to take back fourteen Egyptian prisoners, but had learned Count Zichy's story, and refused to give him up, promising to treat him well, but wanting to detain him as a hostage. When, on the 6th of December, M. De Sarseck got back to Arato, the Count was no longer to be found, and it has since been ascertained that he was murdered by those who were charged to convey him to Adowa, they having recognized him as one of the leaders of the Egyptian Army. Let me here mention that the very day when M. De Sarseck took leave of the King the latter set out for Axum, the holy city of Abyssinia, to give thanks to the Almighty for the victory he had won, and that his Army dispersed till further notice. * * *

M. De Sarseck could not understand how the 120 men composing the vanguard, and including Arendroop, Zichy, and so many others, could have been exterminated in less than twenty minutes. This was explained on the spot. John, with his whole army, had come and encamped in the great plain of Mareb, as if he wished to offer battle to the vanguard posted at Kherad Iska. In the night, while his camp-fires, carefully kept up, led to the belief that he was posted eight miles from the enemy, 12,000 horse crossed the Mareb and placed themselves on the flank of the Egyptian van at less than a mile distance. At the moment when the latter, concealed in little woods, were preparing to turn the hill to fall back, there was heard something like a long peal of thunder, getting louder as it approached, and before there was time to give a command this living hurricane covered the narrow space on which the little Egyptian troop was massed. The 12,000 Abyssinian cavalry passed over the unfortunates. This onslaught lasted a quarter of an hour, and when the last horses had crossed the space only Zichy, unconscious and mutilated, remained alive, for in their gallop the Abyssinians struck down all who attempted to withstand them. Arakel Bey, who had remained in the Goudet Valley awaiting the order to advance, received tidings of the massacre. He took the command of the army, and tried to strengthen his position during the three hours which elapsed before his own death. The Abyssinians accomplished the distance in two hours and a half, and attacked his improvised intrenchments. They were twenty to one. The Egyptians fought like lions during three-quarters of an hour. But their efforts were useless. The natural difficulties of the ground prevented the effectiveness of the cannon, and the balls struck against the rocks. The enemy, slipping through the trees, profiting by the slightest accidents, had soon hemmed in the little army, and rendered the use of fire-arms useless; for, driven forward by those behind them, they ended by attacking the intrenchments with the bayonet, and inside there was a hand-to-hand struggle. The Abyssinians had 365 killed and 500 or 600 wounded. Arakel died like a hero. Struck by a first bullet, he kept on his horse, leaning on two soldiers of Sondan. A second ball made him slip from his horse. At the point of death he perceived the Naib Darkiko, who had drawn Egypt into this expedition, and who, after throwing off his clothes, was trying to creep among the Abyssinians. Arakel, raising himself by an effort, struck him with two shots of a revolver, and died after seeing the Naib fall."

THE HARVARD LIBRARY.

THE ADDITION TO THE LIBRARY—DESCRIPTION OF THE EASTERN WING.

The new wing, now being built on the eastern side of Gore Hall, Harvard College, to increase the facilities of the college library, has progressed so far that a definite idea can be formed of the general appearance. The side walls are pierced with long, arched windows at very frequent intervals, while light is admitted from the easterly end through a large triple window which occupies nearly the whole of that end of the wing. The roof is a lean-to, rising higher in the centre than at either side, by an abrupt ascent about a third of the way from the edges, and will be crowned with the same ornamental granite work as the sides, the entire wing corresponding in this respect to the main building. Tesselated granite towers, round in shape, will be placed at regular intervals on the roofage. The entire extension of this east wing is about 90 feet, making the main room in this part of the building 34 by 79 feet, and it will have a capacity for about 150,000 volumes. A skylight will extend around the entire length of this main room, and three deep galleries will range around the sides, to be used mainly for stacking. The entire width of the main part of the wing is about 35 feet, the ground floor on the north side being, in addition, extended about 20 feet, and running the length of the wing. A lean-to roof caps the wing, which is internally divided into three rooms and a small vestibule. The most easterly room will be occupied by the librarian, the next room by the assistant librarian, and the remaining room, area 19 by 46 feet, will be used by the bibliographical department, and includes a vestibule in area 12 by 21 feet. The place in the east wing corresponding to the present place of entrance on the south side of the west wing will constitute the entrance to this vestibule or the library itself. A small portion of the addition, together with the older part of the east wing, is to be used as a catalogue-room, where books will also be delivered. This room will also be surrounded with a balcony, and will be well lighted from above. The area will be about 30 by 35 feet. The room at present in use as a reading-room will be cut up into small study rooms, while the present main room will be used for a general study and reference room, with reference books along the shelves, which will be protected or inclosed by a railing extending around the room. The work will be carried on during the Winter months, and the entire structure will be in readiness for occupation next Summer.

HOW LINCOLN DECIDED A BET.

A correspondent writes that Mr. Lincoln was very positive in his moral positions, and exerted a great influence on the young men about him. Especially was he severe on gambling. Greene, his best friend, had got into that practice. So Lincoln one day gave him a very severe talk on his habit. There was one person who always won from Greene, and it was done by some trick in the game they played. Greene said he must beat him before he stopped. Said Lincoln: "Billy, if you will promise that you will never gamble again, I'll put up a job that will beat him." And Greene said, "If you will only help me to get ahead of him, I swear it." "Well," says Lincoln, "when he comes into the store again, you bet him one of those $7 hats that I can drink out of a full whisky barrel." Greene suggested that would be a pretty big thing to do. They had better try it first. So they rolled out a full barrel and Lincoln lifted one end on to one knee, and then the other end on to the other knee, and thus balancing the barrel of whisky, drank out of the bunghole. In a few days the "professional" came around. Greene struck the bet without any trouble. The man increased it to a hat apiece. Lincoln was called in and lifted the barrel and drank out of it, and Greene took the hat. It was rather a Chinese way for Mr. Lincoln, but Greene has sacredly kept his promise.

WHAT YOU DECIDE TO-DAY.

Ex-Gov. Talbot, of Massachusetts, thus writes: "Whether the object of the war shall be secured in the unification of our country; whether the right of every man, white or black, to equal education by participation in and protection under Government shall be maintained; whether the progress made toward honest money and honest payment of the national debt shall be sustained; whether economy and integrity in the conduct of public affairs shall be the rule, and whether improvement already manifest in trade and manufacture shall be encouraged and stimulated, are questions not inferior to any one we have been called to pass upon in years past. It there is anything in the history of the Democratic Party or any of its nominees or managers which would lead me to believe it or they may be most safely trusted to deal with these great issues, I have failed to discover it. They are full of promise now, but when I recall the record of their performance heretofore I do not see what there is to induce any doubting or independent voter to range himself under their standards. I believe in the measures and principles of the Republican Party, and I shall labor now, as always, to improve and purify and reform it, when needed, from within."

AN UNCHANGED REBEL.

Isham G. Harris, who, as Governor of Tennessee in 1861, did more than any other man in that State in behalf of rebellion and secession, made a speech in behalf of Tilden in Nashville on Wednesday last, in the course of which he said:

"I am frank to say that I have never seen the day, nor can it ever come, when I shall make any apology to any man or set of men that God has created, for having followed my honest convictions of duty in reference to that war. [Loud applause.] I have not learned to "bend the supple hinges of the knee that thrift may following fawning." If I am required to cast a stigma upon the graves of our fallen heroes and the loved ones of that war, it is not in my heart or in my brain to do it. I approved the course of each one of those heroes when he lived. I stood by him in his hour of peril. I wept bitter tears over his sad fate when he fell. I honor his integrity, and while God gives me a voice to speak or a hand to write, I will vindicate his integrity and his fame." [Applause.]

VALUE OF REBEL MONEY.

The Little Rock (Ark.) Herald of the 3d inst. says: "A case was disposed of in the Circuit Court yesterday, in which the so-called Confederate money played quite an important part. In November, 1862, E. L. Compere borrowed $250 of the Sebastian County School Fund, giving his note therefor, bearing ten per cent. interest. The money received was of Confederate issue, and at that time passed current and for its face throughout the State. The payment of the note was postponed until the end of the war, and then tendered in the same class of wealth which was received for it, which was of course of no value. The case dragged along through the intervening years until yesterday, when, by consent, the defendant settled the matter by paying in United States currency ten per cent. of the note with accrued interest."

THE COUNT OF PARIS' HISTORY.

The Richmond Dispatch of Saturday says: "Gen. Dabney H. Maury, on Thursday night, at the meeting of the Southern Historical Society, stated that the Count of Paris had transmitted $50 for the society, with the request that he be made a life member of it. Gen. Maury said that the Count had written a history of the war damaging to the South, and hoped that he might rewrite it to correct errors he had fallen into. We do not suppose the Count erred intentionally, nor do we suppose for a moment that Gen. Maury has any such idea. The tone of the Count's history shows him to be an earnest and considerate gentleman. We have no doubt he will readily do what he can to correct any error that he has made."

WHAT THE MAILS BRING

ARKANSAS RUFFIANS MISTAKE METHODIST MINISTERS FOR UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

In our telegraphic dispatches a few days ago was a brief account of the shooting of three Methodist ministers at Fort Dodge, Ark. Full particulars are given in the following letter from Rev. William H. Westbury, to the Western Methodist, published at Memphis, Tenn.: "On our return from conference several of us were the subjects of a very sad incident, the particulars of which I give you. It seems the United States Marshals had been very active for some time arresting parties for real and, in some instances, perhaps supposed violations of law, until a great many citizens had become considerably excited on the subject. Some parties had resolved to resist the authorities, and rumor had it that sixteen Marshals were expected in that vicinity to execute the law. Revs. B. Williams, A. H. Williams, George Pledger and myself had crossed Boston Mountain on the morning of Oct. 25, and come down on Hurricane Creek about noon. This, perhaps, was an unusual route for preachers to travel, and especially a number together. We were very anxious to get home, and this was thought by some to be a nearer route. Brothers A. H. Williams and Pledger—young men—traveled together, and they were some distance ahead. They arrived at Fort Douglas, on Big Piney, about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. We had traveled all day without feeding, and the young men thought, probably, we would like to put up for the night. Brother Williams went into a house to make inquiry for accommodations, and Brother Pledger walked over to a shop just across the road from the house. The back part of the shop, toward the mountain, was all open. He had been standing there but a few minutes when he was shot from the mountain. He fell upon his face and said: 'I am killed!' The owner of the shop, Mr. Wallace, was the only person present in the shop. He ran out to Brother Williams, and told him not to go, or try to go, to his friend. Brother Williams tried to get other parties to help him bring Brother Pledger out of the shop, but none would go. So Brother Williams mounted his horse to ride back and hurry myself and his father, Brother B. Williams, to the scene of carnage. When we got to the shop we found Brother Pledger lying on his face, pale, helpless, bleeding, and we thought nearly dying. We put him on a blanket and carried him to the house of Mr. Wallace, and sent off immediately for a physician. After we got Brother Pledger as comfortably situated as we could, Brother B. Williams, myself, and two or three friends who had come to our aid, went out behind a large tree to consult about the most judicious course to pursue during the night, and while there talking the brush men changed their position, or had others posted across the creek from where Brother Pledger was shot. Brother B. Williams, and myself were singled out, and he was shot through the right side just above the hip, and I was shot in the right side, only breaking the skin, but making a very sore place. After a hard day's ride and much suffering I reached home last night. Brother A. H. Williams returned as I did, after his mother and Brother Pledger's folks. I greatly fear that Brother Pledger's wound is mortal. The doctor could get no physic to have any effect at all. He suffered greatly through the night, and was no better when we left him yesterday morning. Brother B. Williams has a very bad wound, but the doctor thinks he will recover if his wound is properly managed. We were certainly mistaken for United States Marshals, and our canes and umbrellas, seen from the mountain, were taken for guns. The whole neighborhood seemed to be in deep sympathy with us, and rendered us every assistance in their power to make us comfortable, and we left our dear brethren with the doctor and kind people there with the pledge that they would receive every needed assistance until their friends could reach them."

THEY MET AND PARTED.

From the Leavenworth (Kansas) Times.

During the past year a regular correspondence has been carried on between a gay youth of seventy-five summers, who lives in this city, and a fair maiden aged fifty-five, who has lived in a distant State. The subject of the said correspondence—neither party having seen the other—was at first of a formal nature, but soon the tone of each epistle changed so much from formality to friendship, that before they knew it each was pouring out to the other on paper the sweetest tidings of mutual love. About three weeks ago the young gallant hied himself to the Probate Court, and did then and there procure a marriage license, for which he paid the requisite sum in cash. Thus armed with the strong power of the law, he indited a final epistle to his, perhaps supposed, young maiden, who was to be "an old man's pet," insisting on her immediate appearance in this locality, in order to end all trouble by getting "spliced." She having, from the tone of former missives, arrived at the conclusion that she was on the point of catching a young and handsome protector, whom she could pat on the cheek and love as she would a baby, at once complied with the request to "come West," and within a few days she could have been seen about our streets inquiring for the number of the house occupied by her supposed rich young lover. They met. The feelings experienced were, perhaps mutual—to a certain extent. She, after taking a long look at the proposed groom, sank helplessly against the back of a chair and murmured, "Is this the young man I was to meet." He rubbed his nose a moment, and wanted to know if she was the young woman he had been making love to. After glaring at each other awhile she became indignant, and he considered himself duped, but being in for it, he proposed that as matters had gone so far it would be better to go on with the business and get married. She, however, wouldn't listen to his love-pleadings, and demanded from him enough of money to pay her expenses back to her home. He reluctantly complied, and handed over about $30, the amount necessary. Then, to reimburse himself as nearly as possible, he called on the Judge of the Probate Court and tried to get the amount of his license fees refunded. This he failed to accomplish.

ADVENTURES OF A DOG.

A SETTER GOES FISHING, LOSES HIS MASTER, AND TAKES THE TRAIN FOR HOME.

From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Mr. John D. Johnson, the lawyer, went down to Murdock Lake a week ago for the purpose of enjoying a few days in angling for black bass. He took with him a favorite setter, which he had raised from a pup. The lake is in Illinois, thirty miles south of the city, and the usual route to it is over the Iron Mountain Railroad to Illinois Station; thence by row-boat across the river, and thence by wagon to the club-house, a distance of three miles. Arriving at the lake, Mr. Johnson went out in a boat to fish, at 7 o'clock in the morning, taking his setter along for company. The dog proved troublesome in the boat, and was put ashore, and nothing more thought about him. When Mr. Johnson returned to the club-house, late in the afternoon, he could not find his dog, although he searched for him along the lake shore, and made diligent inquiry of everybody he met. On his way home, two days afterward, Mr. Johnson learned at Illinois Station that his dog was at Pevely, five miles below, and sent a man after him, who brought him back. It seems that the dog, after being put ashore on the west side of the lake, had joined a party of fishermen, and remained with them for a short time, and then returned to the place where he had left his master. Not finding him there, nor at the house, he concluded that the boss had gone home. He made a bee line for the river, and, swimming across, took his position at the railroad station to wait for a train. Several trains passed, but he did not like their looks, and made no attempt to board either of them. At length the train that had brought him and his master from the city came along, going southward, and the dog joyfully jumped aboard. He was recognized by the conductor, who put him off at Pevely, with directions to the agent to ship him to St. Louis.

These facts are given as a remarkable instance of canine sagacity. The only mistake the dog made was in starting in the wrong direction, but he probably reasoned that the train would eventually take him to the city, although in a roundabout way.

ANOTHER SHOWER OF FLESH.

We find the following in the Charleston (S. C.) News of Friday last: "The phenomenon of flesh falling from a cloudless sky occurred in Gaston County, N. C., last Saturday afternoon. The shower fell in a cotton field belonging to James Hannah, who lives near Gastonia. The flesh—for such it certainly is—fell for several minutes, descending somewhat in the manner of hail-stones falling, and sprinkled a space of ground equal to a square rod. Mr. Hannah, who saw the shower as it fell, says it was perfectly clear at the time, and that there was nothing unusual visible in the sky at the place of the singular occurrence. Mr. R. Frank Clark, of Chester, returned from Gaston County last Monday and brought a specimen of the flesh with him. A microscopic examination indicates that it resembles the flesh of a cow, and a gentleman in town, who had the temerity to taste it, says the taste is similar to that of beef."

KALAKAUA'S SUSPENDERS.

The Honolulu Gazette has this personal item: "His Majesty received from Dr. E. Hoffmann, a few days since, a beautiful pair of suspenders, made of fine leather and partly covered with velvet, on which was wrought a crown, with a rose below and a flower and a vine above it, the whole being very tastily executed. The suspenders are one of several pairs made for the Emperor Napoleon, and among the vicissitudes of fortune, have strayed to Hawaii, and now form part of the royal wardrobe."

GOV. HARTRANFT'S HORSE DEAD.

The Harrisburg (Penn.) Patriot says: "The valuable horse 'Montgomery,' the favorite animal of Gov. Hartranft, and the finest of his stud, died yesterday morning at the stables rear of the Executive Mansion, of lung fever, after a ten days' sickness. 'Montgomery' was sired by Alexander's 'Abdallah,' (sire of Goldsmith Maid,) and was valued at between $2,500 and $3,000."

A WALK OF FIFTY MILES.

FROM GREENWOOD LAKE TO NEW-YORK.

THE TOWNS AND CITIES PASSED THROUGH—SEVERAL FEATURES OF THE TRIP—SUGGESTIONS ON WALKING IN GENERAL AND THIS ONE IN PARTICULAR.

I have during the past season read, with great interest and satisfaction, the various dissertations on the subject of walking, and the entertaining accounts of walks, written over the initials of J. S. P. and others, published in the Sunday edition of your paper. I have concluded, by way of supplementing the record of the achievements and experiences of my illustrious predecessor, and in hopes that others may follow suit, to submit an account of what J. S. P. would doubtless call a "fifty mile rush," trusting that when I am through I shall not have encroached in vain upon your valuable space, but that others may be influenced to take advantage of this glorious Autumn weather and secure some of the pleasures and benefits, so easy of attainment in vigorous and judicious exercise. As to walking and its merits as an exercise, I presume my friends would call me an enthusiast on the subject; for myself, I can confidently say that to it, more than to anything else, do I owe a state of health far above the average, and this maintained or acquired in the face of a strain greater than most constitutions are called upon to endure. Walking being the only mode of exercise that chanced to come altogether within my convenience, I have practised it as circumstances would permit, with considerable regularity, and with results so satisfactory that I am anxious that others should derive what benefits and pleasure are to be derived from its systematic practice.

In giving the particular walk in question, I am far from wishing to be understood as vaunting of any extraordinary achievement, as it is my custom to fill up what time I can spare for recreation in walks of from fifteen to forty miles in a day. Learning of the postponement of the regatta at Greenwood Lake, and having several friends among the boating men represented, I resolved to visit the lake, which I had long had a desire to see, and take a run up there Saturday night with a view of walking as far in the direction of New-York on Sunday as my inclinations would dictate, or a new pair of shoes would permit. By the 4:30 train on the Montclair and Greenwood Lake Railroad, I arrived at the Lake after a three hours ride, the most noticeable feature of which was a sun-set of most extraordinary grandeur as viewed from the cars as we gained the heights above Montclair, and the endless expanse of rugged hills clad in the myriad colors and hues of autumn stretched before us, the whole illuminated and brought out in relief by the shifting, horizontal rays of the king of day as he sank majestically behind the far-off mountains that hold the Delaware within their massive gates. Arriving at the lake, we have still a sail of a half hour's duration between us and the precincts of the hospitable Brandon House.

Promptly at 4:30 next morning I found myself finishing the last of the sandwiches that had been left out for me. Turning my back upon the hotel, I struck out along the road that skirts the lake shore, and for a mile or more my course was due north, as it was necessary for me to cross the extreme head of the lake, and take its west shore for its entire length—ten miles—the country on its eastern side being unbroken wilderness. Here I was, after completing my first mile at about 5 o'clock in the morning, just turning from the head of the lake, the air raw and piercing, so that I had been only too glad to put on a tight pair of lavender kids I chanced to find in my pocket, with a road before me that I could hardly make out by the dim light of the half-waned moon, already well down toward the hills to the west of the lake, with nothing better to balance me than a walking-stick and a hard boiled egg in each pocket. On I went for another mile or two, my road leading through a dense wood, and its only redeeming feature the fact that it was tolerably level. As I came about opposite to where the Brandon House nestles among its surrounding hills, I rounded a sharp point from which I obtain a full clear view of the lake in each direction.

Here the view of lake and mountains was one of nature in absolute repose, the clear blue vault of heaven unbroken by a single cloud; spanning from side to side the two ridges of the eternal mountains, seeming to stand in grim and awful grandeur to guard from all intrusion from the outside world the lake which lay peacefully between them, its surface unruffled by the smallest wavelet, glistening in the moonlight like a clamp of silver riveting the two States together. But the cold impelled me forward, as the sun had but just commenced to throw out the first dim reflections of his coming glory.

Presently I came to an opening in the woods, discovering a point running out into the lake, where, under a goodly grove of chestnuts stands an extremely neat house of entertainment, known as Lakeside. Happy the tenants who are so fortunate as to secure Lakeside for their Summer sojourn. Early as was the hour, a couple of disciples of Ike Walton were seated in their boat just off the point. These I proceeded to interview, learning that I was seven miles from the Brandon, and had three more before I should reach Cooper's, formerly Brown's, at the foot of the lake, where I proposed to breakfast. As I passed on it became each moment perceptibly lighter, and old Sol was throwing his forerunning arms of brilliancy far up into the zenith. I never before experienced the gladdening effects of the sun's rays in contrast with the preceding gloom, and, indeed, all nature seemed to respond; the distant mountain-tops, as one by one they were bathed in the advancing rays, seemed to assume unwonted grandeur, and the very water-lilies turned up their yellow petals as if they felt the all-inspiring influence. Did the reader ever experience the feeling of being so thoroughly enamored of nature as to entertain the impulse to leave behind him the surging, clashing world of what we are accustomed to call life, its ambitions and allurements, and give himself up wholly to worshiping at her shrine? If so, he can sympathize with the feelings engendered by the contemplation of this scene of loveliness, which calls for a pen favored with powers of description greater than I possess to do it justice. But there—the reverie into which I have fallen is broken by the sweep of a fresh wave of sunlight direct from the King of Day, as he towers up majestically from beyond the eastern hills, first seeming like a great dome of molten gold, then higher and higher, until, freed from the line of horizon, his full form seems to quiver and vibrate like a great bubble in the clear expanse of sky. But I diverge. Pressing on, in another half hour I find myself at Cooper's, time 6:40, having walked the ten miles in a little over two hours. Here my request for breakfast is met by a half-scared girl at the kitchen door of the modest inn, who proceeds to slam the door in my face as though she thought me an apparition. Turning toward the barn, I espied a dog, which had a decidedly good-natured look, so I proceeded to interview his dogship. Presently there shambled out from the house a benevolent-looking old party, who proved to be Cooper, Sr., and who was ready to answer any and all questions as to road, distances, &c., and when I mentioned Paterson, he proceeded to say that he could drive me over to Ringwood, where I could take train on the Erie, a distance of twelve miles; but when I told him I proposed to walk, and to continue my walk to New-York, the old cove seated himself on a plow, and eyed me and the dog alternately for some moments, seemingly revolving in his mind the advisability of setting the beast upon me, evidently thinking that I was poking fun at him. Presently, without another word, he arose and shambled back to the house whence he had come. After a quiet smoke, taken while seated in the capacious barn door, taking in the glorious view of the mountain-bound lake as it stretched away to the north, where across the line in New-York State the outlines of the Brandon, nine miles distant, were brought out in bold relief against the mountains, resembling the view of the Catskill Mountain House from the Hudson, while high in air soared an eagle of unusual size, his wings glistening in the sun as he floated in majestic curves far above lake and mountains, making in all a picture not soon to be forgotten, I betook myself to the house, where, after another smoke with Cooper, Sr., breakfast was announced. During this meal, which was relished heartily after my exercise, I learned that Paterson was twenty-four miles distant, my road running around the lower tongue of the lake, and then in a course about south-east, through the villages of Boardville, Winokee, and Pompton.

Being desirous of dining at a certain hotel in Paterson, the Hamilton House, kept by one Oats, where, a year previous I had enjoyed decidedly the best hotel dinner I ever ate, I started soon after finishing breakfast, at 8 o'clock, having already consumed more time here than was expedient. To Boardville, a distance of six miles, my road wound constantly among the hills, which, clad in the full glory of the Autumn foliage, seemed to shift and turn as I advanced, opening each moment new vistas of beauty and presenting fresh objects of interest. On my left I have the extensive smelting furnaces for the iron ore taken from the bowels of the adjacent hills; now I cross by an iron bridge of latest style, which looks odd in the midst of this wilderness, over a surging, turbulent stream, which carries the outflow of Greenwood, forming the Ramapo at Pompton, below which the two combine to augment the volume of water which plunges seething and foaming into the rocky chasm above Paterson. Passing through Boardville, which proves to be a mere hamlet, I press on toward Winokie, four miles. As I go on clearings and farms become rather the rule than the exception, until the country assumes the aspects of a thrifty farming section. The sun has by this time mounted so high that its rays commence to be so strong as to render the removal of my coat a necessity to comfort with a regular four-mile gait. And here the real exhilaration and enjoyment of the walk is just about commencing to be felt. What with the clear, bracing air, the beautiful scenery as I descend the valley towards Pompton, over a road improving with each mile, and one's blood coursing with unwonted freedom, all combine to make up what I consider very near to the perfection of enjoyment. A word here as to walking distances. I contend that one does not begin to walk with any sense of enjoyment until past the twelfth or fifteenth mile. As to gait, I consider an even, uniform rate of four miles per hour the minimum of anything worthy to be called walking; anything under this I find irritating and unsatisfactory, while beyond this, for long distances, the average constitution is hardly prepared for. It will surprise beginners to see what practice will do in this matter. Once accustom yourself to a regular four-mile gait, and you will find you will not vary half a minute in a mile.

One more item I will mention, is that of shoes. Mine on this occasion I consider about the perfection of ease and utility. Having worn them but three times before, I was agreeably disappointed at finding them as easy at the end of the day as at the beginning, and my experience reminded me of an illustration credited to some dyspeptic old philosopher, whose idea of a perfectly happy man was, one who lived perfectly oblivious to the existance of his stomach; so I contend that the wearer of a perfect shoe should be practically unaware of having any shoes on.

A walking-shoe should be laced, the upper part binding the ankle, of light calf, to avoid stiffness, while for the body of the the shoe, grain-leather has its advantages. The sole, which should taper somewhat at the toes, should be one-third of an inch, and have little or no welt; the heel as low as possible, and broad. Passing on over hill and dale, I presently came upon an isolated church set on a hill, and my watch tells me I am due at Winokie, and true enough, as I turn a sharp bend in the road rounding the hill, there just before me is the quaint village, with its two stores, blacksmith shop run by Mr. Steel, as the sign tells you, (well suited to his trade,) and the neat, well-kept school house. Passing on as I encounter the good people trudging churchward, I strike out for Pompton, still five miles distant, where I arrived at 11:20, fifteen miles from Coopers, in about three and one half hours, and twenty-five miles from the Brandon. Here, conscious that the fuel I took in at Coopers had been pretty well drawn upon, I partook of four soft boiled eggs and a rousing cup of coffee, and at 11:50 was off for Paterson, nine miles distant. This stretch was perhaps the most enjoyable portion of the day, my road, after crossing the Ramapo River which wound in a serpentine course through Pompton Plains as it sought the Passaic, skirted along the range of the Ramapo Mountains, and for several miles I enjoyed one of the finest pictures of rural life I ever witnessed. There were these fertile plains stretching for fifteen miles in triangular form, skirted on the west and south by the commencement of the mountainous region I had just left; on the north by the Ramapo, while far to the east could be discerned the Orange Mountain ridges, the whole clad in its gorgeous Autumn dress, while waving grain-fields came in to make the picture complete; but ere I realize it, the last sign-board has told me only two miles to Paterson and dinner, and presently gaining the top of a considerable hill, her spires and factory chimneys are seen just beneath me, while in the foreground rises clear and transparent, like a pillar of the finest lace work, the spray from the chasm into which the now swollen river rushes impetuously.

Replacing my coat, I wind my way gradually down the hill into the city, and am presently greeted by that prince of landlords, Oats, of the Hamilton. Hungry? oh, no! but their dinner is over, so I dine à la carte in the restaurant, a feature which has been added to this model establishment since my last call. The service here is excellent, and one who can complain of the viands mine host Oats sets before his guests, must possess an epicurean taste from which I should pray to be delivered. Having reached Paterson at 2:10, I allow my dinner to settle, and at 3:30 am saying good-bye to friend Oats, and am off on the sixteen miles that still lie between myself and my destination. Having an excellent road, marked off by the old-fashioned mile-stones, and with additional vim imparted by my dinner and rest, I find myself passing the mile-stones once in about twelve minutes.

At the fifth of these I am passing through the flourishing town of Passaic, and shortly after crossing the river find myself in Rutherford Park, with the salt meadows stretching out before me, beyond which Bergen Hill loomed up, hiding the Metropolis from view. During the next hour and a half, occupied in crossing these meadows, the sun, which I had seen rise so grandly on Greenwood, sank down beneath a bank of clouds. By 6:30 I had gained the top of Hoboken Heights, from which there burst upon my vision a grand view of New-York and Brooklyn, with their thousands of lights seeming to duplicate the constellations from a cloudless sky. I was soon swinging through the streets of Hoboken, making for the 7 o'clock boat, catching which my walk was over, the last sixteen miles in three and one-half hours. Summary: Left Brandon House at 4:20 A. M., stopped walking at 7 P. M., 14 hours 40 minutes; time for meals and rest, 3 hours 20 minutes; time walking 50 miles, 11 hours 20 minutes; average, 13½ minutes.

And now, Mr. Editor, it is with regret that I find that more or less divergence from my subject has taxed your valuable space and doubtless your patience to an extent beyond my original intention, and I will crave your forbearance only to suggest a walk to any who might wish to try the pleasures to be had so easily. By train on the Paterson Branch of the Erie to Newark, thence walking to Bloomfield and Montclair; from here by the road along the base of the Orange Mountain, nine miles to Paterson; or better still, turn into the Notch Road piercing the mountain half way to Paterson, and through the back country, striking the Passaic at Little Falls; whence along the riverside the walk of six miles to Paterson is a delightful one, making by this route in all about twenty miles from Newark. Here the Passaic Falls are right at hand as you enter the city, a sight of which at this season of high water will well repay you. Oats will now furnish you with a meal which I doubt not you will admit is worth all the trouble, to say nothing of the enjoyment of your twenty-mile walk, and right at hand you have the Erie, with frequent trains, ready to set you down in the City in ample time for supper at the domestic board. Let the average young man about town try some such programme, and if its results do not prove far more satisfactory than the usual routine of morning spent in bed, a late breakfast at the Brunswick, and listless stroll on the avenue, and later a dash over the road to Florences, or striking attitudes on the steps of the Windsor or before St. Thomas', why then, to borrow an expression from Boucicault, "Let him charge it to Buster." EXHILITUS.

NEW-YORK, Friday, Oct. 20, 1876.

A PLUCKY MAN.

The Galveston News prints a telegram from Waco, Texas, Oct. 30, which says: "Mr. A. Henchman, an extensive wagon dealer, having several houses in Texas, started Saturday night at 7 o'clock with four very fine horses to pasture, eleven miles distant on South Bosque, and was met by five robbers, who were on foot, but had just dismounted. They called to him to throw up his hands, which he did with a revolver in each, and commenced firing on them. He saw two fall headforemost, and heard a third cry out that he was wounded. One of Henchman's horses was shot, and he then used the horse as a breastwork, firing twelve times. The robbers quit firing and went to one Johnson's house, and told him they had had a fight with the pluckiest man they ever struck, and said two of their men had been killed. They said they would give Johnson $500 to go quietly and bury them, which he refused. They cursed him and told him to keep still till 12 M. next day, which he did. They remarked that they could bury their dead and be seventy-five miles away the next morning. Deputy Sheriff Moore found a hat shot through the band, with blood and brains on it, but neither of the dead has been found yet. Henchman received seven wounds, which cut the skin; none dangerous, and thirteen in his clothes. Henchman, when he heard the men coming, turned the horses he was leading loose, giving them a start. The robbers got nothing but hot work. One of them had ridden with him for seven or eight miles and two others for a few miles, asking a great many questions about the express office and banks here, and how cotton buyers paid for cotton. It is generally believed that Henchman killed two and probably wounded a third, as a man was seen Sunday with his head tied up. Above there some miles they told another party they had two of their men killed. They rode fine horses. This shows what one brave, determined man can do. Henchman is doing well, but is very weak."

INHUMANITY IN BIRMINGHAM.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

A horrible story, if the facts stated prove correct, was told at an inquest lately held on the body of a child born in the tramp ward of the Birmingham (England) Work-house. According to the evidence given, the mother was locked up in the ward all night. There was no means of communication with the other parts of the house. The other occupants of the ward, five women, did all they could to attract the attention of the officials when the mother of the unfortunate infant was taken ill at 1 in the morning. All through the night they hammered at the door with their hands and with a stick, but in vain. At 4:30 the child was born, and when the clock struck 7 and the door was unlocked it was found dead by its mother's side. The mother herself, who for a wonder, is still alive, could not, it appeared, even get a drop of water to drink during the night, for, although she entreated the other tramps to give her some, "they dared not attempt this, as, not knowing anything about such matters, they were afraid to interfere." The coroner adjourned the inquiry, stating that it would be his duty, from what he had ascertained, to lay the facts of the case before the President of the Local Government Board, in order that, if thought proper, an inspector might attend at the adjourned inquest. That inquiry, he added, had forced upon him the conviction that there was a necessity for another inquiry, in which the vigilance of the guardians of the poor might be brought into question. It is certainly desirable that some official investigation of the affair should be instituted without delay.

SAUCE FOR SALAD DRESSING.

It may not be generally known that the remarkably succulent form of salad dressing called "sauce à la Mayonnaise" should be, in strict accuracy, termed a "Mahonnaise," the pungent preparation having been originally introduced into the French cuisine by the Marshal-Duke who captured Port Mahon, in the Balearic Isles; and it may be even less widely known that the sauce, to suit the Spanish palate, should be made with the strongest Tarragon vinegar and the most rancid olive oil that can possibly be procured. Thus prepared, it is called a "Mahonesa fuerte," or a "Mahonesa arrogante," and is infinitely relished by those to the manner born.

LAW REPORTS.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

WOMEN EXCLUDED FROM PRACTICE IN THE COURT—DELIVERY OF CERTIFICATES OF STOCKS FOR RAILROADS GIVEN TO COUNTIES TO THE TAX-PAYERS INDIVIDUALLY—A DISTILLERY CASE.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—The following decisions were rendered in the Supreme Court to-day:

In the Matter of the Application of Mrs. Belva A. Lockwood for Admission to Practice as an Attorney and Counselor of this Court.—Upon the presentation of this application, the Chief Justice said that notice of this motion having been previously brought to his attention, he had been instructed by the court to announce the following decision upon it: By the uniform practice of the court from its organization to the present time, and by the fair constructions of its rules, none but men are admitted to practice before it as attorneys and counselors. This is in accordance with immemorial usage in England, and the law and practice in all the States until within a recent period, and the court does not feel called upon to make a change until such change is required by statute or a more extended practice in the highest courts of the States. After this announcement, Mrs. Lockwood and friends withdrew. Mr. A. G. Riddle who made the motion, stated that Mrs. Lockwood had been a practitioner at the Bar of the Supreme Court of the District for more than three years, and was, therefore, brought within the rule of the court in that respect.

No. 39.—Board of Commissioners of Tippecanoe County, Ind., vs. The Treasurer of said County.—Error to the Supreme Court of the State.—In this case it is held that the States have power to direct the delivery of certificates of stocks given to counties in return for subscriptions in aid of local railroads to the tax-payers personally for their private benefit, and thus to divest the various counties of title to the stock originally issued to them. The Commissioners in this case resisted the law, which directed the County Treasurer to issue such certificates to those who had, as appeared by the record of his office, paid the taxes which aided the roads, and the State court affirmed the right of the Legislature to transfer the public title to private persons as provided in the act. This court affirms the judgment, saying that there can be no doubt of the power of the State to direct a restitution to the tax-payers of a county or other municipal corporation of property exacted from them by taxation into whatever form the property may be changed, so long as it remains in the possession of the municipality. Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion.

No. 34.—United States vs. Ferrary et al.—Error to the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee.—In this case a distiller, the defendant in error, refused to pay certain taxes on the products of his distillery, on the ground that a copy of a second survey had not been served upon him, and the court below sustained his position. It is here held that there was no second survey, all that was done being the re-formation of the estimate resting on the first measurements, and that the court below erred in confounding the survey required by the tenth section of the act with the estimate and determination of producing capacity calculated from the survey. Reversed. Mr. Justice Strong delivered the opinion.

No. 72.—Dresser vs. Missouri and Iowa Railroad Company.—Error to the Circuit Court for Iowa.—This was an action on a promissory note, to which the defense was that it was obtained by fraud. The plaintiff in error had made a payment upon the note before he had notice of the fraud; but, becoming aware of the fraud subsequently, as alleged, he made full payment thereon. The court gave him judgment only for the portion paid before notice of the fraud, and that judgment is here affirmed, the decision being that the portion of an unperformed contract which is completed after notice of a fraud is not within the principle which protects a bona fide purchaser. Mr. Justice Hunt delivered the opinion.

No. 37.—Home Insurance Company, of New-York, vs. The City Council of Augusta.—Error to the Supreme Court of Georgia.—In this case the court sustains a tax of $250 which was imposed upon the plaintiff in error under an ordinance imposing the same tax on all fire, marine, and accidental insurance companies located or doing business within the limits of the city, there being no discrimination in the matter against non-resident companies, the authority therefore being found in the Police power of the State. Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion.

No. 71.—The County of Calhoun and its Treasurer vs. The American Emigrant Company.—Appeal from the Circuit Court for the District of Iowa.—In this case the court sustains a decree below enjoining the county from taxing lands sold by the county to the company, on the ground that the property was exempt by a special contract between the Municipality and the company. Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion.

No. 62.—Stephen and Thompson Bird, Executors, &c., plaintiffs in error, vs. The Louisiana State Bank.—In Error to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana.—Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court, reversing the judgment of the said Circuit Court, with costs, and remanding the cause with directions to award a venire facias de novo.

No. 26.—Thomas Sherlock et al., plaintiffs in error, vs. Charles Alling, Administrator, &c.—In error to the Supreme Court of the State of Indiana.—Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court, affirming the judgment of the said Supreme Court in this cause, with costs.

No. 55.—Robert H. Ober, appellant, vs. Charles Gallagher.—Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Arkansas.—Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court, affirming the decree of the said Circuit Court in this cause, with costs and interest.

No. 913.—The City of Memphis, appellant and plaintiff in error, vs. T. E. Brown.—Appeal from and writ of error to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee.—On motion of Mr. P. Phillips, the appeal and writ of error in this cause were docketed and dismissed, with costs.

No. 90.—The Chicago and Alton Railroad Company, plaintiffs in error, vs. The People of the State of Illinois, and No. 108.—The Chicago and Alton Railroad Company, plaintiffs in error, vs. The People of the State of Illinois ex rel. the City of Bloomington.—On motion of Mr. P. Phillips, of counsel for plaintiffs in error, the cases were dismissed, with costs.

No. 744.—William F Cochrane et al., appellants, vs. J. W. Deene et al.—This cause was submitted on printed arguments by Messrs. W. S. Cox, C. F. Blake, and R. Mason, of counsel for appellants, and by Messrs. A. L. Merriman and Howard C. Cady for the appellees, under the twentieth rule.

No. 122.—Henry W. Shacker, plaintiff in error, vs. The Hartford Fire Insurance Company.—This cause was submitted on printed arguments by W. T. Burgess, of counsel for plaintiffs in error, and by Mr. George O. Ide for the defendant in error, under the twentieth rule.

On motion of B. E. Paine, Thomas Lathrop Kennar, of Portage, Wis., was admitted to practice as an attorney and counselor of this court.

On motion of P. Phillips, Albert E. Redstone, of Indianopolis, Ind., was admitted to practice as an attorney and counselor of this court.

On motion of Mr. N. A. Cowdrey, Herbert B. Turner, Esq., of New-York City, was admitted to practice as an attorney and counselor of this court.

Mr. A. G. Riddle moved for the admission of Mrs. Belva A. Lockwood as an attorney and counselor of this court. Motion denied.

SUIT AGAINST A BANK DEPOSITOR.

In the suit brought by Isaac V. French, as Receiver of the People's Savings Bank, against Lawrence O'Brien, who was formerly one of the depositors in the bank, to compel the reassignment by him of a mortgage to the bank, Judge Lawrence, in Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday, rendered an elaborate opinion. It appeared that on Nov. 3, 1875, the bank held a mortgage dated September, 1871, made by John Garvey, on a lot on the south side of Fiftieth street, near Fifth avenue, for $25,000. On that date Charles T. Rogers, the President of the institution, assigned the bond and mortgage to the defendant. The complaint of the Receiver alleged that this action on the part of the President was without authority, and that the defendant paid only $14,389 78, the balance of $10,821 18 being debited to his balance in the bank, all of which was unauthorized by the Board of Trustees; that for more than a year previous to this transaction the bank had been insolvent, which was known to the defendant; that the Trustees at that time apprehended its insolvency and suspension, and that the transfer was made with the intent to give the defendant a preference of payment of his deposits over other depositors. The defendant denied any knowledge of the insolvency of the bank. In his decision, Judge Lawrence says the first question is, whether the resolution of the Board of Directors of Sept. 29, 1873, authorizing the President to transfer the securities of the bank, was valid. He holds that it was not, and that such action amounted to an amendment of the by-laws, which put that discretion in the Trustees, and that there was no proper meeting and notice for an amendment of the by-laws. Therefore the President acted without power, and the Trustees did not subsequently ratify his action, but the defendant acted in good faith without knowledge of the condition of the bank, relying on the assurances of Rogers that he had power in the matter. He decides further that the defendant is a bona fide holder of the mortgage to the extent of $14,389 78, the amount paid by him in checks on other savings banks, and he is entitled to a lien thereon for the payment of the said sum with interest before he could be compelled to reassign. In conclusion, Judge Lawrence holds that the defendant must assign the bond and mortgage to the plaintiff on the latter's returning the $14,389 78 cash, with interest, and also returning the pass-books surrendered to Rogers, reinstating him as a creditor of the bank for $10,821 18.

ANOTHER RING SUIT.

John G. O'Donnell, during the days of the Tweed Ring, was paid about $75,000 for lamps, brackets, uprights, &c., furnished to the Lamp and Gas Bureau. It is claimed that his bills were audited and paid fraudulently, and that all such bills were fictitious. The City brought suit for the recovery of the money, and the defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not allege the payment of the bills by any City official, or from moneys appropriated for Governmental purposes. The court took the papers, reserving its decision.

COURT NOTES.

Judge Brady yesterday adjourned the Court of Oyer and Terminer until Monday next.

Chambers, of the Court of Common Pleas, will remain open to-day for the hearing of habeas corpus cases.

In the suit brought by Augustin Daly against Henry J. Paulding, a bill poster, to restrain the defendant from destroying and defacing the plaintiff's bills, Judge Curtis yesterday granted the motion to confirm the Referee's report, which was in favor of Mr. Daly.

John Smallback, of No. 336 East Thirtieth street, was showing a pistol to some boy companions, on Sunday evening, when it accidently went off, seriously injuring Patrick Burns, of No. 502 First avenue. Smallback was arraigned in the Fifty-seventh street Police Court yesterday, but was discharged by Justice Wandell.

Part I. of the Court of General Sessions (November Term,) was opened yesterday by Recorder Hackett. Oliver R. King, of No. 180 Fifth avenue, was selected as Foreman of the Grand Jury, and after that body had been sworn in an adjournment was had until Thursday morning, in consequence of the election. Part II., which was opened by Judge Sutherland, also adjourned until Thursday.

On Sunday evening Christopher Moore, of No. 318 East Thirty-eighth street, and James Kelly, of No. 316 East Thirty-fifth street, became involved in a political discussion, in the course of which Kelly drew a pistol, and fired five shots at Moore, none of them taking effect. Officer Meagher, of the Twenty-first Precinct, arrested Kelly, who, in the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court yesterday was committed for trial.

In the suit of Albert V. Richards against Jay Gould and others, which has heretofore been reported in THE TIMES, a motion was made for an order to Washington E. Conner, formerly of counsel for the plaintiff, to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of court in removing the papers in the suit from the office of the other counsel after a substitution had been ordered. Chief Justice Curtis, in the Superior Court, yesterday, referred the matter to Hon. S. Joseph Bosworth to take proof.

THE SUGAR CROP.

SATISFACTORY REPORTS FROM ALL PARTS OF LOUISIANA.

From the New-Orleans Times, Nov. 1.

Sugar-making has fairly begun in all the sugar belt of this State, and reports from various sugar districts begin to indicate pretty clearly the crop prospect for this year. There was a decided increase in the area in cane, and but for the March freeze, the whole crop, plant and stubble, would have begun the season with the best stand for years. The mild Winter had greatly favored the stubble and gave it a start in the Spring, which the freeze did not seriously check, sustained as it was by strong and well-preserved roots. Fields of the second and even third year stubble, which would ordinarily have been plowed up, presented so fine a stand that most of them were preserved. The plant cane, which is chiefly relied on, was markedly injured, and barely kept pace with the stubble in most sections. However, the season, upon the whole, was remarkably fine, and, until the recent drouth of many weeks set in, the cane never looked better. This season is in marked contrast to that of last year, when the yield was good, and planters were all satisfied, and yet the contrast should be in favor of this year. There were last year, long, cold, and wet spells in July and August, and a severe gale which blew down much cane. The cane was not so large then as now, and the wet spell not only injured it, but prevented the gathering of hay, corn, and potatoes, and owing to bad, boggy roads, many could not haul up a sufficient supply of wood, or even put up seed cane. The long drouth of the present Fall has enabled the planter to get all other work on the plantation easily off his hands, so that there has been no delay in beginning to grind whenever it was thought advisable to do so. The cane was slightly touched by the frost some three weeks ago, which checked its growth, and the warm days and cool nights have ripened it rapidly. Prudent planters always begin with the oldest stubble, because it is the first to ripen, and having a thicker rind than the more tender plant cane, it is first put through the mill, so that if any breakage in the machinery should occur, it may happen at the beginning of the rolling and be repaired in time. This year the stubble is very dry and hard, and accidents are likely to happen on many places, but the juice is very rich and easily boiled.

Last year the cane was green until late in November, and the early grinding in October gave only three-fourths of a hogshead to the arpent, so that many stopped grinding for a week or two.

There have been rains recently on the Teche and up Red River, but there is universal complaint of the drouth. The yield would be much improved by a rain if not followed by warm, sultry weather, which would give the cane a fresh growth. Were it not for the scarcity of water for the engine and cleaning up purposes about the sugar-house, planters would rather do without the rain than to take it with the risks of lowering the standard of the juice by subsequent warm weather.

The seed cane has been put up in good condition, and although a little rain is considered essential, yet along the river fogs and heavy dews have ameliorated the condition of the ricks and matlas, and in a measure answered the purposes of rain.

The first receipt of sugar last year was four hogsheads of yellow centrifugal, on the 9th of October, and sold for nine and three-eighths cents per pound. The first this year was a hogshead from L. Duchamp, of St. Martin, on the 5th of October, and sold for ten and five-eighth cents, and classed strictly fair.

The yield, as far as learned, is satisfactory in every section. Old stubble giving a hogshead and a half to the arpent on the coast, which is an unusually good turn out at the beginning.

The prospect is, from present indications, remarkably fine, not only for a good yield, but for good quality, good price and economy in taking off the crop. The increase of at least a cent a pound in the price is very encouraging to the planter. The yield of molasses will not be so great, but the quality will be better than usual.

GOLD FOR GERMANY.

From the Economist.

According to the Berlin Börsen Zeitung, the German Government is now considering an obstacle in the completion of its coinage reform, which only its happy position as the receiver of the French indemnity can have prevented its feeling sooner. This is the ways and means of providing a floating capital to carry out the operation. It is withdrawing silver and supplying the place of it with gold, but if the operation is to take place conveniently, considerable sums of gold ought to be coined in advance, and held in readiness for exchange for equivalent sums of silver. It should also be assumed that the silver will not be saleable as quickly as it may be advisable to withdraw it, but may have to be kept in hand for a larger or shorter period in order to a gradual sale. But to hold these stocks of gold and silver requires capital, and this the German Government, it seems, is beginning to feel, now that the indemnity has all been spent or distributed, and it is face to face with the toughest part of its work—the withdrawal of the one-thaler coinage. To raise the funds an issue of four and one-half per cent. Treasury bills is recommended by our Berlin contemporary, and it is not improbable that some such measure may be adopted. We do not see how it can be avoided if the statement is true that the Government has no available floating balance, and if it means to demonetise and withdraw the one-thaler coinage, thereby completing its great operation in a business way.

THE STATE-DAY CELEBRATIONS.

The Philadelphia Press says: The State-day celebrations are conspicuous in the records of the Exhibition as the best paying days of the Centennial period, the attendance of visitors on each occasion exceeding that of any other day of the week in which the celebration occurred. MONDAY, Nov. 6—P. M.

Speculation on the Stock Exchange as usual, on the eve of an important election, was exceedingly dull to-day. The fluctuations were slight and generally in the direction of lower prices, the tone of the market being rather weak. The sales amounted to only 41,458 shares, of which 9,500 were in Western Union, 7,900 in Ohio and Mississippi, 6,700 in Lake Shore, and 5,000 in St. Paul. Western Union opened and closed at 73⅛, the extremes having been 73⅜ and 73. Ohio and Mississippi fell off from 9¾ to 8⅞ and closed at 9¼. Lake Shore declined from 57⅛ to 56¾, St. Paul common from 24¾ to 24, preferred from 55⅜ to 55, Union Pacific from 61 to 60, Hannibal and St. Joseph preferred from 27 to 26½, Delaware, Lackawanna and Western from 74¼ to 73⅞, and Michigan Central from 46¼ to 45⅝. The weakness of the last named was due to the decreased earnings of the company for the month of October. Wabash rose from 7⅛ to 7⅝, but lost most of the improvement at the close. The remainder of the list was practically neglected.

To-morrow (election day) being a legal holiday all the Exchanges will remain closed until Wednesday morning, and business in financial and commercial circles will be suspended.

The money market was easy, and borrowers on call were well supplied at 2½@3 ₩ cent. throughout the day. Prime mercantile paper was quoted at 4½ to 6 ₩ cent. The national bank notes received for redemption at Washington to-day amounted to $700,000. The rates of domestic exchange on New-York to-day were: Savannah, buying, ⅜ off; selling, par to ¼ off; Charleston easy, 5-16 to par; Cincinnati quiet, 100 discount; St. Louis, 150 discount; New-Orleans, commercial, ⅜; bank ⅛; and Chicago, 25 discount.

The foreign advices report the London market higher for consols, which sold up to 96¼@96⅜ at the close. American securities closed at 103⅜@103½ for 1865s (old,) 109@109⅛ for 1867s, 108⅛ for 10-40s, and 106¾ for New 5s. Erie common fell off to 10⅜, and preferred to 17. The Bank of England lost £348,000 bullion on balance to-day. At Paris rentes rose to 105 25, and at Frankfort United States New 5s sold at 102⅝.

The sterling exchange market was weak and the leading drawers reduced their asking rates to $4 82 for bankers' 60-day bills and to $4 84 for demand, while actual business was done at $4 81½ and $4 83½.

The gold speculation was firm with sales alternately at 109¾ and 109⅞, the latter the closing quotation. Cash gold was easy and loaned at 1@2 ₩ cent. interest for carrying.

There was a very small business in Government bonds, and prices were about the same as on Saturday. New 1865s and 1867s, coupon, sold at 113 and 116 respectively. In railroad mortgages there was a sharp decline in Ohio and Mississipi seconds, sales of which were made at 53@49@53@52 at the close, against 57 bid on Saturday. Ohio and Mississippi consolidated sinking funds declined from 93 to 92, and do. consols were also a fraction lower, selling at 92. The general list was firm, and in some instances a fraction higher. Union Pacific land grants advanced to 101⅛. State bonds were steady on small dealings. District of Columbia 3.65s advanced from 69⅜ to 69⅝. Tennessee, old, sold at 47.

The export of domestic produce from the port of New-York to foreign ports for the week ending this date, were $4,583,349, against $5,815,233 for the corresponding week in 1875, and $5,161,241 in 1874. The total exports of produce from the port since Jan. 1, this year, were $230,219,313, against $217,311,227 for the corresponding period in 1875, and $250,751,839 in 1874.

Be at the polls early, lest some Tammany Hall repeater should cheat you of your vote. Devote some little time to watching whether illegal votes are cast from your house, or are offered in your own name or those of your friends. It will be the best morning's work you will have a chance of doing this year, to be able to contribute to the preservation of the purity of the ballot-box.

The Democratic scheme for circulating counterfeits of Republican tickets containing the names of the Democratic electors, should serve as a warning to every voter to compare his electoral ticket with the one printed elsewhere. Every trick which long experience of fraud and deception can suggest will be resorted to by the Democratic managers to cheat Republican voters. Let every voter see that he gets his ballots from the proper hands, if he has not already received them from the Central Committee.

Supporters of the Republican county ticket should be on their guard against the "pasters" sent out with the name of SMITH ELY, JR., appended to or included among the Republican nominees. Respectable Democrats who desire to break the tyranny of Tammany Hall should see to it that the names of DIX and PEABODY, at least, are inserted on their county ticket, in place of ELY and CALVIN. Better still, let them vote the entire Republican county ticket, and thus resent the insult of being asked to vote for a set of party hacks, some of whom are notorious rowdies and jobbers.

Mr. MORRISSEY rose up this morning with the remark, "Thank heaven that this betting business is over." When we remember that he is an earnest and conscientious gambler, we can understand how he must have outraged all the finer feelings of his nature by selling himself pools on Mr. TILDEN'S election, and thus making his beloved business a mere hollow mockery. During the last three weeks it is believed that he has thus bet with himself some $3,500,000, at frightful odds, on Mr. TILDEN'S election, and merely in order to create fuller confidence in that hypothetical event, and with the humiliating certainty that no matter whether he should win or lose, no money thereby would change hands. In the days when, like the sword of Sir Galahad, Mr. MORRISSEY'S he would have scorned to back himself to spar with his reflection in a mirror, and he cannot but feel that betting with himself is equally unworthy of a gambler who reverences his profession.

The death of Cardinal ANTONELLI closes the career of the greatest Roman politician of modern times. Born in 1806, conspicuous in politics during the pontificate of GREGORY XVI., and Prime Minister under PIUS IX., the life of this ambitious and indomitable statesman has embraced some of the most stirring periods in the history of the Church of Rome. Into his hands was committed the secular power of the Papacy. How unrelentingly and astutely he wielded it, the world has long since known. The Pontiff, gracious in demeanor and endeared to multitudes of people by his misfortunes and the vicissitudes which he has endured, has not been associated in the minds of most men with the wily, scheming, and haughty Cardinal who served his falling state so well. ANTONELLI has bravely fought against the resistless march of events. But he must have tasted the bitterness of death when the last vestige of the temporal power of the Holy See disappeared, and Rome became the capital of united Italy. There was, in these later days, less opportunity for the exercise of his commanding abilities; and, though he has in his time played many parts which caught the attention of the civilized world, it is not likely that his removal by death will have the slightest effect in any court of Europe outside of the Vatican.

THE WORK TO-DAY.

Orators and newspapers and managers have done their duty. The work to-day belongs to the individual citizen. He is not required to conduct an argument; the time for that is past. His task now is to vote, and to vote early, in order that he may be free to look after sluggish neighbors, to rally the hesitating and doubtful, to help the ill-informed, to watch for Democratic tricks and frauds, and to help the party of the Union as his judgment may dictate and as opportunity may require.

A concentration of effort is best for efficient attention to the various functions which to-day compose the citizen's duty. No man can afford to divide his interest or to attempt to supervise arrangements extending over a large field. He must choose the neighborhood with which he is most familiar, and stick there, or select a particular class within the range of his acquaintance, and make them the objects of his inquiry. His immediate neighbors should be visited. Next to voting himself, he must take care that the voters resident in his block have also been to the polls. They may propose to put off voting until later in the day. A little friendly solicitation may induce them to vote at once.

If the weather is unfavorable, there will be all the more need for this kind of effort. The Tammany crowd will be at the polls, regardless of rain. They will not keep aloof because the sun does not shine. Republicans are apt to be fastidious in this respect. Very little discomfort often serves as an excuse for not going to the polls. The energetic Republican will give special heed to this contingency. He will provide for it in his plans. He will remind the dilatory and indolent that the result in this State may turn upon a single vote, and that the least a man can do for his party or his country is to report at the voting-place, where alone his voice will count.

Does this suggestion tax your time too much? You have not leisure to conduct a canvass even in your own neighborhood, or influence to make general effort effectual? It is still possible for you to do something. The Charleston Democrats have hit upon a system which seems worth trying. It is called the "man-a-piece" system, and amounts to this: Each Democrat undertakes to "secure one voter, and see that the voter puts the right ticket in the box." Why should not New-York Republicans adopt this "man-a-piece" idea? It may not be practicable in the exact sense in which it is to be applied in Charleston, where the aim is to capture colored voters. But it is applicable here, so far as it charges each Republican with hunting up one vote in addition to his own.

The promise of a vote is not enough. In the poorer districts especially the Democrats will attempt in all possible ways to carry their point. The ignorant voter may be easily deceived. A spurious ticket may be foisted upon him. Names may be suppressed; wrong names may be substituted. The wide-awake Republican will look out for tickets of this sort. He may see not only that the promise of a vote is fulfilled, but that the ballot is what the voter intends it to be.

Illegal votes are another part of the Democratic game which the vigilant Republican will do his utmost to thwart. Getting good votes goes for little, if bad votes are allowed to slip in and counteract them. Every man may do something to prevent this form of fraud.

On this individual determination to do something almost everything depends. It is not possible to lay down a programme which shall cover all cases. The main thing is to make every intelligent Republican feel that in one way or another he can help the good cause. The details must be left to his sagacity. Only let him feel that he owes some time and exertion to the work of preserving the Union from the hands of its enemies. This debt he must pay to-day. For the time, his ordinary business pursuits are suspended. To-day he is required to give a good portion of thought to the business of the country, with which his private interests are very closely connected.

So far as it is possible to judge of the chances of the contest, they are greatly in favor of the Republicans. If the full Republican vote be cast, the confidence as to the result which the National and State Committees have expressed will, in all probability, be vindicated. The enemy, however, professes to be equally confident; and prudence dictates that every good citizen shall act on the supposition that there is no strength to spare. A grand Republican victory is undoubtedly within reach. But the price to be paid for it is downright hard work—the work not merely of the party organization, but of the private citizen, animated by strong convictions and working with the spirit which only a sense of duty can inspire.

TRADE ABROAD.

There are several indications that the improvement in trade, which has been remarked in the United States, has extended to foreign countries. This improvement has taken place in our country toward the close of an excited Presidential canvass, and in face of the uncertainties and doubts which necessarily attend that process. Abroad, the signs of revival, which were first noticed some time since, were interrupted by the apparent approach of war, which, during the second and part of the third week in October, produced something like a panic on the London Stock Exchange, and caused great perturbation in all the commercial and financial centres. This source of disturbance has, however, been pretty well removed, and the course of the foreign markets indicates that while tranquillity in the East is by no means surely counted on, and there is still some feverishness in the Austrian and German cities, the markets have, on the whole, got near their normal condition, and this is encouraging.

The last published returns of the British Board of Trade were for September, and showed some significant features. There was a slight decline in imports, as compared with September, 1875, but that month was one of unusually-extended food imports, and the comparison as to raw material and articles of general consumption showed a moderate increase. The comparison between the nine months of 1875 and the nine months of this year showed a slight increase in values. Prices being very low, however, there was a considerable increase in quantities. Of course, imports of raw materials and for general consumption are direct and valuable tests of general activity and prosperity. They grow only when the people of a country are doing well and expect to do better. This improvement in England is quite recent, but it is sufficiently decided, and has gone on long enough now, to make it reliable. Against this advance in imports, however, must be set off an undoubted decrease in exports, which amounts to about 10½ per cent. on September, 1875. This decline is partly apparent only, and is due for the most part to a fall in prices; but it shows that the improvement in trade indicated by a comparison of imports, though well-defined and likely to be permanent, is not yet very extensive. It is to be remarked, also, that the excess of imports over exports, regarded in England as a sure measurement of the depression of trade, has reached extraordinary limits. In 1868, it was considered remarkable that the surplus imports amounted to nearly £70,000,000; but in the first nine months of the current year the surplus imports had reached already £131,000,000, and at the same rate would attain £174,000,000 before the close of the year. It should be added, however, that this decline in the relative value of the exports of England is largely to be accounted for, not by a failure of that country to maintain itself in competition—though foreign competition has pressed hard in some directions—but principally by the absolute decline in consumption throughout the world.

Turning now to France, which, for many reasons, is more important as a commercial nation than it was before the German war and under the Bonapartist régime, we find singular evidences of solid and remarkably rapid progress. The most significant of these is the rate at which the revenues of the Government are enabling it to discharge the debt to the Bank of France. The arrangement had been made that the Government should reduce this indebtedness by 150,000,000 francs during the year 1877, by which the debt would be left on the 1st of January, 1878, at 300,000,000 francs, and then the bank was to resume specie payments. But on the 19th of October the Government had already advanced 112,000,000 francs, and it is by no means impossible—indeed, it is quite probable—that the entire 150,000,000 francs will be paid during the current year, leaving the bank free to resume the payment of specie at any time after the 1st of January next.

The returns of foreign trade are also extremely favorable. During the month of August the imports and exports combined showed five hundred and ninety-four millions. In September they were seven hundred and two millions. Contrary to the course of the preceding nine months, while the imports increased thirty-eight millions, the exports, which had been falling off, advanced sixty-six millions. This is the more important since the exports were less than the imports for nine months by about one hundred and twenty-six millions.

From these facts, and from those which we have from time to time noted in the trade of our own country, it is reasonably certain that the prospects of a revival of trade throughout the world are better than they have been for some while past. It is to be hoped that when the turning point is finally reached our own country will have the courage and the good sense to establish its currency on a sound basis, to revise its revenue laws so as to lighten unnecessary burdens, and to enter on the general competition of commerce with its energies and resources as nearly as possible unhampered.

THE HOODLUM.

San Francisco has the credit of originating the term "hoodlum," as applied to a class of idle, dissolute, and rowdy youth. A gang of bad boys, associated together in that city for purposes of plunder, finally organized a sort of secret society, with uncouth signals and a rude jargon of their own. They contrived a den, or series of dens, by burrowing under wharves and sidewalks, in which they hid their booty, held their orgies, and usually lodged. In their thieves' argot, their band was known as "hoodlum." A member in good standing was "hoodlum," the word being used as an adjective, rather than a substantive. But from this nonsensical phrase, which was purely an invention, and destitute of any real meaning, it has come to pass that a young ruffian is called a hoodlum; and we have actually heard an American Consul in distant foreign parts, of an irregular mode of life, called "a hoodlum." The grotesque word has, to a certain extent, taken root in our badly-used language. Unless the vicious class to which we are indebted for its invention, and which it describes, becomes reformed out of existence, there is danger that generations to come may waste learning and ingenuity in vain attempts to discover the root from which is derived a word which represents nothing but a boy's freak of fancy.

In the city where the hoodlum had birth the class is a cause of much anxiety. Californians appear to be unhappy unless they have a large social, political, or economical grievance. Sometimes it is a pending scheme of law, or a statute already on the books, or the Chinaman, or convict labor, or a question of water-works, or the hoodlum, which convulses society and keeps the newspapers busy. At the present moment the hoodlum and John Chinaman about equally divide public attention. Indeed, by a judicious turn of local argument, these two unsavory characters are made, as one may say, to interdepend. Rather, the hoodlum is thought to be an outgrowth of Mongolian immigration. The superficial observer, who knows that the San Francisco hoodlum finds his chief joy in stoning the Chinamen, or (guided by a consenting public sentiment) in bombarding the humble dwellings of the Chinese, may conclude that the hoodlum is called into existence because the Chinaman must have persecution. It is very likely that the more rabid anti-coolie people consider that the hoodlum is a survival of the fittest; but some of the witnesses before the Joint Congressional Committee on the Chinese, lately in session in San Francisco, go deeper beneath the surface of things. They say that the idle and vicious boys called hoodlums become idle, and, therefore, vicious, because the Chinese usurp the employment which youths would gladly engage in if they were permitted.

It is possible that this explanation of "the hoodlum problem," as our Pacific friends somewhat grandiloquently call that nuisance, is correct. But unfortunately, though the California Chinese evil is local, the hoodlum is not. The Chinaman is confined to a few distant States; the hoodlum pervades the continent. New-York has but one QUIMBO APPO; it has a swarm of bad boys, who commit robbery, arson, and murder. Very likely, the presence of the Chinaman in San Francisco, so offensively inoffensive is he, provokes the hoodlum to unusual and peculiar brutality. Otherwise, the American young ruffian, however called, does not appreciably vary in badness with the different degrees of latitude over which he is scattered. It is true, however, that these youths, wherever we find them, are vicious because they are idle. We prefer not to believe that they are idle because they are vicious. Wickedness may be, as some theologians aver, the state into which the natural man (or boy) most readily drifts. With a strange perversity, the men who are fiercest in their denunciations of the intruding Chinamen are most rigorous in their exclusion of boys from trades. In no State in the Union, probably, have there been more severe trade rules against the employment of apprentices than in California. With an unaccountable selfishness, men who are fathers of boys have legislated in such a way as to confine the trades to the hands of the smallest possible number of grown men, and to reduce the number of young learners to the lowest minimum. How true this is of New-York and other States may be learned from the condition of the youth.

Because boys cannot learn trades, they crowd law-offices, telegraph stations, dry-goods stores, and all other places where they may make themselves, to use that miserably suggestive phrase, "generally useful." Out of this class may sometimes come a few useful members of society. The mass of them grow up without acquiring any trade or profession which is of the least value to themselves or society. Though these may not be vicious, the chances are that they will reach maturity without securing any visible means of support. But what can they do? They must, as boys, find employment of some sort. The vague pursuit of being "generally useful" is almost all that is open to them. And when we consider how many boys have not the influence which is needed to push them into even this poor apology for an occupation, we must see how readily the ranks of the hoodlum are recruited. We may even leave out of account the class of boys who would sooner be idle than employed—sooner be vagrants than workers. It is still true that thousands of friendless little fellows are shut out of trades by trades unions, and that vagabondage is constantly reinforced by the selfish policy of grown men.

DYE AND DIET.

It is all very well for certain theologians to argue that man is a free agent, but they can hardly reconcile this dogma with the fact that he cannot select his own hair. Nature deals out the regulation supply of hair to each new infant without consulting in the slightest degree the taste of the infant or that of its parents. It thus happens that there is a vast amount of dissatisfaction among mankind in respect to hair. The light-haired sigh vainly for dark hair, and the dark-haired yearn for unattainable golden locks. Men whose moral nature imperatively demand curly hair are mocked with hair that is as hopelessly straight as the spine of a ritualistic clergyman; while the African, whose hair curls naturally and closely, longs for heaven as a place where crooked hair is made forever straight.

Of course, there are expedients by which sanguine natures try to modify and improve their hair, but they are, after all, vain and unsatisfactory. Those who hanker after golden hair, which just at present is the variety most ardently desired, can have their original hair bleached and painted, but the result is not worth the trouble and expense. The intelligent public is never deceived into confounding counterfeit hair with genuine golden hair, or into mistaking the blue-black dye that conceals the grizzled locks of an ancient beau for the work of nature. Moreover, the process of dyeing the hair is at best a risky one. A black ear, or a golden nose are not to be desired, and yet a slight accident with the dye-bottle may suddenly produce those startling phenomena. Occasionally, too, the dye penetrates to the brain of the user, and the result is a yellow-brained, or black-minded lunatic. Still more unsatisfactory is that hollow mockery, the wig. No matter how skillfully it may be made, its insincerity forces itself upon the notice of every observer. It is the invariable decision of those who have yielded to temptation in the shape of hair-dye that it is better to wear the hair we have than to dye with drugs that cannot satisfy the soul; and there is not a wig-wearer in existence who does not know in his secret heart that even the wild Indian of the Plains would view that wig with scorn and hatred, were it brought to the notice of his discriminating tomahawk.

Painful and hopeless as have hitherto been man's relations with his hair, a great discovery has just been made, which will not only enable us all to undergo a permanent change of hair, but which even places within reach of the intelligent leopard a sure and easy method of changing his spots. Like many other great discoveries, this was made by accident, and though it incidentally cost a number of lives, it will be held, in the estimation of most ladies, an extremely cheap discovery at the price.

A year ago the British ship Strathmore was wrecked on one of the Crozet Islands, a group of rocks that are situated below the bottom of the page in most geographies, and are, indeed, among the most southern bits of land on the globe. The survivors, who at first found themselves extremely unfortunate in being cast away upon a desolate island, were obliged to subsist exclusively upon penguin's eggs. The penguin, as all students of natural history know, is a large, fat bird, which sits on the extremity of its tail feathers, and divides its time between laying eggs and laying plans for the capture of fish. The eggs are not savory, for, though they are well planned in point of size, they are injudiciously mixed with more sulphuretted hydrogen than an epicure really needs. We can imagine with what wry faces the people of the Strathmore began to devour these eggs; but we cannot imagine the delight with which they recognized the remarkable effect wrought upon them by their unaccustomed diet. First, their complexions grew clear and fair, and then their brown, black, or gray hair slowly assumed a gorgeous golden tint. When, after six months of egg diet, they were rescued by a passing vessel, they resembled a theatrical company of blonde burlesquers, especially as their supply of clothing was remarkably scant. What is still more strange, their return to the English climate, and to English beef and beer, has made no alteration in the brilliancy of their locks, and there is no reason to doubt that they will remain blonde and golden for the rest of their happy lives.

With what joy will those who vainly sigh for golden hair learn that there is balm in the Crozet Islands in the shape of penguin's eggs. They can sail for that marvelous region, shipwreck themselves upon the magic rocks, and eat themselves into a state of bewildering beauty. That thousands of our countrywomen will demand to be sent to the Crozet Islands without delay is, of course, self-evident, but a little reflection will show that the desired end can be attained without the discomforts of a long voyage and a hazardous shipwreck.

What is the ingredient in penguin's eggs which colors the hair of those who eat them? No chemist will have the slightest hesitation in replying that it is the excessive amount of sulphur which they contain. Every one knows that sulphur possesses the property of bleaching vegetable fibres which are submitted to the action of its fumes, and it can easily be comprehended that the survivors of the Strathmore were thus transformed by the bleaching powers of the sulphur which, in the condition of sulphuretted hydrogen, was so conspicuously present in the penguin's eggs. Hence, those who wish to change themselves into yellow-haired blondes need not go to the Crozet Islands, neither need they live upon penguin eggs. All they have to do is to remain quietly at home and confine themselves to a diet consisting chiefly of sulphur. The use of sulphur baths, sulphur ointments, and smelling bottles containing sulphuretted hydrogen would doubtless hasten the desired effect, and it is possible that in the course of two or three months of persistent sulphurization even Gen. LOGAN could transform himself into a sunny-haired blonde whose beauty would inspire unusual confidence and esteem. Hereafter we shall hear no more of hair dye or hair-dyers, and the demand for sulphur will be so enormous as to task the resources of our best volcanoes to their utmost limits.

A CONVERTED PHILOSOPHER.

So many spiritual mediums have recently been detected in cheating and publicly exposed that the ghostly cause has seriously suffered. Of course, those who originally believed in FLINT'S teapot and SLADE'S slate will probably hold fast to their fantastic faith, but unless the spirits liberate SLADE from the House of Correction, or by some other equally skillful feat repair their damaged reputations, the number of future proselytes to Spiritualism will be extremely small.

In spite, however, of the bad repute into which spirits have fallen, a courageous German philosopher has just come to their aid. Herr HELLENBACH, a citizen of Vienna, who has for years enjoyed the local reputation of holding vaguer views as to the unconditioned and the unknowable than any other philosopher has ventured to hold, has written a book in which he sets forth the evidence which has convinced him of the truth of Spiritualism, and made him conscious that he has an immortal soul. This evidence is of the most conclusive and delightful character, and Herr HELLENBACH is so perfectly satisfied with it that he prefers it to the vaguest theories and the best tobacco with which German philosophy is acquainted.

Of course, there was a "medium" concerned in the conversion of Herr HELLENBACH. Fortunately for him, the medium was not a tiresome slate-writer, or an elderly priest of the sacred teapot, but a young and personally handsome American woman. This medium, whose name was LOTTIE FOWLER, went from London to Vienna expressly to convert the Viennese philosopher, and the evidence which she produced was so remarkable that it deserves to be set before our readers.

Having invited two or three philosophical friends to be present and to see fair play, Herr HELLENBACH tied the medium in a chair in the middle of a room, and placed over her head what he calls a garment, but what was, evidently, a meal-bag, which reached nearly to her feet. The devoted investigator then sat down at her feet, with his "back turned in such a way" that the back of his head rested on her knees. It is needless to say that Mrs. HELLENBACH was not present, and it is to be presumed that the investigator felt that he would trust to the discretion of those of his friends who were present. Still, there is no doubt that Herr HELLENBACH has acted rashly in publishing so minute a description of his method of investigation. He may rest assured that sooner or later it will come to the knowledge of his wife, who will thereupon convince him that, though his soul may be immortal, his hair is certainly mortal, besides being inserted much too loosely to bear any severe and prolonged strain.

Having placed himself in the pleasant, but indiscreet, position above described, Herr HELLENBACH immediately, and to his great surprise, began to experience novel sensations. Among them was, as he asserts, a "sensation as if somebody was running his finger nails from the nape of my neck up to the part in my hair." This immediately convinced him that there is another world, inhabited, to some extent, by the spirits of just barbers; and it may be presumed that, to those who find the testimony of St. PAUL unworthy of attention, this overwhelming evidence will be entirely conclusive. Another sensation was that of "two strong, and, once, of four delicate fingers," which touched Herr HELLENBACH'S temples. After this he could no longer doubt that he had an immortal soul, and so delighted was he with the clearness and force of the evidence that he "spoke out loudly, and in vain desired its repetition." He does not say whether the touch of the two strong or the four delicate fingers was most agreeable to him, but it is probable that he would have been contented with either. The spirits, however, not only declined to gratify him, but openly resented his attempt to dictate to them. "The third feeling," says Herr HELLENBACH, with mingled sadness and joy, "was a quite common and unpleasant one on the top of my head." He does not tell us whether it reminded him more of a poker than of a broom-handle, but there is no doubt that for a moment the terrible idea flashed upon him that Mrs. HELLENBACH had softly entered the room, and was expressing in "a common and unpleasant" way her opinion of her husband's method of investigating spiritual phenomena. Nevertheless, his fears were unfounded. The invisible poker or broom-handle was wielded solely by spiritual hands, and with the double object of warning him that he had been wanting in courtesy in sitting up and hailing for more "delicate fingers," and that there is a Great First Cause. Naturally, he was strangely convinced of both of these great truths. An elderly and inactive philosopher can be convinced of almost anything by banging him over the head in a dark room, where there are no policemen within call. Herr HELLENBACH promptly yielded to the unanswerable argument of the spirits, and he went forth from that séance a confirmed Spiritualist, buoyed up by the hope of meeting accomplished barbers in the future world, though, perhaps, a little saddened at the thought that, even after this life, the poker and the broom-stick do not wholly cease from troubling.

The results of HELLENBACH'S investigations are so completely satisfactory, that persons who are uncertain whether they have or have not immortal souls have only to read the record of his experience to have their doubts dispelled. It cannot be too strongly impressed upon them, however, that it is unnecessary for them to repeat the philosopher's experiments by personally leaning their heads on some attractive medium's lap, and waiting for novel sensations in their hair. Let them be contented with what Herr HELLENBACH has done in their behalf, and not rashly seek superfluous evidence at the risk of incurring the domestic difficulties which will sooner or later overtake that devoted investigator.

OBITUARY.

CARDINAL GIACOMO ANTONELLI.

A dispatch from Rome, received in London yesterday by Reuter's Telegram Company, announces the death of Cardinal Antonelli. Giacomo Antonelli was born at Sonnino, near Terracina, on April 2, 1806—a year famous in the annals of European history for Napoleon's king-making operations in Naples, Holland, and Westphalia, and the organization of the Confederation of the Rhine—during the famous pontificate of Pius VII. Antonelli's life embraced a period of no ordinary interest and difficulty in the history of the Church and in the relations of the Vatican with the temporal powers of Christendom, and he may fairly be said to have been trained from his boyhood to play the prominent part in Papal politics for which he was cast during the latter half of his life. Battling with the Revolution, sharing the exile of the Supreme Pontiff, manœuvring with Napoleon, defying the astute Cavour, snapping his fingers at Great Britain, now bullying and then lavishing his blandishments on Austria, and ruling the Pontifical States with a rod of iron, Antonelli was the man of all others of his day to stand in the breach in defense of the traditions of Rome. Educated at the famous Roman Seminary, he early distinguished himself by his attainments and the tenacity with which he clung to everything which the iconoclastic Liberals were bent upon destroying. Made a prelate at an unusually early age, Antonelli soon abandoned his purely religious avocations, and threw himself heart and soul into politics. During the Pontificate of Gregory XVI., he held various civil offices, and in 1845, the last year of Gregory's reign, he was appointed Minister of Finance. But, with the accession of Pio Nono to the Papal chair, Antonelli's ambition soon mastered for itself a far wider field of operations. On the 12th of June, 1847, Pius IX. presented him with his Cardinal's hat, and in the following year—a year of extraordinary responsibilities and difficulties—he made him his Prime Minister. Here was an opportunity for the exercise of Antonelli's Macchiavelian talent in supporting the tottering Papal throne in those days of revolution. Jesuit by nature and education, Ultramontanist at heart, if not by profession, he threw himself into the general ferment under the assumed guise of a Liberal, and for a while succeeded in blinding the eyes of the popular party to his real sentiments. So well did he play his part that he actually alarmed the Conservatives and reactionists, who compelled him to resign in favor of Mamiani. Mamiani soon gave place to Rossi, who was assassinated in the same year; and Antonelli, who had all along continued to be the chief adviser of his Pontifical master, openly resumed his office. In November came the flight of the Pope to Gaeta—planned, urged, and almost forcibly carried out by Antonelli; the Roman Republic, the days of Mazzini and Garibaldi, the siege and occupation of Rome by the French army, and the return of the Pope to his Capital on the 12th of April, 1850, under the protection of French bayonets. Antonelli assumed the office of Papal Secretary for Foreign Affairs, with non possumus his only political dictum, and at once set about counteracting Cavour's designs for a united Italy, while endeavoring, without absolutely seeming to do so, to curtail the really dictatorial power of Napoleon in Rome. But Orsini and the Carbonari frightened Napoleon into acquiescing in the designs of Cavour, and the dramatic scene in the condemned cell the night before Orsini suffered on the guillotine was but the text to the sermon of Solferino and Magenta. Antonelli's hopes were dashed, but not destroyed. The quadrilateral saved him for the time being, and he shook hands with Austria in spite of the loss of Umbria and the Marches through her desertion. But Cavour gave Antonelli no peace. He secretly encouraged Garibaldi's raid into Sicily, trusting that Napoleon would permit the guerrilla chieftain to accomplish what he forbade the statesman to attempt. Antonelli remonstrated, fumed, flustered, and threatened, and finally exerted the Papal influence to the utmost to enlist the priesthood of France in rebellious disobedience to the Empire. But Napoleon was too strong at home. The laurels of Solferino and Magenta were still green, and a zouave uniform was still the admiration of the Paris mob. Then came the unlooked-for death of Italy's master mind, the only man whom Antonelli really feared. Cavour dead, Italy was in tears, and the virtual wielder of the secular power of Rome again took heart—nay, was exultant. But Antonelli had reckoned without his host. He had not thought that little Piedmont would dare to send Cialdini to Gaeta in the Spring of 1861; and even after the fall of Gaeta he looked surely for something more than a mere early interruption of diplomatic relations between France and Italy, and to all appeals for unity reiterated, "Non possumus." Unable to control the march of events, Antonelli revenged himself on Europe by the constant issue of impotent Papal bulls and petulant remonstrances, and on the inhabitants of the Papal territory by introducing the most reactionary measures and organizing a thorough system of repression of all liberal ideas. He, however, had all the sympathy he could ask for from Spain, and succeeded in drawing the Concordat from Austria. Again his heart was wrung to the core by Austria's terrible disaster at Sadowa, and the consequent addition of Venice to the new kingdom of Italy. Then came the evacuation of Rome by the French in 1870, and the Pope's appeal to one and another of the great powers for protection; and, finally, the last drop in Antonelli's cup of bitterness—the formal entry into Rome, on Nov. 21, 1871, of the arch-heretic Italian King, Victor Emmanuel. Antonelli's life was attempted by an assassin in the year 1855, and he is said to have once exclaimed, in the bitterness of his heart, that he would rather have perished on that day than live to see Victor Emmanuel in Rome. Antonelli's precise position with regard to the calling of the famous Œcumenical Council, and the promulgation of the dogma of Papal infallibility, will probably never be known, unless Pius IX should think proper to divulge it.

Antonelli's personal appearance was in strange keeping with his character. Of attenuated frame and features, with a restless, searching gaze from under a frowning brow, with a peculiar expression playing around the mouth, which was once aptly described as being "satanic and yet winning;" cold, saturnine, and haughty in manner, harsh and unrelenting in disposition, he was hated by the populace and feared, while he was courted, by the aristocracy. Of his relations with his brother Cardinals, both lay and religious, it is sufficient to say that it would be difficult to mark any one of them as having been his friend. Nor was the friendship so long existing between him and the Pope thought to have been altogether one of love and regard. Among his associates there were many who admired the Cardinal, the stanch Catholic, and who highly appreciated his talents, but the man himself repelled any warmer feeling. Antonelli was enormously wealthy. His landed estates were of immense value, and included many of the theatres, hotels, and other public buildings in Rome. He also possessed a vast collection of treasures, such as minerals and gems of great value. None of the Papal advisers dressed so richly, none wore such fine laces or costly jewels. It has always been supposed that Antonelli had an eye to the Papal chair in the event of the frequently anticipated death of Pio Nono; but the old man, Mastei Ferreti, sick, aged, and infirm, has survived him.

The dispatch from Rome to the London Times of this morning says Cardinal Antonelli was transacting business with the Pope on Sunday when he was seized with a severe attack of gout in the chest. He was immediately carried to his apartments. He refused to believe that death was approaching. At last he consented to receive the sacrament, but was unable to swallow. He expired at 7:15 Monday morning, shortly after sending a message to the Pope, asking for his blessing, and imploring pardon for all the faults he might have committed during his administration.

Mgr. V. Vannutelli, Under Secretary of State, has been appointed successor, ad interim, of the late Cardinal.

THEODOR VON HEUGLIN.

A dispatch from London announces the death of Theodor Von Heuglin, the German traveler and zoologist. Baron Von Heuglin, commonly known as the "African traveler," though his wanderings were not confined to Africa, was born in Wurtemberg in 1824. He studied natural history and pharmacy and traveled extensively in Europe. In 1850 he explored Arabia Petræa, and two years afterward, having been appointed Secretary to the Austrian Consul at Khartoom, he accompanied him to Abyssinia. Afterward, while Consul, he explored the White Nile. In 1856 he went to Greece and the shores of Asia Minor, and in 1860 was at the head of the expedition in search of Edward Vogel, the traveler. In 1870 and 1871 he explored Spitzbergen and Nova Zembla. He was the author of several works on the East.

POLITICAL NOTES.

There are supposed to be 5,000 Greenbackers in Michigan.

Chairman Brigham, of the Michigan Republican State Committee, telegraphs that the canvass shows Michigan good for not less than 20,000 for Hayes and Wheeler.

The Buffalo Board of Trade has adopted resolutions recommending the ratification of the proposed constitutional amendments. Of course the members thus voted without regard to party.

Colorado papers print a letter from Hon. George W. McCrary, of Iowa, in which he demonstrates the validity of the election of the member of the next Congress in that State at the October election.

The New-Haven Journal says that in Connecticut the Democrats, since they have come into power, have shown their "economy" by increasing expenditures and stopping the payment of the State debt, and illustrated their devotion to "reform" by repealing the registry law and reviving certificate voting.

Democratic papers have been reporting that Senator B. K. Bruce, of Mississippi, was supporting Tilden. They didn't like Bruce, but they made a great parade of his change of heart. But Senator Bruce heard of the statement, and telegraphed his brother at Atchison, Kan., that he had never thought of supporting Tilden, but, on the contrary, was now canvassing Louisiana for Hayes and Wheeler.

The canvassers in Colorado have decided to throw out the votes cast "for Representative in Congress," they not indicating for which Congress they were intended. The vote therefore stands as follows: For the present Congress—Belford, Republican, 13,309; Patterson, Democrat, 12,308; Belford's majority, 1,001. For the Forty-fifth Congress—Belford, 13,328; Patterson, 12,444; Belford's majority, 884. The average Republican majority for Supreme Judges was 1,329.

THE ROTHSCHILDS AND PUBLIC CREDIT.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In the letter of Mr. Belmont published in the World of this morning, he inserts what purports to be an extract from a letter of the Messrs. Rothschilds, in which they state:

"We do not think the small decline that has occurred here in American stocks is attributable to any fears about your financial credit in case Tilden should be elected," &c.

Why did it occur to those gentlemen to make such a statement unless such fears had been whispered in the money markets of Europe? They do not appear to have made it in reply to the telegram published in the Post, to which Mr. Belmont refers, nor, indeed, to any publication emanating from this side of the Atlantic. It certainly did not occur to them that the probability of Republican success had reduced, or was likely to reduce, the value of American securities; and yet it was in some way suggested to their minds, as appears from this extract, that Democratic success might possibly so operate. Credit is sensitive, and when it becomes necessary to defend it against the effect of either real or imaginary causes, is it not the better course to steer quite clear of both?

A SCHEME FULL OF TROUBLE

THE GERMAN PRESS OUTRAGE.

MESSRS. WINGATE & CULLEN ON THE DEFENSIVE—A COMPARISON OF THEIR STATEMENTS WITH PREVIOUS LETTERS—ASSUMPTIONS TESTED BY FACTS.

The exposure in THE TIMES of Sunday of the conduct of certain Tammany Hall magnates in connection with the swindle of the German Press Society has caused some consternation among the followers of John Kelly, and even Tilden and his bureau of "nincompoops" are not entirely free from apprehension in the matter. Mr. Tilden and his followers appear, according to the showing of the books of the society, as having given some money, and promised more, for the purpose of instilling religious animosities among the German Roman Catholics, in order that the Democracy might triumph by reason of the sectarian prejudices and bigotry thus excited. Nearly every day the papers published by the society teemed with expressions of religious hatred, and contained articles appealing to the bigotry and intolerance of the lowest classes. Yet Mr. Tilden suffered his name to appear as one of the stockholders, and paid out his money—it is to be presumed unwillingly—for the purpose of helping along the unholy cause of awakening religious intolerance, just as he had before given his counsel and support in aid of those who were seeking to dismember the Union in a less despicable and more open manner. Even after the beginning of the present campaign, Mr. Tilden's committee furnished funds for the support of the papers and their advocacy of Mr. Tilden's claims, by the disreputable means already alluded to.

Among those who find fault with the article in THE TIMES, are Messrs. Wingate & Cullen, the private attorneys for John Kelly, and in whose office Kelly has a private office. The following is the text of a letter sent from Messrs. Wingate & Cullen:

The statements contained in the article, in this morning's TIMES, in relation to the German Press Society are so erroneous and unfair, that we feel constrained to request that you will permit us the use of your columns to reply to so much of it as affects us professionally by stating:

First—It appears by the Daily Register (and we presume by THE TIMES) of March 8 and 14 that the motion for the appointment of a Receiver in the case of Zeis vs. The German Press Society was on the calendar for argument on those days as No. 322. We presume, though we do not know, that it was argued on March 14. At all events, the Daily Register of Monday, March 20, (and we presume THE TIMES of March 19,) published the application as having been granted and the papers filed with the Clerk on Saturday, March 18. We were formally retained by the Receiver as his counsel on March 23, the formal order appointing him being entered the next day, but had been informally retained by him on either March 18 or 20. These dates dispose of the assertion that there was any conversation with the Judge or Mr. Kelly on March 21, "three days before the matter came up for argument before Judge Donohue," and show the erroneous character of the whole article.

Third—Our only connection with the matter was as counsel, and until we were requested by the Receiver to act for him in that capacity we never knew there was any litigation pending about the society. Mr. Kelly did not suggest that we should be selected as counsel, or communicate with us on the subject in any way, nor did he know we had been retained until some time afterward.

Fourth—The reasons why Dr. Rosenthal was appointed Receiver by Judge Donohue, to the best of our belief, were that he was a literary man, was familiar with the German language, and therefore peculiarly fitted to carry on the publications of which he was appointed Receiver during the period which would necessarily elapse before they could be sold. So far from Mr. Kelly having suggested the appointment, we are positive he did not, and that he did not know of it until after it was made, or even that such an application was pending.

Fifth—The advice we gave our client is necessarily confidential, and we must for that reason decline to discuss or disclose it even to defend ourselves. We can only say that it was given in accordance with our best judgment, in the hope of effecting a settlement which would, by preserving the property of the Society, avoiding an assessment upon the stockholders, and a ruinous litigation, and paying its creditors in full, protect all parties concerned, and particularly the smaller stockholders. We desire to state emphatically that it was not influenced in any way by either religion or politics. We further desire to state explicitly that we never received any suggestion in any shape or form from Mr. Kelly, or from any one on his behalf upon the subject, and that he had no more to do with the advice we gave, with our action in eventually withdrawing from the case, (which we did for reasons personal to ourselves,) than any other client for whom we then did business.

Sixth—The Receiver having desired to employ an expert to examine the books of the society, we recommended Mr. Carret, (whom we knew to be honest and thoroughly competent,) and he was employed by the Receiver at precisely the same salary as he had for a long time been paid by his previous employers. There was no intimation to him from any source that in his examination of the books and accounts he was to protect anybody, nor did he seek to do so.

Seventh—In conclusion, we would state that it was not until some time after we had entered upon the discharge of our duties that we learned that there had been anything wrong in the financial administration of the society, except that it was insolvent.

In fact, to the best of our belief, we did not discover until after we had declined to act further as counsel for the Receiver that there was any question as to the title of No. 7 Frankfort street. Certainly at the time of the sale we thought, and think that the Receiver did also, that they owned it in fee.

There are many other particulars in which the article in question misstates the facts, but which time and space will not allow us to answer. The above, however, are sufficient to show its entire unreliability.

WINGATE & CULLEN.

This letter in many respects evinces an eagerness to avoid the charges made worthy of Mr. Tilden himself or of his apologist Judge Sinnott. It is perhaps unfortunate for them that Messrs Wingate and Cullen should have chosen to take cudgels in that portion of the fight which can under no circumstances be considered theirs. But to take up the points in the above letter, seriatim, it may be observed:

First.—It is stated that certain dates dispose of "the assertion that there was any conversation with the Judge or Mr. Kelly on March 21." It is sufficient answer to this that no such assertion was made in the article complained of, nor was any such thing hinted at. Under these circumstances, Messrs. Wingate and Cullen are somewhat rash and premature in speaking about "the erroneous character of the whole article." Even, according to their own statement, they appear to have been retained by the Receiver before his appointment, or at least before the entry of the order of appointment—not a very usual proceeding, they will admit, in cases where the client is not absolutely certain of his appointment as Receiver.

Second.—As section 2 is omitted from the letter, it needs no reply.

Third.—In this section Messrs. Wingate & Cullen also deny, as far as they are concerned, what has not been charged. In regard to the latter portion of this section, that Mr. Kelly did not suggest them nor know that they had been retained "until some time afterward," the following letters may be interesting:

NO. 117 NASSAU STREET, }
March 15, 1876. }

DEAR SIR: Please call at my office on Monday morning next at 11 o'clock. I wish to see you on business of importance concerning yourself. Yours, &c.

JOHN KELLY,

To Dr. ROSENTHAL.

According to THE TIMES article, "on March 15, nine days before the Receiver's appointment, Kelly sent a letter to Rosenthal, informing the latter that he wished to see him on business of great importance to him. Rosenthal called on Kelly on March 19, and at the interview the latter told him that the Presse was insolvent, and would be put by 'Charley'—meaning Judge Donohue—into his hands as Receiver. He said the paper was to be edited in the interest of Tammany Hall and the Catholic Church, and that no exposure whatever of any frauds was to be made under any circumstances."

On March 20, Mr. Kelly's private secretary sent the Receiver the following note, which puts a different face on matters from what Messrs. Wingate & Cullen would desire:

MARCH, 20, 1876.

DEAR DOCTOR: Mr. Kelly has seen Judge Donohue, and wants you to call on him at once. He'll appoint you Receiver of the Presse. You are to engage Wingate as your counsel. All your instructions you'll receive from him, and must avoid seeing Mr. Kelly personally. Yours, truly,

No. 315 Lexington avenue. FRANK.

There is further evidence on this point, but no more is needed to show the mistake made by Messrs. Wingate & Cullen.

Fourth—The same remarks apply to section fourth of Messrs. Wingate & Cullen's letter. In regard to the reason for Rosenthal's appointment, the one suggested was given in THE TIMES article in addition to some others which, however, Messrs. Wingate & Cullen do not apparently desire to discuss.

Fifth—This section of the letter is very plausible, but happens to differ in every material respect from the Receiver's own statement. Mr. Kelly threatened to remove the Receiver from his position because the latter would expose the frauds in his endeavor to pay the honest claims of the society. Mr. Kelly, under this threat, asked the Receiver to resign from the control of the society's affairs, and, after the Receiver declined to do so, Messrs. Wingate & Cullen withdrew as counsel, just as was stated in the article. This is not denied by Messrs. Wingate & Cullen, who do not deny being on as intimate terms with John Kelly as was stated.

Sixth—In regard to the employment of Carret as an expert at the salary of $50 per week to examine the society's books, it is not denied that he is a brother-in-law of Mr. Wingate, the senior member of the firm of Wingate & Cullen, nor is it denied that he made a report such as the one given in THE TIMES, wherein he confessed his inability to make any statement of the society's affairs. These are the only material points. Mr. Wingate says Carret is an expert. His work, however, in this particular instance gave no indications of expertness, and the Receiver speaks of him as decidedly ignorant and incompetent. Mr. Wingate's letter recommending the employment of his brother-in-law is appended:

Dr. R. S. Rosenthal:

DEAR SIR: This will introduce to you Mr. Charles T. Carret, the gentleman I spoke to you about. I have explained to him what ought to be done. Truly yours, GEORGE W. WINGATE.

Seventh—This statement as to what Messrs. Wingate & Cullen learned is as immaterial as it is nonsensical, since they could not be expected to know anything about the matter until after they "had entered upon the discharge of" their duties, and no charge was made in THE TIMES that they had learned anything such as they state.

In conclusion, it may be said that it might possibly have been better for Messrs. Wingate & Cullen to have read THE TIMES' article before attempting to answer it; and, secondly, that when replying they should have endeavored to do so merely as to facts stated, and, furthermore, only as to facts within their knowledge. Additional proofs of the allegations in THE TIMES will be furnished at the proper time.

NEW-YORK, Sunday, Nov. 5, 1876.

GO EARLY TO THE POLLS.

The polls open at 6 in the morning and close at 4 in the afternoon. Don't wait till the afternoon, but go in the morning, early, and vote.

AMUSEMENTS.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Minnie Hauck has made a brilliant rentrée as Marguerite and Aïda, at Berlin.

The Porte-Saint-Martin, in Paris, is about to put in rehearsal "Titana," a new piece by MM. Sardon and Nus, the scene of which is laid in Russia.

Mr. Wills' play of "Nell Gwyn" will shortly be produced by Miss Fowler at the Royalty Theatre, in London.

The Paris Châtelet has revived the old fairy spectacle of the "Sept Châteaux du Diable," by MM. D'Ennery and Clairville.

M. Lecocq's new opera bouffe, erst called "Le Mikado," but now rechristened "Kosiki," has been brought out with decided success at the Paris Renaissance.

The revival of Chilpéric at the Théâtre de l'Opéra Bouffe, in Paris, has proved attractive. Hervé personates the hero with all his olden exuberance of gayety.

At the next Brighton Musical Festival, Mr. Kuhe will produce the sacred cantata by Mme. Sainton-Dolby, "The Legend of St. Dorothy," and Signor Verdi's "Requiem Mass."

Herr Hellmesberger, director of the Vienna Conservatoire, has just completed his fiftieth, and Herr Karl Eckert, chef d'orchestre of the Berlin Opera-house, his twenty-fifth, year of service.

Herr Wagner has visited Venice on his way to Bologna, where his opera, "Rienzi," will be produced in Italy for the first time; he will afterward go to Naples and Rome, and will pass the Winter at Sorrento.

The chief items of the first Leipzig Gewandhaus concert were the "Ruy Blas" overture, a violin concerto of Bruck, and the "Pastoral" Symphony. Mme. Peschka-Leutner sang songs by Reinecke and Spohr.

It is said that Mr. Edgar Bruce contemplates producing at Christmas, at the Globe Theatre in London, a new adaptation of Dickens' "Old Curiosity Shop," in which Miss Jennie Lee will appear as the Marchioness.

Mr. Gye's Concert Company in the English provinces, under the direction of Signor Vianesi, comprises Mlle. Albani, Mlle. Thalberg, Mlle. Gniotti, Signori Piazza, Scolara, Ghilberti, with Mlle. Gaul, pianist, and Mr. Radcliffe, flute.

The Brixton Choral Society, during the season will perform Dr. Bridge's "Mount Moriah," Mr. J. F. Barnett's "Good Shepherd," Mr. A. Sullivan's "Light of the World," Niels Gade's "Crusaders," Mr. Cowen's "Corsair," and Handel's "Esther."

September 20, was the one hundredth anniversary of the first performance of "Hamlet," in German, on the stage of a German theatre. It was then played at Hamburg for the first time. To celebrate the event, the play was given at Hamburg on the 20th of last month.

While awaiting the production of the "Boite au Lait," the Bouffes-Parisiens has given a little one-act operetta, entitled "Pierrette et Jacquot," with music by Offenbach, which served to introduce to the public two new recruits to this house, the Gregoire Sisters.

The Théâtre Lyrique, in Paris, has revived "Giralda" for Mlle. Singelee, who takes the title rôle. The charming music of Adolphe Adam, says a critic, has lost none of its freshness and brightness by the passage of years, and the opera was listened to with evident pleasure by an attentive audience.

A fortnight ago the letters were opened from candidates for the vacant seat of Félicien David at the French Academy of Fine Arts. It then appeared that Adolphe Blanc, Adrien Boieldieu, Boulanger, Membrée, Rever, Sémet, and Vogel were candidates, and that Gautier, Saint-Saëns, and Massenet were not.

Mme. Nillson has returned to Paris from her successful tour in Sweden, and will next visit Holland, under the direction of Herr Ullman. Her operatic performances in Vienna will occur in January next, and she will sing in German at the Imperial Opera-house in the "Hugenots," "Lohengrin," "Faust," "Mignon," and "Hamlet."

M. Duquesnel, of the Paris Odéon, has just engaged to take the difficult part of Albert in the "Abbé de l'Epée" of Bouilly, Mlle. Duguéret, whose forcible creation of the character in the Ballandé matinées, may be remembered. Albert is the deaf and dumb boy who gives to the Abbé the idea of his philanthropic and generous institution. The part was created at the Théâtre Français by Mme. Talma.

M. Carvalho, of the Paris Opera Comique, has engaged the sisters Lory, who formerly belonged to the Grand Opera, but more as a fiction than in reality. The elder, Henriette, made her début in November, 1874, as Zerline in "Don Juan," when the performances were being given at the Ventadour Theatre, but she has not played since then. She will now appear in the "Postillon de Lonjumeau." The younger sister married M. Paul Puget, who obtained the prize of Rome in 1873 with his cantata of "Mazeppa." She was also engaged by M. Halanzier, but never set her foot on the stage.

From all quarters of Germany comes news of the forthcoming commencement of the Winter classical concerts. At Berlin there will be the Royal Orchestra, the Bilse concerts, the Berlin Symphony Chapel, and the Singing School. The Gewandhaus concerts at Leipzig began last Sunday week, Johann Becker's Florentine prize quartet being the novelty. A prize of £50 is offered for the best quartet by Herr Becker, of Mannheim, and Brahms and Volkmann are the judges. The Cologne Gürzenich concerts begin at once, and the concerts of the Vienna Philharmonic Society were to commence in the course of this month.

WHY YOU SHOULD VOTE EARLY.

When you have looked over your tickets, go at once to the poll. Polls open at 6 in the morning. Don't postpone voting. Recollect that you cast your votes to-day for President of the United States.

THE ISSUE IN BROOKLYN.

TACTICS OF THE RING DEMOCRACY.

M'LAUGHLIN'S DISTRICT ATTORNEY AIDING HIS MASTER—A SHARP REBUKE FROM UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY TENNEY—AN EFFORT TO INFLUENCE THE MEMBERS OF PLYMOUTH CHURCH IN FAVOR OF THE RING CANDIDATE FOR SURROGATE.

Every voter in Brooklyn, without distinction of party, who wishes for the overthrow of the corrupt Democratic Ring and the lightening of the terrible load of taxation which now weighs on the people, crushing even heavy capitalists and destroying all busines activity, should go to the polls early this morning, and wait until he has had an opportunity to deposit his ballot. The Ring men, energetic all through the campaign, have been doubly active during the past few days. Their efforts have been specially directed toward securing the Board of Aldermen, and to attain this end they have not hesitated to use the most disreputable means. In accordance with a programme already mapped out, Winchester Britton, the Ring District Attorney, made an attempt to intimidate voters on Saturday, in a letter addressed to the Superintendent of Police. Another effort in the same direction was made by the same superserviceable official yesterday. Assistant United States District Attorney Hull had occasion to say to a man who was arrested for illegal registration, that if he attempted to vote he would be arrested. The person arrested—a man named Conners—was allowed out on bail, and it was while attending to the bail bond that Mr. Hull warned the man not to vote. The warning was made the pretext of an insolent letter to United States District Attorney Tenney by Britton, in which the latter says that a man may vote whether he be an illegal voter or not if he swear in his vote. In another letter by Britton to the Police Board, ingeniously worded, policemen are constituted the judges of when a challenge is made for malicious purpose, and are, in fact, incited to prevent challenging. United States District Attorney Tenney has sent the following reply to Britton, in which he declares that persons attempting to vote illegally will not be permitted to cast their ballots:

BROOKLYN, Nov. 6, 1876.

Hon. Winchester Britton, District Attorney Kings County:

DEAR SIR: Acknowledging the receipt of your letter of this date in the case of Edward Conners, arrested on a charge of illegal registration, would say, the facts are these: Conners had registered in the Fourth Election District in the Seventh Ward, as a person residing at No. 411 Kent avenue. Conners in fact resided, and still resides, at No. 9 Emmett street, Sixth Ward. An officer visited this last place this morning for the purpose of arresting him, but was unable to do so, as he states, by reason of the opposition of the occupants of Conners' apartments. Subsequently Conners with his counsel and bail came to this office and stated he desired to give bail. and the bail offered was accepted, I am informed that my assistant stated to the counsel for the prisoner that this seemed to be a clear case of colonization, and that if it was such it would be the duty of the Deputy Marshal to re-arrest the prisoner if he should attempt to vote on election day. So far from this having been an attempt at intimidation, it was, as a matter of course, information given to the prisoner's counsel to the end that he might properly advise his client.

The uniform interpretation of the United States statutes has been and is, that when a Deputy Marshal is satisfied that a person is attempting to vote illegally, it is his duty to arrest him before he deposits his ballot. You seem to assume the contrary in your letter to me. Your interpretation of the law will not be accepted or acted upon by the United States officials. Very respectfully,

ASA W. TENNEY,
United States District Attorney.

As an illustration of the boldness of the Ring, the following case of deliberate falsification may be taken. In the Eagle of last evening it was editorially stated that Mr. Charles Holt had accused Aldermen Rowley of selling his vote in the Board of Aldermen. The Eagle's words are as follows:

"Mr. Charles Holt is a well-known citizen. He is one of Mr. Rowley's constituents, and he is among those who do not think that Mr. Rowley is worthy of re-election. Mr. Holt has stated, at a public meeting in the ward, that Alderman Rowley received a consideration of $800 for his vote and influence in favor of what was known as the Penitentiary shoe contract. Mr. Holt challenged Rowley to deny it."

Mr. Holt sends the following letter to THE TIMES for publication:

In reference to remarks in the Eagle of this evening, 6th inst., concerning Alderman Rowley and myself, I beg leave to say that it is not true that I am "among those who do not think that Mr. Rowley is worthy of re-election," for I shall vote for him and do all I can to secure his election. It is not true that I have "stated in a public meeting in the ward, that Alderman Rowley received a consideration of $800 for his vote and influence in favor of what was known as the Penetentiary shoe contract." I never spoke at a public political meeting of the ward on this or any other subject. The whole statement is false from beginning to end as far as I am concerned.

CHARLES HOLT,
No. 93 Cambridge place.

The letter was read last night at a large meeting of Mr. Rowley's constituents in the Morgan Wigwam, Mr. Charles Holt being seated on the platform while it was being read. Another deliberate falsification found currency in the same paper in reference to Mr. Walter L. Livingston, the Republican nominee for Surrogate, to the effect that a circular had been issued, asking Catholics to vote for him because he was a Catholic. This Mr. Livingstone denies in a card to the Eagle. The gentleman in question, who flung back in Boss McLaughlin's face a nomination for Controller, accompanied with insulting conditions, belongs to one of the oldest American families in Brooklyn, and wishes it to be distinctly understood that he desires no man's vote who will vote for him merely because he is a Catholic. The desperate devices of the Ring betray their fear of an honest vote. A circular has been sent to the houses of voters who are known to attend Plymouth Church, setting forth that Mr. ——, "one of Mr. Beecher's counsel" in the great trial, thinks that Mr. Daily ought to be elected Surrogate and that Hon. —— ——, also "one of Mr. Beecher's counsel," holds the same view.

At a meeting in the Democratic Committee rooms yesterday afternoon money was distributed to the ward workers. Aside from all the money which has already been spent in the odd wards, $1,000 was sent to each of the following wards: Seventh, Eleventh, Seventeenth, and Twenty-first, for use to-day. In the matter of tickets every possible political trick has been resorted to by the Democrats. Republicans and Independent Democrats can only insure themselves against voting for candidates for whom they do not intend to vote by carefully examining their ballots.

The notorious demonstration last Sunday morning which the Ring men called a torch-light procession, has cost Tilden a great many votes. The following appeal, hastily gotten up by a number of citizens disgusted with Tilden's conduct, was largely circulated in Brooklyn yesterday:

CITIZENS OF BROOKLYN: Samuel J. Tilden is a candidate for the most exalted position in the gift of the American people. His chief claim upon the people, as urged by his friends, is that he is a great reformer. Now look on this picture: On Saturday the Great Reformer came to Brooklyn, escorted by that other Great Reformer, William A. Fowler, and was received by those distinguished reformers, Kingsley, Keency and Murphy, and at 3 o'clock on Sunday morning, this aspirant for the seat of Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln, stood in our streets, haranguing a motley crowd of half-drunken men and boys, marshalled before him by the distinguished Brooklyn men above mentioned.

Can it be possible that a majority of the voters of this City of schools and churches, will aid in elevating to the Presidency a man who would stoop to such means!

The German Independent Citizens' Association of the Third Ward met last evening at No. 462 Fulton avenue, and considered certain charges made by the Ring organ against Capt. William F. Aitken, the Republican and Reform candidate for Alderman. A vote of confidence in Mr. Aitken was passed, and those who circulated the unfounded accusations against him were severely censured.

VOTE WITHOUT DELAY.

Vote without delay this morning. You may lose your vote by waiting till the afternoon. The polls close at 4 o'clock, and your polling-place may be crowded during the last hours. Go early, and then you can vote without inconvenience.

THE FEMALE PEDESTRIANS.

The two women, Marshall and Van Hillern, are getting along finely in their walking match at the Central Park Garden. Van Hillern accomplished fifty miles at 12:26:30 yesterday. At the end of the thirty-fourth mile she stopped for breakfast, occupying 12m. 15s. She retired at 12:26:36, and went to bed, where she remained till 2:43 P. M., when she returned and walked till 9:51:40, and then retired to bed again, having accomplished 69¼ miles. Marshall walked from the start till she had made sixty-three miles, only stopping twice, each time about ten minutes. She retired at 10:32 last night, having made seventy-five miles. She has changed her shoes twice during her walk, her feet having swelled a great deal.

THE BLACK HILLS EXPEDITION.

In the Spring of 1875 the Government sent an exploring expedition to the Black Hills for the purpose of thoroughly surveying them and reporting on their topography, geological formation, and mineral wealth. This expedition was under the charge of Prof. Walter P. Jenney, of Massachusetts, and its labors occupied the whole Summer. The results of these labors are to be embodied in a report, which will be laid before the present Congress, and much of the final work is now in progress at the School of Mines, Columbia College. There may be seen the only map of this Black Hills region ever made, and although this is as yet in an unfinished condition, the outlines are all executed, and much valuable information may be obtained from it.

The topographical portion of the expedition was under the charge of Dr. M. T. McGillycuddy and Mr. Emil Mahlo, late of the United States Northern Boundary Survey. Mr. Mahlo is now employed on the map, which is a model of beautiful execution. Up to this time the Black Hills had always been laid down on every chart as a blank space, marked "unexplored." Hereafter, thanks to the work of this party, there will be no difficulty in making a way through this wonderful country.

Capt. Tuttle, United States Navy, had charge of the astronomical branch of the survey, and by his observations the Black Hills lie between 43° 15' and 45° north latitude, and between 103° and 104° 35 longitude west from Greenwich. Their general outline is that of a human ear, and, singularly enough, this outline is distinctly traced by a most remarkable geological formation. All around the wild, mountainous upland runs a valley, which from its color, is called Red Valley. This singular depression marks the outline as unerringly as if dug out for the purpose by some vanished race. It varies in width from a quarter of a mile to two miles; the ends, which slope gently, are clothed with green, but the bottom is everywhere of red clay, and this has given the valley its name. On the north and south the Black Hills have also another natural boundary, as they lie between the north and south forks of the Cheyenne. The northernmost of these rivers is called by the old settlers "Belle Fourche," or Beautiful Fork, because of the extraordinary beauty of the pellucid stream, which winds its way through overhanging cliffs, and past soft prairies. Geographically the Black Hills lie across the boundaries between Wyoming and Dakota Territories, that is, the 104th degree of longitude, which divides them about the middle. Beyond the Red Valley the Black Hills rise in a series of abrupt acclivities, which are cut by deep gulches in many places, resembling in their formation the outspread fingers of a hand. In the streams which run through these gulches the gold is found, and here is another singular fact about this remarkable region, and that is, that is, that these wild mountain torrents, which come tearing down from the heights above, swollen at times to great streams, make their way ever downward and out across the Red Valley and then, in the prairies beyond, utterly vanish, being all drunk up by the thirsty soil, except in the Spring when, swollen by the melting snows, they flow quite across to the forks of the Cheyenne.

Journeying still inward, the land rises always higher and higher, until it towers up into mountain peaks. The highest of these is Harney's Peak, which rises to an attitute of 7,403 feet above the level of the sea. The next is Crooke's Tower, a very singular granite rock, which shoots up 7,323 feet. Another imposing mountain is Terry's Peak, 7,233 feet high, which rises in precipitous heights from the slopes below. Still another lofty eminence, Custer's Peak, has an altitude of 6,967 feet. Of course, all these names were given by the expedition, who thus honored the brave officers who have risked their lives in this wild country. On the western side of the hills is a lofty point called Ingan Kara, an old land-mark known for many years to all the settlers of this region, and which bears still the name bestowed upon it in the days of the Indians. All the sides and slopes of the hills are clothed with pine trees, and these, looking back at a distance, have given them their appellation—the Black Hills. They abound in mountain antelope and bears, which render the territory valuable to the Indians. It is a rich hunting-ground to them; hence they are reluctant to part with it.

The geological portion of the expedition was under the charge of Mr. Harvey Newton, who has prepared careful surveys for illustration. The formation was found to be everywhere granite at its highest points; underlying this was lime-stone, in some places curiously cut by the action of water; below this again sand-stone, while lowest of all was the red clay, which appears principally in the wonderful valley above mentioned.

A large number of photographs were also taken, and these will copiously illustrate the region which, up to this time, has been an absolute terra incognita, except to the roving bands of Indians, and of late, in some small degree, to the hardy miners, who have gone to these rocky fastnesses in search of a new El Dorado.

DON'T POSTPONE VOTING.

Don't postpone your voting till the afternoon. The polls open at 6 in the morning. Go early. Go before breakfast or immediately after it. See that you have the right tickets.

WHAT THEY BELIEVE IN OHIO.

The Columbus (Ohio) State Journal of the 1st inst. says: "We are in receipt of many letters from different States asking our 'private personal opinion' as to the prospects in Ohio and Indiana for November. We propose to give that opinion here, publicly. It is that Hayes will carry Ohio by a largely increased majority over the largest Republican majority on the State ticket in October. This opinion is shared 'privately and personally' by every well-informed Republican to whom we have access. As to Indiana, we have late and authentic 'private and personal' information of the most reliable character. It is that Hayes will carry that State by a decided majority. We may as well say in this connection that the best informed men of New-York have within a few weeks—we might say days—come to the decided conclusion that nothing save the most outrageous frauds in New-York City and Brooklyn can prevent Hayes from carrying New-York, and our friends are confident that their arrangements are so perfect as to make any considerable fraudulent vote impossible. They expect to go into New-York with sufficient majority from the rural districts to insure the State to Hayes and Wheeler. Pennsylvania is as safe as Ohio. Nearly the whole Pacific slope will go for Hayes. And we may now hope to break in upon the solid South. This is neither blowing nor crowing—but solid fact. We leave the 'confidence' business to John G. Thompson and his organs."

EXTRADITION WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

TORONTO, Nov. 6.—In Common Law Chambers on Saturday, in the case of Maraine Smith, a Detroit, Mich., murderer, who is held for a decision on the extradition question, Mr. Bethune, appearing for the Minister of Justice, read a telegram from Lord Carnarvon, from which it appears that there is a probability, from the present state of the negotiations between Great Britain and the United States, that the Extradition treaty between the two countries is about to be, at least temporarily, resumed.

UNIVERSITY OF THE CITY OF NEW-YORK.

At an annual meeting of the University of the City of New-York held yesterday, the following gentlemen were elected, as one class of the Council, to hold office for four years: Hon. William B. Maclay, John Taylor Johnston, Hon. Samuel J. Tilden, D. B. St. John Roosa, M. D., Rev. John Hall, D. D., S. O. Vanderpoel, M. D., D. Willis James, Rev. Charles F. Deems, D. D.

THE POLICE ELECTION ARRANGEMENTS.

The Police arrangements for to-day were completed last evening by Superintendent Walling. It was decided to place two patrolmen at each polling place throughout the city, but there will be no massing of men at any point except Police Head-quarters, where the Mounted Squad and the Broadway Squad will remain on reserve during the day. Each detective on duty in the vicinity of the polls will have the services of two or three officers at his disposal, and the Inspectors were directed to make other minor arrangements which they may deem requisite for the proper preservation of the peace and the carrying out of the Election laws.

RECORD OF RECENT VOTES.

At a vote taken at the College of Physicians and Surgeons yesterday the result was: Hayes, 325; Tilden, 75.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

SOUTHERN SCHOOL-BOOKS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Referring to your issue of the 27th ult., wherein you mention the existence of a new School History of the United States in use in the public schools of Virginia and other Southern States, allow me to invite your attention to what I have supposed to be generally known, viz., that in all the Southern States, as fast as reclaimed by Democrats, school-books introduced by Northern publishers are driven out, and school-books prepared in the South, or in the Southern interest, substituted. This work has been going on rapidly. Northern school-books have been the subject of constant discussion by the Southern Democratic press. In fact, while it has attracted little public attention, the introduction of Northern school-books to Southern schools has been the subject of perpetual criticism and complaint on the part of Southern Democrats, through their press, ever since reconstruction. Not only have they denounced the system of public schools devised by Republicans, but Northern school-books have been especially denounced, because Northern. And this without cause, for I have myself examined the books objected to and found the objections utterly groundless. The fact is, the South hates the North, Puritans and Puritanism, and all that these terms involve. They have a civilization and theories peculiarly their own. In these they are educating their youth, so that to-day the hatred of the Government, the flag, and the sentiments of freedom entertained in the North, is a thousandfold more intense than before or during the war.

And not only are Northern school books being excluded from Southern schools and Southern youth, but war is being also waged on Northern religious literature. This is to be driven out next. Evidently the plan of the Southern Democratic leaders is to isolate the Southern masses and keep them as ignorant of the Northern civilization, and views, and enterprise, as was ever the center of Africa. Indeed the Southern Democratic press teaches this exclusiveness and this hatred of everything Northern.

Perhaps you and your readers are already well aware of the active exclusion of Northern school-books from the South, and the substitution of Southern publications. Your editorial of Friday conveyed to me the impression of your surprise at the fact stated. Hence this note. If my statements are questioned, I have Democratic papers in great numbers denouncing not only Northern school-books, but teachers from the North as questionable characters and spies. It would please me only too well to have Northern Democrats call for these papers.

The efficient service your paper has rendered to the cause of good government leads me to address you upon a subject which has not attained general publicity, but which deeply concerns our tax-payers. The College of the City of New-York (late Free Academy) has, as an educational institution, done good work for twenty-five years. It is a heavy tax upon our citizens, but will merit continued support if it maintains its efficiency. The immediate supervision of its affairs is intrusted by the Board of Education to a sub-committee of nine, called the Executive Committee of the College. The President of the college is ex officio a member of the committee. This committee, consisting chiefly of business men, much occupied with personal engagements, feels, doubtless, that it is greatly aided in its labors by the advice and suggestions of the college President.

Under ordinary circumstances we should be expected perhaps to have entire confidence in the officers and instructors of the college. But if their present purpose is leading any of them to unite for selfish ends, it becomes our duty to inquire whether the action they propose is likely to promote the educational interests of the City. The recent course of the Executive Committee in dismissing from the college two worthy tutors, who have honorably served for over ten and seventeen years, respectively, was a great surprise, we believe, to all persons familiar with the affairs of the institution, except those directly or indirectly responsible for the dismissal. The action taken was the more noticeable because it occurred two weeks subsequently to a resolution of the board limiting the terms of tutors to Sept. 1, 1878, after which date, according to the resolution, their appointment is to be renewable year by year, but only upon the joint recommendation of the college President and Executive Committee.

The right to remove the tutors it is insisted, we believe, rested with the committee, subject to the approval of the board, under a pre-existing rule and the matter of their removal having been referred back to the committee for further report, is to come again for consideration before the board. We have reason to fear that the immediate dismissal of tutors has been found to answer a purpose which can hardly be commended. While it may not increase the efficiency of the college, new men of inferior type may be appointed at very low salaries. The number of tutors may be thus increased without additional expenditure, while the labors of certain Professors will be lightened, and their positions rendered more and more ornamental. The salaries of officers and professors retained are likely to be continued at their present liberal figures. To give an appearance of economy, resort will probably be had to a so-called consolidation of professorships, by means of which favorites will remain in office and others be removed.

At each step of a movement involving radical changes, and having for its object the establishment of an aristocratic system, reasons and excuses must be duly provided. If we are right in our conjecture, these will not be wanting, but will appear in winning and plausible form. What, however, will the end be? Will it have placed the College upon a higher plane, or a lower one? Will the students be trained by able and conscientious instructors, or will they have become merely part of an inferior educational arrangement conducted for the benefit of a few officers and Professors? We we know these are serious words, but believe they were never more needed than now. We have only pointed at what might well be discussed at much greater length. We believe that if the Legislature of the State, or other competent authority, would institute a critical, searching and faithful inquiry into the affairs of the College, the result would be of great benefit to the institution.

"WHAT OUR CHURCHES COST US."

The publishers of Scribner's Monthly announce an article in Scribner under the above title, which will be of interest in relation to the recent discussion as to church debts. The theory upon which large churches are built is, that the expense for each sitting in a large church, even with a considerable debt, is less per capita than in a small church without any debt at all. For instance, the expenses of a church in this City seating 500 people will be about $15,000 a year, or $30 per sitting. The cost of running a church that will seat 2,000 persons, with a funded debt of $100,000, will be about $22,000 a year, or only $10 or $12 a sitting, or about twenty-five cents for each person for each Sabbath in the year.

We are led to this discussion by a notice that the Presbyterian Memorial Church of New-York, Rev. Dr. Robinson, has just paid off $100,000 of its debt, and proposes to carry permanently the remaining $100,000, charging up the interest ($7,000 a year) to running expenses. As the building is designed to seat nearly 2,000 people, if filled to its utmost capacity, the charge for interest to each person would be less than $4 a year, or about seven cents a Sunday. It is worthy of note that all the pew-owners in this church have surrendered their title to their pews, so that there is now no privileged class, and that the latest comer enjoys all the privileges and immunities of those who have borne the heaviest burdens. The pastor himself has contributed over $25,000 to the church building from the proceeds of his hymn and tune-books, which have had so wide a popularity in churches of every name.

OF THE VARIOUS PROCESSES of manufacture and exchange which make up the life of commerce, some are of direct value and benefit to the community, some are merely the agencies of evil. We entitle the merchant or manufacturer who deals in products of essential importance a public benefactor. B. T. BABBITT is a notable example, for his goods have ruled the marts and homes of the land. His acme of achievement, however, is found in his "BABY SOAP," an article for the toilet and bath beyond comparison, and one destined to add to his reputation even more than a very successful past.—Advertisement.

From Simeon Marquart, Esq., of Owego, N. Y.

Some years since I was attacked with a severe and distressing cough, the long continuance of which much alarmed me. From what I had heard of WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY I concluded to give that preparation a trial, which I did, and by its use obtained immediate and permanent relief. Again about five years ago I was taken with a severe hacking cough, accompanied with pain in the chest and side, tickling in the throat, &c., which so reduced my health and strength as to unfit me for attending to my ordinary business. I applied to well-known physicians, and used their prescriptions without any perceptible benefit; when, after having been confined to my room for several months, I again had recourse to WISTAR'S BALSAM, and to my great joy found, as before, immediate relief, and two bottles restored me to perfect health.

Plain Talk.—There is a preservative principle in SOZODONT that effectually preserves the teeth from decay. Chemists pronounce it wholesome. Rich and poor indorse it. DEIRDRE.

POLITICAL.

TO THE PUBLIC.

The attention of voters is urgently called to the important bearing which the two pending amendments to the State Constitution have upon the commercial and general welfare of this City and State.

The continuance of commercial supremacy to the City of New-York is largely dependent upon an economical and honest management of the canals of the State, which can only be permanently insured by a change in the organic law, making extravagance and corruption impracticable.

The amendment relating to the canals provides for such a change, and that relating to the prisons is of the same general tenor. The questions involved are so well understood that we do not deem it necessary to particularize, but desire to admonish all voters, irrespective of party, to guard against canceled ballots, prepared with a view to defeat the amendments, and to provide themselves with ballots FOR THE AMENDMENTS.
